It is little known and perhaps less understood that many rural local education authorities, based on the remaining county council areas, still have county farm estates. In my authority in Gloucestershire, I have pushed for those estates to be used to provide food for our children. For far too long, we have centralised the food chain. Now, there is a big demand for a return to local production, and county farm estates could help to develop that. Of course, that is difficult, because we have grown used to obtaining produce, whether it be bananas, oranges or other foods, at the drop of a hat. However, our farms can grow many vegetables that could be provided to children. Dare I say that we could understand and rediscover seasonality? Many of us grew up with that, but it is no longer part of people's dietary habits. People are now supposed to have everything whenever they want it.

Choice and the availability of provision are important issues that we cannot underestimate. There is something of a secret garden about the provision of food through the school meals service. I learned about that through my involvement with the Meat and Livestock Commission, which rightly argued with local education authorities and contractors for the restoration of beef to school menus. I tried to do what I could to help that process. I was involved because of my association with agriculture, and my involvement was interesting because it must have been the first time that a long-standing vegetarian had argued for the reintroduction of beef. Life is full of interesting asides. Some LEAs have been a bit negative and restrictive in their unwillingness to take beef back on to the menu. They should give children the choice. We should advertise the fact that our beef is the safest in the world wherever we can.

I am glad that the hon. Member for Guildford (Mr. St. Aubyn) has just returned. I concurred with much of what he said, but I disagreed about the suggested advantages of contractualisation and of producing food in one place for distribution elsewhere. The problem is that the facility is often lost to the community.

School canteens can be a useful community facility. If we have pre-school and after-school provision, those facilities—I do not like the word "canteen"—could be important in providing children with meals that would not otherwise be available. Those facilities are so important to rural areas, because they are the main areas that have lost them. That has led to two problems. First, there is less choice, because the meals that are brought in are not as varied as they could be. Secondly and more particularly, there are problems with free school meals, which we have often discussed. My experience is that it is even more difficult now to prevent segregation. It is blatantly obvious which children receive free school meals. If there is only cold provision, it is clear that the kids with the sandwiches laid before them are the ones who receive free school meals. That is absolutely awful.

Mr. St. Aubyn: Does the hon. Gentleman not recognise that if village schools had had to find the capital required to upgrade their school kitchens to meet modern requirements, it would have been too great a hurdle for some of them? I suppose that if those schools could not provide any meals, they would ultimately have had to close. The hon. Gentleman has described the disadvantages, but the current more efficient and economic approach means that there is still an option to have a village school.

Mr. Drew: I do not disagree entirely, but I am arguing that school canteens should not have been the first sacrifice. When schools need additional space to do other things, it is often the canteen facility that has to go, always because of the capital costs. I challenge my hon. Friend the Minister: the Government have said in response to the report that they want to use the new deal for schools money to help catering facilities. I genuinely hope that that will be the case and that we will move away from this nonsense that the food facility can be sacrificed. There is a downside to that.

I agree entirely with what a number of my hon. Friends have said, particularly my hon. Friend the Member for Bradford, North, about the importance of passported benefit. The kids who do not take up free school meals because of the problems often live in rural areas. I am not saying that such children do not live in urban areas. I accept that some of this is apocryphal, but we all know—I have seen it—that kids are sometimes listed on the register as receiving free school meals and their names are called out for that reason. As I have said, those meals are sometimes provided in a different way, and children are made to sit in different places.

That situation has improved, and it had to do so. As my hon. Friend the Member for Warrington, North (Helen Jones) said, teachers are much more sensitive and people are more attuned to the problem than they were previously. However, as my hon. Friend the Member for Bradford, North said, a child needs to experience such discrimination only once to remember it for the rest of his life, as my hon. Friend has remembered it. Quite simply, we must not allow that to happen. Anything that we can do to prevent such discrimination must be done.

This is a good report, with a lot of ideas. I hope that the Government will treat it seriously. For all sorts of reasons, we should provide children with decent school meals. For many children, the meal that they receive at school is their only substantial meal of the day. That is true in rural and urban areas. That situation may be getting worse instead of better, because people are less likely to eat together and know what their children are doing. A lot of good could come out of the report, and I hope that the Government will push it along. Criticism may have been voiced that that process is not moving quickly enough. My hon. Friend the Minister should take that on board, and I am sure that she will.

4.18 pm

Dr. Evan Harris (Oxford, West and Abingdon): I, too, must confess that I was not a member of the Select Committee when the report was prepared. I joined just after the current Chairman, the hon. Member for Huddersfield (Mr. Sheerman), who spoke so eloquently. I watched the process of publication with a great deal of interest. I would have supported the report in its entirety, had I been on the Select Committee at that time.

My hon. Friend the Member for Harrogate and Knaresborough (Mr. Willis) was on the Committee. He is disappointed that he cannot be present, but he is speaking at an education conference in Harrogate today. However, he wants to join me in paying tribute to the members of the Education and Employment Committee, and to the previous and current Chairmen, for their work.

It was interesting to hear occasional attacks on the provision of fast food. As an eater of such food, I may be on the defensive, but there is no such thing as bad food, only a bad diet. On that basis, I hope that I can continue regularly to purchase fast food from the Burger King outlet at Paddington station, as I did on the way here today. The right attitude to nutrition should not be "ban this, ban that": it is all about balance. Whenever I consume a burger product, I try to eat several tangerines on the same day. It makes me feel better and full.

Mr. Sheerman: The hon. Gentleman knows that I, as Chairman, have sometimes referred to his hyperactivity: all is now explained.

Dr. Harris: I get criticised for hyperactivity and sometimes for the opposite in the Select Committee. A novel development has taken place at Thameside school in my constituency, of which I am a governor. The breakfast club for pupils—many of whom are on free school meals, come from deprived backgrounds and are not getting hot breakfasts—was sponsored by the local franchise holder for Burger King. He may regard me as one of his best customers, but he sponsored the club without any wish for publicity. I hope that my reference to Mr. Silver of the Oxford banqueting group will not be picked up by the media, but I nevertheless pay tribute to him. Sides should not automatically be taken on the issue.

The hon. Member for Bradford, North (Mr. Rooney) made an excellent contribution to the debate on free school meals. I am grateful to him for giving me the opportunity to apologise for the actions of the Liberal Government in 1906. I look forward to further opportunities to apologise for more up-to-date approaches with which he has difficulty. Both he and the hon. Member for Warrington, North (Helen Jones) mentioned the loss of free school meals when people move from welfare to work as a contributor to the poverty trap. I have noticed that problem in my constituency work too. The costs of £300 million to £400 million will give the Government pause for thought, but they may be maximum costs. It may encourage greater welfare to work by removing the poverty trap though, sadly, there may not be a full take-up of free school meals.

The allocation of funding would be redistributive. Perhaps we are not supposed to use that term, but the hon. Member for Bradford, North recognises that the Government could extend free school meals to people on working families tax credit, which would be highly redistributive. Recommendation 7 relates to the importance of taking steps to encourage school lunches to be taken together as a school community. Both the hon. Members for Staffordshire, Moorlands (Charlotte Atkins) and for Warrington, North spoke eloquently about that. I concur that it is an important part of social training. The Select Committee examined how care and education in the early years can encourage social behaviour. Meal times provide an excellent opportunity for such behaviour—the sharing of milk and other provisions during the part of the meal when people take from a communal source.

It is important that children who bring packed lunches to school, be it for religious reasons, preference or food allergies, should not be made to feel different and forced to sit apart. The report itself and contributions today point out that the size of the school dining hall can restrict that feeling of community. I saw the Minister raise her eyebrows when the hon. Member for Guildford (Mr. St. Aubyn) said that it was the legacy of previous decades of underspending on capital that our school buildings are not fit for the purpose in many cases. There are other drives to deal with the problem of inadequate school dining halls.

Mr. St. Aubyn: The period of underspending to which I referred was before the deregulation of the school meals system in 1980. It was a period under the Lib-Lab pact when there were budget cuts for schools around the country.

Dr. Harris: That is very amusing, but those of us who listened carefully to the hon. Gentleman's speech understood that the 20 years to which he referred were 20 years of Tory spending plans: 18 years under Tory Governments and two years under this Government. That trend has been reversed in the past two years, which is welcome. At Dunmore primary school in my constituency, a good proportion of the school dining hall has had to be taken over by desks for the computers that it has been given or has raised funds to buy. Excellent teaching is done there, but it further reduces the capacity of the dining hall and it affects the school's ability to be a community.

On the subject of packed lunches, I should like to draw attention to the excellent work on food allergy carried out by the Fair Play campaign in Harrogate, and in particular by Mrs. Johnson who has corresponded with my colleagues and me. She is concerned about the need for more allergy awareness among catering staff and the provision of adequate first aid for the very rare, but serious, anaphylactic attacks that can occur. She also wants to ensure that children, who because of allergy, particularly peanut allergy, bring a packed lunch when many of their friends have a school meal are not excluded or isolated. I pay tribute to her and the campaign. I hope that the Minister will pay careful heed to it.

There have been many helpful contributions about recommendation 3, which is about the low take-up of school meals and the wish to find mechanisms at least to research the reasons for it. Anecdotally we feel that it is because of the stigma, although the Select Committee found conflicting evidence about that. One can see why. I welcome the Government's acceptance of that recommendation and I look forward to hearing what funds they are putting into research on why that happens and on the identification of best practice, such as smart cards, to improve matters.

It was a helpful coincidence that the Government held their summit on body image for women and young girls yesterday. I entirely support that campaign. Some of the media criticism about some aspects of that campaign has been unfortunate. Clearly a balance needs to be struck, because part of the concern that forms in girls' minds about weight may result from the warnings about eating fatty foods. Prevention is better than cure. Our concerns about the health of young people refer to the particularly obese. Many of those affected by eating disorders, particularly the epidemic in bulimic disorders, are of normal weight. The perception of body image is at fault.

It is important that hon. Members recognise the fact that concern about obesity must be consistent with concern about body image problems. Manufacturers could play a role in achieving that. There is a profusion of diet this, diet that and diet the other. Why is Diet Coke not called sugar-free Coke? Pepsi managed to call its drink Pepsi Lite, a name not associated with diets. Pepsi Max is actually Pepsi Min in terms of some of its sugar and calorific content. Therefore, manufacturers can attract young people without appealing to the fad for diets.

I agree with the hon. Member for Stroud (Mr. Drew): many local education authorities have been too sensitive to public opinion on food content. At the first sign of trouble over beef, which was probably unwarranted, and because of the slowness to reassure about beef content in diets, political gestures were made and motions were passed. I may not be fully supported by all members of the Committee in my view that there is little scientific basis for similar action taken over food with genetically modified ingredients. However, I am not saying that there is no scientific basis for fears about the effect on health of the currently commercially available food with genetically modified ingredients.

Like other hon. Members, I shall focus on some of the history. The Tory Government's response to the 1982 Select Committee report that recommended that they introduce minimum standards enforceable by LEAs was remarkable. They said that > even if recommended standards were promulgated there is no evidence that they would result in pupils eating the food so prescribed: previous experience with national standards showed that much of the food provided was wasted.

That view was based on the idea that a child can be taken to good food, but she cannot be made to eat.

If one substitutes the idea of providing good nutrition with the idea of providing good teaching, one can see that such an approach is nonsense. All Governments need to uphold minimum standards of education. Not every child will learn as much as one hopes, but minimum standards and adequate training are a basis for levering up quality. It is illogical to say that we should not bother to set minimum standards because some children will not benefit.

On the subject of logic, I will expand on the point that I made in an intervention on the hon. Member for Guildford, who showed complacency on dental health. Dental health has improved, mainly through fluoridation—I know that merely by saying that, I shall receive a series of letters, many from members of my party—but despite that improvement, children's teeth still have severe problems, particularly in non-fluoridated areas.

Charlotte Atkins: I am glad to say that when the hon. Gentleman's constituents who are opposed to fluoridation write to him, he will be able to turn to the York university study, which will prove that fluoridation improves dental health.

Dr. Harris: I am in no doubt that fluoridation not only improves dental health, but tackles the problem of inequity in dental health. Young children from poorer backgrounds are particularly liable to have bad dental health. That is partly diet related, as dental health studies comparing areas of fluoridation and non-fluoridation have shown. The dental health profession is in no doubt that the increased consumption of soft drinks rows against the tide of improved dental health. As dental health has generally improved because of fluoride in toothpaste and fluoridation of water, we must be careful not to allow children in non-fluoridated water areas to have high-sugar diets.

Mr. St. Aubyn: Does the hon. Gentleman think that it is more important that children consume sufficient fluids during the day, or that they consume only fluids that will not damage their teeth, even if they drink too little of those fluids?

Dr. Harris: Clearly, a balance must be struck. The same applies to the argument cogently made by the hon. Member for Staffordshire, Moorlands about fruit. Given a choice at lunchtime between fruit and pudding, those without a guilty conscience will probably choose the pudding. However, people do not feel that need for choice at break time, and if something is offered, it may be taken up. I think that those fair concerns can be tackled in that way.

I share the concern of many hon. Members who have spoken and many members of the Committee, including the hon. Member for Huddersfield, about the Government's five-year delay in introducing standards. I think that those standards will be welcomed, but five years is a child's experience of primary school. There is an argument for prioritising child health issues, not only because of the health gain, but because people would otherwise miss out on an opportunity—a snapshot while children are growing and developing. The same arguments apply in education.

Hon. Members are used to the Government saying that they cannot do everything quickly, because they do not have the money. They find that hard to understand, particularly given the austerity of Labour's first two years in government. However, this is not a cost-related policy. It could have been, and could still be, introduced more urgently.

The Government's rejection of a nutrient-based approach to standards is regrettable, and I question whether the explanation in their response to the Committee's report is logical. In the words of one respondent—presumably specifically selected and possibly selectively quoted—nutrient-based standards can be a tyranny of numbers. However, we must not run scared of numbers, because numbers and data are the basis of a scientific evidence-based approach to policy. That is why I support the Minister and her colleagues in trying to obtain data on body image and people on television. It is no good seeking to obtain numbers and data on one issue that has caused criticism, while regretting that approach on another.

I think that the Government are guilty of selectively quoting again in the draft regulations and guidance. In paragraph 24, which the hon. Member for Guildford mentioned, the Government point out that food versus nutrient-based standards was not an issue for consultation:

> Many responses were, however, generally supportive of the Government's intention to introduce nutritional standards for school lunches and... raised no objections to setting food-based standards...Of these, over half (24) expressed explicit support for food-based standards, and the minority (20) for nutrient-based standards.

Surely the Government do not claim that that is a statistically valid sample. It is a selective sample of people who chose to respond. It would take only an advocate of food-based standards, perhaps someone in their office, to encourage five respondents to state that preference for that majority to exist. If an issue has not been consulted on formally, I question whether it is valid for the Government to mention it. If the evidence went the other way, they would be reluctant to do so.

In general, there is more to welcome in the Government's response than to challenge. Therefore, in welcoming the Select Committee's report, and with the qualifications that I have made, I look forward to the Minister's reply.

4.38 pm

Mr. James Clappison (Hertsmere): I join those who have congratulated the Select Committee on its choice of subject and on the report, which has eventually been prepared. Going back to our early lives, we are all familiar with the subject, which is of everyday importance and of great importance to many people.

We have had a good debate on the report. I congratulate the present Chairman of the Committee, the hon. Member for Huddersfield (Mr. Sheerman) on the way in which he opened the debate. He certainly showed that he had done his homework on this subject even though he was not the Chairman of the Select Committee when it conducted the inquiry. Subject to the one reservation that I have already entered, I do not want to revisit the past, even the 1906 Liberal Government, I am happy to refer to that Government because they were returned with an extremely large majority, but became divided and were followed by a long period of Conservative predominance.

The hon. Member for Huddersfield opened the debate in a thoughtful, constructive and balanced way. As he made clear, the Government have accepted a number of the Committee's recommendations, but by no means all of them, and they have accepted them with a varying degree of commitment. The hon. Gentleman described some of their response as disappointing. It is important to consider the action that the Government propose to take in the light of those important recommendations.

There is a divergence of view between the Government and the Select Committee about the central recommendation contained in the conclusion of the report. In paragraphs 15 and 16 the report recommended that the compulsory element of the regulation should be based on scientific, nutrient-based guidelines, rather than the food-based approach taken by the Government. The hon. Member for Oxford, West and Abingdon (Dr. Harris) has commented on that, and in his opening remarks the Chairman of the Select Committee said that it was very disappointing.

[Mr. James Clappison]

The hon. Member for Oxford, West and Abingdon spoke about the nature of scientific-based evidence. I note that the Select Committee preferred the evidence of the expert witnesses who appeared before it under the auspices of the National Heart Forum. They represented the health interest, and were in favour of the nutrient-based approach. We should bear in mind the Chairman's opening remarks about the link between diet in childhood and illness later in life, particularly coronary illnesses, cancer and other significant illnesses.

In the course of her evidence, Maggie Sanderson, the secretary of the National Heart Forum and a lecturer in nutrition, said that the food group approach, preferred by the Government, would be difficult to monitor. There appeared to be little in it to regulate the amount of fat and sugar in the menus, and the high fat intake among schoolchildren meant that obesity was increasing. Those are important points, given that that comes from an authoritative and expert source. The Government owe the Committee and the House an explanation of why they chose not to prefer the evidence that came from the health experts.

Whether one takes the nutrient based or the food group approach, we should remember that what is important is what is eaten, rather than what is provided. It is accepted on both sides and in the evidence that it is no use providing healthy food if it is not eaten. We are all familiar with the sight of children, especially older children of secondary school age, opting out of any form of school lunch and leaving the school often to visit shops where what they buy is not always good for their health.

The Select Committee was also reminded that some children who opt for school lunches leave most of it. I quote briefly from the evidence of Ms Pat Fellows of the Local Authority Caterers Association who described how > we cooked all this nutritional food all morning, and we spent the afternoon putting it in the pig bin.

The evidence from LACA contains some useful suggestions on the marketing of school catering and the ways in which schools could provide healthy and nutritious meals that appeal to children. The Committee deserves to be congratulated on opening up the subject. I hope that it can be taken forward.

I do not want to go through all that evidence, or through all the evidence and the recommendations in the report. In the time available I want to stress three points arising from the report and the Government's response.

The first is free school meals, a subject that has been raised by a number of hon. Members. Free school meals are likely to be particularly important for the nutrition of children from lower-income families, which is a major consideration. It is of concern that nearly one in five of the children entitled to free school meals do not exercise their entitlement, although it may be their one opportunity in the day to have a hot and nutritious meal. The Committee was right to reflect on that concern.

It is not clear why that should be the case. Hon. Members, among them the hon. Member for Bradford, North (Mr. Rooney), have suggested a number of reasons for that from personal experience. He and the other hon. Members who have said that it might be because of the stigma that attaches to free school meals may be right. I do not know whether that is the reason, and I know that the evidence presented to the Committee was conflicting. However, what is important is the Committee's recommendation that there should be research into the attitudes of children and their parents to claiming their entitlement. In the light of this debate that is a valuable recommendation.

I note that the Government accept the recommendation in principle. However, they do not give a commitment to funding such research. The hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon) said that the Government's response was slightly disappointing. I hope that the Under-Secretary will be able to go further than that when she winds up the debate, because such research is justified. Life is a struggle for children and their families when the parents are on income support, and it is a shame if they do not take advantage of the opportunity of free school meals. We must discover why they do not, as it may have major implications for the rest of their lives.

My second point is the vexed question of persuading children to eat fruit and veg. We have heard a number of contributions on that, and particularly on the national fruit and vegetable scheme, which was mentioned by the hon. Member for Staffordshire, Moorlands (Charlotte Atkins) and is contained in the report. We know that children from all social backgrounds do not eat enough fruit and veg. The Committee recommends that greater efforts should be made to provide an attractive choice of fruit at break times. That is welcome. It also recommends that the Department for Education and Employment should work with the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to introduce an expanded intervention stocks disposal scheme as the basis of a wider national fruit and vegetable scheme for schools. I note that suggestion, which I believe should be debated and possibly explored. In their response, the Government say that they accept the recommendation in principle, but it is noticeable that they give little detail about the use of intervention stocks in the way recommended by the Committee.

The Government's response has come more recently than a written answer on 19 July 1999 from the then Minister of State for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker), who said that > it is hoped that it will be possible to distribute fruit to schools in the coming season, following a recent change in the rules which allows transport costs to be claimed.—[Official Report, 19 July 1999; Vol. 335, c. 436W.]

It would be interesting to know whether any fruit has been distributed to schools in England and Wales since that reply was given. We understand that last month the Scottish Executive announced a pilot project, apparently based on a Finnish scheme, to provide free soft fruit for children at meal times in Scotland. Have Ministers any plans to do something similar in England, with fruit from European Union intervention stocks or any other source? That leads me to observe that a massive amount of such stock is disposed of in ways other than for the nutrition of children. Last year in the EU, 350,000 tonnes of apples were disposed of at a substantial cost to the taxpayer, without doing anyone any good. One wonders whether there is scope for a common-sense investigation into this matter.

Thirdly, it is important to note the Committee's recommendation that the Government should not be over-prescriptive in their approach to implementing minimum nutritional standards for school lunches. It would be all too easy for prescription in this area to go over the top and become impractical and unrealistic. There is a balance to be struck, and my hon. Friend the Member for Guildford (Mr. St. Aubyn) made some important comments about that. He made the case for realism in persuading children to eat the right things.

The Minister admitted that many respondents to the consultation found the Government's proposals too detailed, and said that the Government would bear that in mind. We hope that they will bear in mind the need to avoid over-prescription, and that some common sense can be brought to bear in this matter. We need common sense when deciding how to persuade children to eat healthy meals.

As the Chairman said in his concluding remarks, which I endorse, there is also a need for this important subject to be kept under investigation. This was a brief report on an important subject, and there is a case for keeping the matter under investigation to see what progress is being made. It is incumbent on the Government to give us a response to these points and, perhaps, to take a little further their response to some of the recommendations made by the Committee.

The Minister for School Standards (Jacqui Smith): I am pleased that I ate a healthy and filling lunch before coming to this debate, because I shall clearly need all my energy to respond to the important points that have been raised. This has been a good debate, and I should like to congratulate the Select Committee on its work in gathering the evidence and producing a report on a matter that we would all agree is important. We all want a nation of healthy young people and the education service has a key role to play in promoting health among schoolchildren in a number of ways. As hon. Members have said, the knowledge, skills and attitudes learned at school stay with us for life and affect our health for life.

Naturally, I also want to do what I can in partnership with other Departments, agencies and external partners to remedy the deficiencies. I assure my hon. Friend the Member for Huddersfield (Mr. Sheerman), the Chairman of the Select Committee, that I have had detailed discussions with colleagues from the Department of Health on the recommendations on school meals and on a wide variety of other issues that I hope to have time to discuss later. I say to my hon. Friend, with a feeling of mild sadness, that the nature of joined-up government means that we can talk to each other as Ministers, and we do not necessarily need to line up in order to show that we are taking a cross-governmental approach. However, I assure my hon. Friend that we are.

I shall refer first to the need for compulsory standards for school lunches. In our consultations, there was overwhelming support from all quarters—including nutritionists, caterers and parents—for the reintroduction of nutritional standards for school meals. We believe that, in taking this action, we are trailblazing in the public sector, and putting back in place an important factor for children's health.

School meals are part of a wider picture of promoting better health, in which the education service has an important part to play. The standards, which are to be enshrined in law for the first time in almost 20 years, signal the importance that the Government attach to the health of our young people. I accept the point made by my hon. Friend the Member for Warrington, North (Helen Jones) that this is not only a health issue, but an educational standards issue. I accept the argument that well-fed young people are more likely to be well educated and well behaved.

On compulsory standards, many catering contracts already specify healthy food requirements, and many catering staff do a marvellous job in terms of the meals that they provide. I should like to take this opportunity to commend the work that goes on in many of our kitchens and catering companies and to thank their dedicated staff. However, practice does vary, and the new standards will ensure that a national minimum standard throughout the country is established in regulations.

As the hon. Member for Guildford (Mr. St. Aubyn) pointed out, we must not forget that school meals are optional. However, to suggest that enforceable standards could result in children not eating their meals is the wrong conclusion to draw. In my experience, parents who provide their children with a packed lunch do so because that is the only way to guarantee the standards that they expect. The standards that this Government will put in place will enable certainty about the nutritional value of school meals, which will help to boost take-up and provide an important opportunity for the school meals service.

My hon. Friend the Member for Huddersfield (Mr. Sheerman), the Committee Chairman, chided the Government about the timetable for introducing nutritional standards. He is right to say that May 2002 is our ultimate, published target, but he will be pleased to learn that we will lay regulations in respect of standards this Session. They will come into force in all education phases in April 2001, together with the new duty to provide paid meals. To help school caterers prepare, we will issue comprehensive guidance in the autumn. However, it is important to get matters right, and I should point out to those hon. Members who criticised the extent of the consultation process that we consulted on two separate occasions. The results of the first consultation were published in April 1999, and the results of the second—which hon. Members quoted today—were published recently.

Hon. Members have rightly pointed out that the way in which the standards were designed has proved controversial, and has given rise to the question of whether they should be food based or nutrient based. It is important to note that these are the first standards for school meals in 20 years, so it is not surprising that the form that they should take has been the subject of much debate.

The debate stems from the common objective that standards need to make a difference and improve nutrition for our children. The standards should provide a sensible basis for the caterers—who will be responsible for their implementation—to plan school meals and bring about an overall improvement in children's nutrition. They must also fit with other healthy eating messages given out by the Government in general and schools in particular.

We want flexible standards that will make a difference in schools. We believe that food-based standards will be easier for caterers to understand and interpret when planning menus, purchasing supplies and preparing meals.

Mr. St. Aubyn: In describing the standards, will the Minister explain how much the compliance costs associated with her system of regulation will add to the cost of the typical school meal?

Jacqui Smith: We believe that, in respect of monitoring, a food-based standard is more efficient than a nutrient-based standard. That conclusion was supported by the response to our consultation exercise, and I shall explain our thinking on that in a moment. More importantly, it is easier for pupils to identify with that—it fosters a wider understanding of food and is more meaningful to them.

Although we are to introduce minimum standards, schools and authorities will be free to exceed them if they choose. The proposed food-based standards, which are widely used by the Government in our messages about the need for a balanced diet, will be able to accommodate any nutrient-based standards that are already in place in local education authorities and schools. We are not trying to dictate or prescribe best practice, although we have clarified what should be promoted in schools. LEAs and schools should decide what works best for them, but they should operate within a minimal legislative framework that is understandable by all and, importantly, enforceable and deliverable.

Several people who lobbied me suggested that nutrient-based standards—in particular, those that were devised by the Caroline Walker Trust—are often used as an ideal to which we should aspire. I applaud the trust's good work; its guidelines contain important information and targets. Caterers will have to comply with our regulations. It will not be good enough simply to aspire to meet them, because those who do that will be breaking the law. The regulations must be designed so that caterers can comply with them.

Several hon. Members mentioned consultation. We have consulted widely on the draft regulations and the guidance on nutritional standards for school lunches. That consultation process showed that a majority supported the use of food-based standards. During the first round of consultation, we asked for comments on the use of food-based, rather than nutrient-based, standards.

The caterers who provide the school meals service are—naturally, one might say—more enthusiastic about the use of food-based standards. The school cooks who they employ do a terrific job, but they are not necessarily trained dieticians. Dieticians also support the use of food-based standards. For example, one dietician commented:

> They are best simply because everyone understands them.

That is not to deny the importance of essential nutrients in a child's diet. I earlier discussed how our standards would fit in with a broader Government message about healthy eating. We believe that the use of food-based standards complements the Government's healthy-eating messages, which emphasise the need for balance and variety of foods in the diet, rather than specific nutrients. When making decisions about health diets, that is the easiest way to make the relevant choices understandable. That lesson has clearly been learned by the hon. Member for Oxford, West and Abingdon (Dr. Harris), who has an admirably balanced diet.

The hon. Member for Hertsmere (Mr. Clappison) raised a point that is contained in the Select Committee report, suggesting that our original proposals and guidance were too prescriptive and patronising. We have heard that criticism and reviewed the terms in which the regulations and guidance are couched. As I said, we want the regulations and guidance to make a difference, but they should do so in a way that involves flexibility for caterers and builds on current best practice.

My hon. Friend the Member for Huddersfield rightly said that it was important to monitor and review the success of standards. We shall introduce light-touch standards. Monitoring is important, but that, too, should be light touch. For example, our guidance to caterers will include simple checklists to help them ensure that they are meeting the standards. Local education authorities and schools will ensure that caterers comply with the standards set out in their contracts.

Dr. Harris: I read with interest that part of the Government's response that deals with this issue. It states:

> Light touch standards will require light touch monitoring.

Why? I would have thought that the lighter the standards, the more important it is that the monitoring should be tough, to ensure that the standards are met.

Jacqui Smith: As I shall explain, the monitoring process has a range of prongs. I am sure that the Select Committee will agree with our approach, as we are emphasising the need for schools to concentrate on raising standards in a non-bureaucratic way. Anything that puts extra pressure on governing bodies and schools would be unsatisfactory. However, I recognise the importance of monitoring. Although we shall prescribe light-touch, day-to-day monitoring for local education authorities in respect of caterers, our guidance will include also details of the recommended weekly nutrient content for school meals. Schools, LEAs and caterers will decide how to monitor school meals, using those guidelines. As a result of my meeting with the National Heart Forum, I believe that we might be able to encourage schools and caterers to use information technology packages to help them. I am keen to pursue that.

The Government want to make a difference to children's nutrition. When the new standards have settled down, we shall undertake an evaluation of school meals, using sample school surveys. That could include nutrient analysis of food offered and consumed, as we recognise that food will be nutritious only if the children actually eat it. We would then consider the regulations again, in the light of the outcome of the survey. We want the standards to make a difference, but it must be possible for the people who deliver school meals to implement them. We will also work closely with the Food Standards Agency and other relevant bodies.

I thank my hon. Friend the Member for Staffordshire, Moorlands (Charlotte Atkins) for her important contribution to the report. She referred to her own experiences in this area. I, too, was a governor and helped to determine a school meals contract. I taught and, as the mother of a six-year-old boy, I have a strong personal interest in the food that he will receive at school. My hon. Friend referred, rightly, to the way in which the expertise of school caterers can be used to provide healthy but enjoyable food that our young people will eat.

My hon. Friend gave the lie to the accusation made by the hon. Member for Guildford that healthier school meals necessarily would be more expensive. We do not believe that. My hon. Friend gave examples that showed that it was possible to provide healthy meals, such as cheese and tomato tagliatelle, curry and rice, shepherd's pie, pizza—which can, in fact, be healthy—cauliflower cheese and baked potatoes with various fillings. All of those are enjoyable, nutritious meals that can be provided by imaginative school caterers.

We have made significant progress with regard to the fruit and veg scheme. I have spoken to colleagues from the Department of Health not only about how we develop the MAFF scheme, but what we need to do, taking a common-sense approach, to ensure that children are able to eat more fruit and vegetables in school in a way that does not impose bureaucratic pressures on those schools. I assure hon. Members that we are actively working on plans to take that forward.

My hon. Friends the Members for Halifax, for Staffordshire, Moorlands, for Warrington, North and for Bradford, North (Mr. Rooney) eloquently expressed the importance of free school meals to many of our children. New nutritional standards will ensure that all children are able to have healthy and enjoyable school meals. Children from less well-off families, including those who receive free school meals, are likely to benefit most from new nutritional standards. Those standards thus play an important role in eradicating child poverty and in dealing with the issues that affect children from some of our poorest families.

A strong argument was made for the extension of eligibility for free school meals to the children of parents receiving working families tax credit. As my hon. Friend the Member for Bradford, North recognised, working families tax credit contains a provision for free school meals. People across Government will have heard the passion with which that case was made. However, it is an expensive option, and one that any Government would need to consider carefully.

Mr. Sheerman: My hon. Friend will probably cover this point, but the real passion arose because the Department could easily take the step of putting out an edict of anonymity in relation to free school meals. The Department already sends messages to schools and local education authorities, so why cannot there be such an edict? Would not my hon. Friend be proud if she managed to achieve that quickly?

Jacqui Smith: My hon. Friend is right. I was coming on to the important point that, for a variety of reasons, not all eligible pupils take up their free school meal entitlement. I am sure that hon. Members will therefore be pleased that, following the Government's response to the Committee's report, we are now providing funding for a research project with the Child Poverty Action Group. The project aims to identify the reasons for low levels of take-up of free school meals in some schools and high levels of take-up in others—in other words, as my hon. Friend the Member for Bradford, North pointed out, to identify the actions that schools can take to increase their take-up. The project also aims to highlight successful strategies for models of good practice employed by schools that are successful in increasing their take-up.

I assure hon. Members that the research project aims specifically to offer practical evidence on ideas to school meals providers on ways to maximise free school meal take-up. We intend that the project should be completed by February 2001, when we shall disseminate its results. It will be an important contribution, and a link to the Government's target on reducing child poverty.

Mr. Sheerman: I am sorry to press the Minister, but she did not answer my question. Research is not needed to prove that anonymity is important in terms of free school meals. She could achieve that much sooner than 2001; it could happen very soon indeed. Research is not necessary; many people whom we know in our constituencies have personal experience of the humiliation involved. If that could be eradicated one week or one month quicker, so much the better. Common sense should tell us that it is wrong to mark such people out.

Jacqui Smith: We already make it clear to LEAs that schools and LEAs should be taking such action to ensure that all children who are eligible to take up free school meals do so. One point that arose from the Select Committee report, as hon. Members have mentioned, is that there was no consensus in the evidence about the best way of increasing that eligibility. It is not enough simply to issue edicts from Sanctuary buildings. We must find examples of good practice and ensure that those are put into operation.

Dr. Harris: The Minister should understand that there are two issues. It may not be clear that the marking out of people reduces the take-up of school meals, but there is merit, as the hon. Member for Huddersfield (Mr. Sheerman) said, in not marking people out, regardless of what the research shows to be the effect on take-up. Surely, the Minister could agree to look at that.

Jacqui Smith: I shall certainly look at it, but if anonymity is not delivered because of different queues, raffle tickets and so on, schools should have the common sense to realise that they should not be doing that. We have told them clearly, but there may be a range of other issues. It is not helpful to jump in before the research backing and the good practice guidance is available to enable us to go further in ensuring that children who are eligible for free school meals take up their entitlement.

Mr. Clappison: I do not want to take the matter too much further, but is there not a case for the Department simply issuing an edict, as the hon. Member for Huddersfield suggested, to look at every way possible in which to disguise the identity of children who receive free school meals? Surely the Minister's Department could consider whether it is possible to issue general guidance along those lines without going into matters that may be subject to research.

Jacqui Smith: I shall certainly consider ways in which we can ensure that those messages get through to local education authorities and schools. We are not in the business of issuing edicts, but we are in the business of collecting good practice and ensuring that that is disseminated to schools.

I want to move on to whole-school approaches to healthy eating, which was helpfully raised by several hon. Members. Of course, school meals do not exist in isolation and we need to educate and encourage our children to be able to make informed food and life style choices. My Department is involved in a number of initiatives. We work closely with the Department of Health and we shall work with the Food Standards Agency and with external partners to promote good health and broader messages about food throughout schools.

For example, the Chairman of the Select Committee eloquently argued that we need to bring health and education together in the way in which we work in schools. I am sure that my hon. Friend knows about the close collaboration between the Department of Health and the Department for Education and Employment on the healthy schools programme, which now operates and is funded throughout England. The programme brings together health authorities and local education authorities in local partnerships to support schools in meeting standards laid out in the national healthy schools standard.

A key theme in the guidance on the standard relates specifically to healthy eating. It suggests that schools that will be recognised under the standard—all schools now have access to the support to enable them to do so—should present consistent, informed messages about healthy eating. For example, food on offer in vending machines, tuck shops and school meals should complement the taught curriculum. Various examples suggest that that is working.

Newall Green high school in Manchester, for example, decided as part of its local healthy schools work to improve the atmosphere in school during lunch time by boosting the uptake of healthy food in various ways. Pupils were surveyed, school kitchens were refurbished, teachers were encouraged to eat with pupils and organisers were trained in positive behaviour management. That returns us to the important points that were made by my hon. Friends the Members for Staffordshire, Moorlands and for Warrington, North about the relationship between behaviour, a child's social development and what happens during school meals.

Local sports celebrities were brought in to talk to pupils about the importance of healthy eating, and many positive messages were promoted, not least of which was the suggestion that healthy eating in pleasant surroundings can be fun. The results went beyond the school's expectations. The school cook could confirm that children were eating more healthy food options, and parents and children were impressed by the changes that resulted. We work closely with the Department of Health and various companies, including Kellogg's, to promote breakfast clubs in schools. The national curriculum gives lots of room to schools to promote healthy eating.

Helen Jones: Will the work that the Department for Education and Employment is carrying out with the Department of Health include a cost-benefit analysis of the effect of extending free school meals to families who are on working families tax credit? If we know the cost of treating future diseases, it should not be too difficult to carry out that analysis.

Jacqui Smith: Those arguments have been heard across Government. This matter is not solely the responsibility of the Department of Health and it could not be delivered by the joint effort of that Department and the DFEE; as my hon. Friend knows, Treasury decisions are also involved.

My hon. Friend stressed the importance of teaching children how to cook. That often helps children, when they become adults, to prepare healthy food. We are introducing food to the curriculum in various ways, including the Government's focus on food, which has given pupils hands-on experience of cooking with professionals. The programme has used a fully equipped bus, which has visited more than 100 schools and prepared food for a reception at No. 10 Downing street. The cooking for kids initiative, which has benefited more than 10,000 children since its launch in February 1999, is also significant. However, we still have further to go.

We should come up with new ways in which schools and external agencies can help children to learn the important skill of cooking. A whole-school approach to healthy eating and to life style is vital in the promotion of good health among schoolchildren. I hope that that is demonstrated by the initiatives in which we are participating. We want to play a full part in the new national task force for children's nutrition, which was recently announced by my hon. Friend the Minister for Public Health.

The hon. Member for Guildford had a bit of a cheek, dare I say it, when he emphasised the importance of increased capital spending on school kitchens. However, he has a point; we should compare this Government's approach to capital spending with that of the previous Government. We are already making money available through the new deal for schools. Kitchens and dining areas are important because children are more likely to eat a school meal if the dining area is pleasant and the kitchen provides good food.

Under the new deal for schools, the Department is currently funding 42 projects that involve a major kitchen or dining area component. That investment is worth more than £12.5 million, and 117 schools are benefiting.

To give just one example, in an infant school in Halton, new deal for schools money is funding the provision of a new kitchen, serving directly on to the dining area. The school, which has a high proportion of pupils on free school meals, will now be able to provide all its pupils with hot food in comfortable surroundings, whereas previously meals had to be imported from a nearby school.

Despite the significant increases in funding, it will not be possible for all schools to receive that amount of investment. Sometimes even a lick of paint or imaginative decoration by the children can make all the difference to a dining area. I agree that we must give children good surroundings if we are to encourage them to take their school meals.

Mr. Drew: The key point is access to the community. I know that there are health and safety issues and environmental health issues, but if the facilities could be made more widely available, I am sure that we would all have the benefit of the virtuous circle.

Jacqui Smith: My hon. Friend is right. He will know that we are trying to promote access to school facilities for the community in a range of ways.

I welcome the opportunity that the debate has given us to talk about school meals and food issues in the education service generally. The ground-breaking introduction of nutritional standards for school lunches provides an exciting opportunity for the education service, in tandem with the opportunity provided by the delegation of school meal budgets. Caterers and all those involved in the provision of school food can use this opportunity to review and update their services. It is a focus from which I hope many new initiatives will spring, such as many of the good suggestions that have been made in the debate today, to improve the health and educational chances of our young people. I hope and believe that this work will herald a new, modern era for school meals.

Question put and agreed to.

RAF Chinook Crash

Motion made, and Question proposed, That the sitting be now adjourned.—[Mr. Betts.]

10 am

Mr. Martin Bell (Tatton): I wish to speak on a matter of some importance, and I am somewhat dismayed to note that a Minister is not yet here to reply. I hope that a Minister will attend and listen to what is said, rather than simply reading a prepared text.

This is not a party political issue. It is a time not for recrimination, but for common sense and justice. The incident occurred on the watch of one Government and must be dealt with on that of another. That is why I, as an hon. Member without a party, have the privilege of making the case for action by the Ministry of Defence. [Interruption.] I am delighted to see that the Minister has now joined us.

On 2 June 1994, the RAF Chinook helicopter ZD576 crashed on the Mull of Kintyre, killing all 29 people on board, most of whom were Army and police intelligence officers based in Northern Ireland. Why they were travelling together in one aircraft, and thereby presenting a potential target for sabotage, is another issue. The crash was the worst peacetime accident in RAF history, and inquiries were begun immediately. The helicopter was not carrying a black box recorder, and the only evidence was in the thousands of pieces of wreckage lying on the hillside.

The Scottish fatal accident inquiry said that the cause of the crash could not be determined, and the RAF board of inquiry concluded that the most probable cause was the crew's selecting an inappropriate rate of climb for safe overflight of the mull. However, it also concluded that there were > many potential causes of the accident,

and was "unable to determine" a definite cause. Because they were dead, the two pilots, Flight Lieutenants Jonathan Tapper and Rick Cook, were not represented at the inquiry, and nor were their families. That was how the rules stood in those days.

The report was couched in terms of probabilities, rather than the certainties or near certainties that are required to sustain a verdict of gross negligence. The rules in force at that time stated that > only in cases in which there is absolutely no doubt whatsoever should deceased aircrew be found negligent.

However, two air marshals, Sir William Wratten and Sir John Day—the senior officer responsible for Chinooks—had the authority to overrule the verdict of the board of inquiry, and accused the pilots of "gross negligence" in not obeying helicopter flying rules. Sir William, who has now retired, has not changed his mind. Two weeks ago, he wrote in The Sunday Times:

> we stand by every word we wrote.

Mr. Frank Cook (Stockton, North): I am grateful to the very honourable Gentleman and commend him for securing today's debate. However, I must apologise to him and other hon. Members—I am unable to attend the entire debate because I am chairing this morning's sitting of the Finance Bill Standing Committee, which begins at 10.30 am.

Does the hon. Gentleman agree that, in overruling the board of inquiry, the reviewing officers ignited a torch that has burnt vividly, and which has been fuelled by disinformation and the changing and progressively evasive attitude of the Ministry of Defence? That attitude has resulted in 90 signatures on an early-day motion, 60 letters to Ministers, 500 articles published in prominent newspapers and magazines in less than two years, and 100 reports on television and radio. Does the hon. Gentleman also agree, and will he impress on the Minister, that the torch of inquiry that has been fuelled by the disinformation and evasive tactics of the Ministry of Defence can be extinguished only by truth and openness?

Mr. Bell: I thank the hon. Gentleman for his intervention—he makes some sound points. Some people should be searching their consciences because, as I shall explain, this issue will not go away. It will remain until it is satisfactorily resolved.

The air marshals stood by what they wrote, but many people were disturbed by the ruling, and their doubts have increased as the years have passed. They include former and serving officers of the RAF, people with expertise in the flying characteristics of the Chinook, and, of course, the families of the two dead pilots—outstandingly well qualified young men, both cleared for special forces operations, who stood accused of killing 27 others. The verdict was close to manslaughter, or worse.

Ever since the verdict, the families, led by Michael Tapper, father of Jonathan Tapper, and John Cook, father of Rick Cook, have been campaigning to have it set aside. It dishonours their sons and is, in my view, unsafe. Concerns have been expressed by a growing number of parliamentarians and others, joined together in the newly-formed Mull of Kintyre group under the excellent chairmanship of Lord Chalfont. They include senior members of the House of Lords and of this House. I am delighted to see so many hon. Members in the Chamber today.

In the past year, 89 Members of Parliament signed an early-day motion, proposed by the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock), calling on the Government to reopen the board of inquiry. Only last week, Sir Malcolm Rifkind, who was Secretary of State for Defence at the time of the inquiry, went to see the Secretary of State for Defence to express his concerns about the massive uncertainty surrounding the case. That was a highly unusual turn of events, and I hope that its meaning was not lost on the Secretary of State and other Defence Ministers, including the Minister who is here today.

So far, the demand for a reopening of the inquiry has been stonewalled by the Ministry, on the grounds that there is no new evidence. I hope that the Minister will not repeat that argument today, because it is unsustainable. A mass of new evidence has come to light that undermines the verdict against the pilots, including the evidence of two accidents in the United States involving the same type of Chinook. That evidence was not available to the RAF's board of inquiry, because the accidents had not then happened.

The first accident took place in 1996. A US army Chinook crashed in Kentucky, killing all five crew members. Accident investigators ruled out technical malfunction and blamed the crew. However, a subsequent investigation revealed that a technical malfunction had been overlooked. The families successfully sued Boeing for more than $4 million. At this point, I should say that we are talking not about litigation, but about natural justice. The case showed that investigators can make mistakes.

The second case, which occurred in 1997 near Corpus Christi in Texas, was equally disturbing, although it involved a crash that, mercifully, did not happen. A Chinook was being flown by four experienced crew in clear weather. At 1,100 ft, it suddenly and inexplicably flipped upside down. What happened next is best described by one of the pilots, Pat Nield, in his own words:

> The aircraft was tracked really smooth: it flew better than anything I'd ever flown out of Corpus. I was looking down at the map when I felt the nose pitch down, and I got a bit of a shudder. I looked up and saw that the airspeed had picked up...the nose pitched up and continued to yaw really strong. At this point I knew things were really bad. All of a sudden, the aircraft just snapped over, it felt like it went upside down. Maps were flying everywhere. I went ahead and got on the controls, but nothing would bite ... I couldn't see inside the aircraft because everything was shaking too much. There was lots of noise, lots of vibration.

At about 250 ft above the ground, the pilots managed to wrestle back control of the aircraft and brought it safely down. Despite eyewitness accounts and months of investigation, the cause of the incident was never found. I ask hon. Members: if the crew had not regained control and had been killed in the resulting crash, who would have defended them against the charge of pilot error, or of gross negligence, in the absence of proof of a technical malfunction? What is the mindset in such cases—"blame the dead"?

In The Sunday Times last Sunday, John Nichol, a Gulf war hero and RAF navigator for 15 years, described a similar incident. A Tornado in which he was flying malfunctioned on take-off, but responded just seconds from disaster. He asked:

> If I had not been so fortunate on the day my aircraft did something it shouldn't, I wonder who would be defending my reputation now.

That is the whole point. We have here a grave situation—which denies natural justice, and is of concern to all aircrew—in which pilots are presumed to be guilty unless proven innocent.

Mr. Nick Hawkins (Surrey Heath): The hon. Gentleman is discussing technical concerns about the Chinook. Does he agree that his argument is enhanced by the work that has been carried out by many aeronautical experts, including my constituent, Captain Ralph Kohn, who is a fellow of the Royal Aeronautical Society?

Mr. Bell: I am indeed aware of that. I shall discuss expert testimony later.

Mr. Tam Dalyell (Linlithgow): During the hon. Gentleman's powerful speech, he referred to other people's concerns. Contemporaries of the two pilots thought that they were very competent pilots, and share the concern on the grounds that, as they might put it, "There, but for the grace of God, go we."

Mr. Bell: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for that point, but I should add that, shortly before the flight, one of the two pilots expressed concern about the condition of the aircraft in question.

The incident over Corpus Christi was an extreme case of what is called a UFCM—an uncommanded flying control movement—which occurs when, in effect, an aircraft takes on a life of its own and defies all the actions of its pilots. During the past seven months, with the crash of Chinook ZD576 in mind, I have set out on a patient paperchase and tabled many written questions to the Ministry of Defence about UFCMs. On 8 December 1999, I asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he would list the incidents of UFCMs that were reported by RAF pilots since 1994 and break them down by helicopter type. The list of such movements in Chinooks is revealing and the numbers are eloquent. There were six in 1994, five in 1995, six in 1996, five in 1997, seven in 1998 and six up to the relevant date in 1999. There is a steady pattern, which suggests something disturbing and mysterious. There have been 35 incidents in all, the cause of six of which was never found.

On 28 January 2000, I tabled a written question asking whether the air accidents investigation branch, which acted as the technical adviser to the RAF board of inquiry, had > considered and...ruled out the possibility of an uncommanded flying control movement, that left no trace as having occurred prior to the fatal crash of RAF Chinook ZD576.—[Official Report, House of Commons, 28 January 2000; Vol. 343, c. 384W.]

The Minister for the Armed Forces said that he would answer my question in a letter that he would place in the Library. That letter said:

> The possibilities of pre-impact systems jam or detachment of control pallet inserts were not positively dismissible...The Board could not dismiss other possible causes of a control restriction...but the most probable flight path of the aircraft indicated that the controls were functioning at impact...and the Board of Inquiry concluded that the most probable cause of the accident was that the crew selected an inappropriate rate of climb.

I draw the attention of hon. Members and the Minister to the language that is used by the board of inquiry. It is the language of probabilities. That language is not sufficient to sustain the verdict of gross negligence to which the air marshals put their names. I do not know them personally, and I have no doubt that they are honourable men, but why they departed from the safer area of probabilities to the less defensible ground of certainty or near certainty that is required for a conviction—make no mistake about it, a verdict of gross negligence involves a conviction—remains a mystery to me and to many others; hence the campaign, the unease among the families and hon. Members, the Mull of Kintyre group and this Adjournment debate.

I have seen an internal MOD memorandum advising that the best answer to my questions, and to other questions about the verdict of gross negligence, is the fact that, prior to the crash, no messages or signals indicating that there was an emergency on the Chinook were sent. My answer to that suggestion is that, as with the Kentucky and Corpus Christi incidents, no such messages would have been sent. The pilots would have been too busy fighting to regain control during the very few seconds that were available. It was literally a matter of life and death.

Most hon. Members, including myself, are laymen in these matters—we acknowledge that. However, the beginning of wisdom is to know how much one does not know. We pay heed to the experts, and our doubts were reinforced earlier this year in a report by three fellows of the Royal Aeronautical Society, who concluded that the verdict of pilot negligence in the case of the Mull of Kintyre crash was not sustainable in light of evidence that pointed to other problems that might have caused it. Air Marshals Sir William Wratten and Sir John Day resigned from the society, accusing it of bias and failure to publish relevant and balanced information. The case has shaken, and continues to shake, the aviation and aeronautical establishments and, I do not doubt, the Royal Air Force. The reputation of the air marshals is at stake and both men have served the state, but the pilots also served their country, with no less dedication, in the short time that fate allowed them.

I shall be brief. One of my other and, so far, unsuccessful campaigns is for shorter speeches and I want other hon. Members to have an opportunity to contribute. Before I finish, I have an interest to declare. With the hon. Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key), whom I am delighted to see in his place, I am a patron of the Association of Air Force Wives. That admirable organisation, which operates regardless of rank, acts as a channel between the Royal Air Force and its families and helps the RAF to work better. It deals mainly with welfare matters but has a wider role in its involvement in the RAF's exercise of its duty of care. It is important not only to serving men and women, especially aircrew, but to RAF families. When bad things happen—as they do from time to time, because that is the way of the world—it ensures that matters are dealt with fairly, equitably, severely if necessary, but without prejudice. That applies especially in this case and as much to the dead as to the living—perhaps more to the dead, because they are not here to make the case for themselves. It is up to us to do that for them.

To those who argue that the Royal Air Force has better things to do with its time than to reopen an inquiry into a crash that happened six years ago, I would say that it has not, and that perhaps this case matters more than anything else. The way in which it is dealt with will tell all of us, especially serving aircrew, a great deal about the meaning of the duty of care in today's expeditionary Royal Air Force in the new millennium.

Repeated representations to the Ministry of Defence have been met with a blanket and unworthy refusal to reconsider. The argument is that the crash of ZD576 happened such a long time ago that the issue is time-expired and there is nothing more to be said about it. However, it is not time-expired and there is a great deal more to be said about it.

This is a matter of principle, honour and natural justice, which is never time-expired. It is not a commodity with a shelf life. It is the same yesterday, today and tomorrow. The board of inquiry should be reopened with a view to setting aside the verdict of gross negligence. I know that I speak for all members of the Mull of Kintyre group in insisting that the matter does not go away, because our swords will not sleep in our hands until it is properly dealt with.

Mrs. Ray Michie (Argyll and Bute): I am grateful for the opportunity to contribute briefly to the debate, which I congratulate the hon. Member for Tatton (Mr. Bell) on securing. It concerns a matter so serious that it will return to haunt us again and again until it has been properly resolved.

I am sure that hon. Members will be aware that the appalling tragedy occurred in my constituency. On that fateful evening on 2 June 1994, a Chinook helicopter crashed into the Mull of Kintyre, killing all on board—25 passengers, Ulster's most senior intelligence personnel, and four crew. The pilots were highly experienced, having flown many hours in Chinook helicopters.

At the time, I was in close contact not only with the local emergency services but with the then Minister of State for the Armed Forces, the right hon. Jeremy Hanley, who promised a full inquiry. Not only was it necessary to try to establish the cause of the accident, but, in the immediate aftermath, the question was being asked why so many experts—the cream of Ulster intelligence—were crammed into one aircraft. We were subsequently told that that was not a departure from standard practice.

It was thought locally at the time that the helicopter might have been heading for Machrihanish RAF station because the normal flight path north to Inverness and Fort George would have been over the water following the west coast of Scotland. Why, therefore, did it not turn left as it would usually have done? My right hon. and learned Friend the Member for North-East Fife (Mr. Campbell) has also subsequently pursued the matter in the interests of justice.

It is not for me to rehearse all the technical details, but many questions remain unanswered. Was there an equipment failure? Were the pilots unable to manoeuvre the machine? Why was it flying so low? The weather does not appear to have been a crucial factor. I and my constituents remain deeply troubled that, in the absence of eye-witnesses to the crash, accident data and cockpit voice recorders, and despite the conclusions of the RAF's internal inquiry, which did not attribute blame, and the sheriff at the fatal accident inquiry in Paisley, which cleared both pilots of blame, the final verdict was, extraordinarily, that both pilots had been negligent to a gross degree. We were stunned.

The heather is now beginning to grow again on the scorched hillside where the memorial cairn stands. However, the scars on that hillside will never completely disappear, and the pain of the families and friends of the pilots will remain until this shameful and sorry affair is corrected. The verdict is a serious miscarriage of justice. The bottom line is that there is no proof positive that the pilots were negligent. So many people—experts, lay people, and my constituents who mourned deeply with the relatives—believe that the verdict, the accusation, is unsafe and should be withdrawn forthwith. I hope that the Ministry of Defence and the Minister—a considerate, thinking person—will look at the matter again. If they do withdraw the verdict, they will be highly commended and congratulated on doing so.

Mr. Frank Field (Birkenhead): I shall let hon. Members into a not-too-well-guarded secret. When I spoke yesterday to the hon. Member for Tatton (Mr. Bell)—I learned from a previous intervention that he is a very honourable gentleman, and I would certainly subscribe to that—he said that he intended to speak for 17 minutes. Not only did he do that, he also took all interventions. He has said that he is running a campaign for shorter speeches, and within his 17 minutes plus interventions he has covered practically all the ground that the rest of us might wish to touch on.

I wish to make a single point. There is a fundamental difference between the position of those of us contributing to the debate and the unfortunate position in which my hon. Friend the Minister finds himself. We are disputing the Ministry's finding that there was gross negligence on the part of the pilots. To win, we need only establish doubt in one area, however small. The Government, given the position that they have adopted, to which I shall return in a moment, have to refute everything put forward. They cannot concede any of the doubts that people raise. They are, therefore, in the position in which the country found itself in the inter-war period, when poor old Stanley Baldwin said to the nation, "The bomber will get through". As my hon. Friend the Member for Tatton said, this campaign will get through: doubt will be established to a degree that the judgment must be overturned.

The Ministry of Defence put forward three technical arguments in an attempt to shore up its position. It says that, if one examines the simulation model that the manufacturer constructed for all those who wished to observe it, one can conclude that there was nothing wrong with the aircraft itself. However, the simulation model assumed that the pilots were in control, and doubt has already been cast on that. It ignores what we know from the wreckage about the position of the rudder, it ignores what we know about the intercom being switched off, when it was assumed that it was switched on, and it ignores the huge surge that occurs in these engines some of the time. When the Ministry of Defence did its own simulation, it did not do it on a Chinook model, nor did it even use a twin-motor helicopter. Therefore, there is at least a question mark over the safety of the plane.

What about the software—the FADEC system? We now know, although the inquiry did not know at the time—it found differently from the Ministry of Defence judgment—that the Ministry of Defence was suing the software suppliers. Does that not suggest that only someone very foolish or with much to hide would continue to maintain the position held by the Ministry of Defence?

What about the tactical air navigation system? There is a dispute about whether it was switched on. Whether on or off, we know that it was not much good in detecting where the crash had taken place.

The Ministry of Defence depends on those three areas of technical information in rebutting the simplest of questions: is there not enough doubt to overthrow the Ministry's decision? Those three technical areas look pretty shaky to me, a layman.

My hon. Friend the Member for Tatton referred to the problems with the Chinook reported since the crash, and to the difficulties that pilots have had in flying it. In one example the pilot thought that the aircraft had turned 180 deg. The one thing that my hon. Friend may have missed saying was that, when the pilots got that aircraft safely back to base, no one could account for that extraordinary manoeuvre. As he said, had it crashed, there would have been an all-too-easy answer to put forward in the public debate.

We come to the extraordinary role being played by Sir William Wratten in the public debate in selecting information that is good for his cause, while accusing us of doing exactly the same. That brings me back to the point that I wish to contribute to the debate. If we merely want to establish doubt, selecting information is what we are about. Only if one is in what I regard as the impossible position of saying that there is not reasonable doubt here can one not be caught in the game of selecting information to support one's case.

Of course, the Ministry is up against it with the crash, which was the worst in peacetime. My hon. Friend the Member for Argyll and Bute (Mrs. Michie) said that the plane was carrying some of the crown jewels of our security services, so one can imagine the horror back at base when what had occurred was reported, but that still does not account for the Ministry of Defence's stance.

At the moment, our campaign is focused narrowly on having an injustice rectified. However, what the Ministry must realise is that the longer the campaign goes on, the more serious the questions raised about the Ministry itself will be. We must ask whether Ministers would be able to overturn the decision, even if they wanted to, given the stance taken by senior officials in the Department. My experiences as a Minister do not rank with the seriousness of the matter, but departmental culture and the civil service hierarchy can lead such officials to take positions that thwart the wishes of Ministers.

Soon after the election, I asked the Department of Social Security to carry out a survey of fraud relating to family credit, a benefit that we were about to lose to the Treasury. In the 14 weeks towards the end of my period in Government, during which I had responsibility for dealing with fraud, I insisted that the benefit inquiry be undertaken. Not so long ago, I learned in this Chamber that, as soon as I had ceased to be Minister, papers went out to the Minister who succeeded me, and the decision was overthrown. I do not think for one moment that the Minister who succeeded me knew that the decision that he had made overthrew mine, but the Department was determined that the review should not take place, and it has not taken place.

Compared with what we are discussing today, that is an unimportant matter, but the Government should feel uneasy. We are coming to the end of the beginning of our campaign to have this decision overturned. The longer our campaign continues, the more serious it will become. It will move from a simple matter of rectifying a gross injustice to the more fundamental question of how Departments of State can operate against elected Ministers. If we do not win on the crucial point of natural justice soon, the campaign will fan out to the bigger issue. In that scenario, there will be some big losers.

10.32 am

Mr. Crispin Blunt (Reigate): I support the moves made by the hon. Member for Tatton (Mr. Bell) to raise this issue. I was in the Ministry of Defence, as special adviser to the Secretary of State, when the crash happened. Since the general election in 1997, I have been on the Defence Committee and have supported my right hon. Friend the Member for North-East Hampshire (Mr. Arbuthnot) and the right hon. and learned Member for North-East Fife (Mr. Campbell) in the efforts that they and the hon. Member for Tatton have made to have the issue reopened.

The more I have examined the issue, the clearer it has become that the judgment of the Royal Air Force's board of inquiry and of the two senior officers concerned turns on the issue of doubt. At the fatal accident inquiry, the sheriff found that he could not, on the balance of probabilities, find the pilots guilty of negligence. The criminal standard of proof—beyond reasonable doubt—was not used, so in effect that represents a criminal conviction hanging over the pilots' reputation, as the hon. Member for Tatton said. The RAF's regulations stipulate that there should be "no doubt whatsoever" if dead pilots are to be found guilty of gross negligence. The evidence simply does not stack up. The verdict cannot reasonably be sustained.

How did we get into such a position? As the right hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) said, we need produce only one interpretation of events that is realistic, or even possible, for that verdict to fall. A most experienced Chinook pilot, Squadron Leader Bob Burke, who has taken a prolonged interest in the matter, has described a scenario that would fit the description of the drama that may have occurred on the aircraft as it approached the Mull of Kintyre, and the reason why it did not turn to follow the sea route to Inverness, as expected. He said that seats in the Chinooks are dampened to work against the vibrations of the aircraft; if there is an on-board emergency, the dampening reinforces the bouncing motion, which makes control of the aircraft much more difficult. The hon. Member for Tatton said that the same thing had happened in an accident in the United States.

Reference was made to the Ministry of Defence briefing note, which stated that one reason for rebutting the views of those of us who have doubts about the accident was that no emergency signals were given. I understand that the IFF—identification friend or foe—setting was within one digit of the code used to signal an emergency on the aircraft; that is a small piece of evidence to rebut the Ministry of Defence position.

I want to examine the influences on Air Marshal Day and Air Marshal Wratten that led to their taking what now seems an extraordinary decision to overturn the verdict of the wing commander who conducted the board of inquiry and fly in the face of the evidence before them—in effect, to gainsay the sheriff who conducted the fatal accident inquiry. The first influence is the appalling embarrassment of the Royal Air Force being involved in an accident that killed the prime movers in internal security in Northern Ireland, which was a disaster for those operations. The second influence is the informal reputation of the special focus flight of the Royal Air Force—pilots who fly at the "full envelope" of their experience and ability. My experience is informal and entirely subjective, but their reputation when I was in the Army was that they were the best pilots. We would get them to do more for us than other pilots flying helicopters in the services because of their unique ability.

Perhaps it was thought that a lesson had to be learnt, that the culture in the SF flight had to be curbed, and it would be done on the back of the verdict. That may have been in the back of the air marshals' mind, but it would have been an unfair lesson if the verdict had been used for that purpose.

There is also the problem that if the pilots were not responsible, the focus would be on the management of the Chinook fleet. The Royal Air Force management was taking proper command decisions about the operational employment of the Chinook fleet at the time. There was the enormous difficulty of sending aircraft to Boeing to be upgraded from Chinook 1 to Chinook 2. There were all sorts of problems involved in bringing Chinook 2 into the fleet. There was thus an operational shortage of Chinook aircraft available for service on operations in Bosnia, Northern Ireland and elsewhere. I believe that the fleet was being flown with an acceptance of risk that those responsible would not have accepted in other circumstances. The decisions taken were entirely proper operational decisions.

There has to be a balance of risk in such circumstances, and if the helicopter is not working at its optimum but is still needed on operations in Bosnia, a decision has to be taken whether to use it. In my judgment, the proper decision was taken. If a small amount of risk has been accepted and an accident happens, one is faced with a problem. It takes a brave person to turn round and say, "Well, we knew we were managing this risk, but we accepted it, knowing that there were difficulties with how the Chinook 2 fleet was being brought into operation in the Royal Air Force."

I make those few points, which are based on my experience, simply to suggest why the air marshals may have arrived at their decision. One must accept the point that Air Marshal Wratten made in another inquiry. As I understand it, he refused to accept the verdict of gross negligence by a pilot in a single-seater aircraft, because he might have had an epileptic fit before he flew his aircraft into the side of a cliff. That is the standard of proof that he requires in such judgments. However, he says in this case that he was unable to find any explanation except gross negligence. That simply does not stack up. In this case, a verdict of "no doubt whatsoever" cannot be established.

The Ministry of Defence is understandably anxious to support the RAF chain of command. Of course Ministers do not want to let down air marshals who have put themselves in an exposed position. Perhaps it is to Ministers' credit that their initial reaction is to try to find ways of supporting the chain of command and discipline within the Royal Air Force. However, the verdict of "no doubt whatsoever" is simply not sustainable in this case, and it is time to reconsider it.

Mr. Martin O'Neill (Ochil): I congratulate the hon. Member for Tatton (Mr. Bell) on securing this debate. I am sorry that I missed his remarks because I was delayed. However, I have a rough idea of what has been said, as a number of hon. Members have been pursuing the issue for some time. When I first raised it in February 1997, in a debate on the RAF, I took the trouble of warning the relevant Minister that I planned to do so and I expected a reasonably full reply. To say that I was rather annoyed when I did not receive such a reply on the night of the debate is an understatement.

Those days are gone. Now we receive replies whenever we want them, and no end of briefings. In recent years, the Ministry of Defence has not been slow to make its case.

Mr. James Arbuthnot (North-East Hampshire): This is an unusual intervention. As the Minister who gave the hon. Member for Ochil (Mr. O'Neill) that reply in 1997, I want to take this opportunity to apologise to him. I was wrong to give an inadequate reply and in the stance that I took as a Minister. A gross injustice has been committed and it must be put right.

Mr. O'Neill: I am grateful for that intervention. It takes a great deal of political courage to make such a statement, and I appreciate it. I was not making cheap capital out of the issue, although I was rather annoyed at the time. I imagine that it is not easy for people to move from government to opposition. They must reflect on decisions to which they were party that they subsequently felt were wrong. It is significant that so many former Ministers think differently on this issue now that they have left office.

I shall not cover the technical details again, because we have already had the "too fast, too low, in bad weather" debate. Those issues have been addressed. The question of "no doubt whatsoever" must be the starting point.

There was some disquiet on the part of the Tapper family about what a fatal accident inquiry involved, whether a Scottish sheriff was like an English high sheriff and so on. I first became interested in the issue because of Mr. Tapper's concerns. I was able to allay the family's fears and I think that there was a sigh of relief when the FAI result came out. When they discovered the somersault that was done in the MOD following the board of inquiry, there was not just disquiet but anger. However, perhaps we have occasionally focused unduly on the plight of the two pilots and not thought enough about the two other service personnel who lost their lives, to say nothing of the 25 other people who were lost.

This morning, it was said that the incident was the biggest peacetime accident in RAF history. I do not agree that the accident took place in peacetime. We were in the middle of a war, and some of the most valuable assets involved in that war died as a result of the accident. At the time, most of us assumed that terrorist sabotage was involved. Thankfully, no such attack was shown to have taken place. It is significant that our debate takes place the day after the ground-breaking evidence about the armaments cache of the IRA was provided to the investigation team. Yesterday's evidence justifies the belief that that war may have ended. We no longer live in circumstances that could be regarded as war.

The hon. Member for Reigate (Mr. Blunt) said that when the RAF's resources were placed under strain, judgments had to be made and equipment had to be employed even though the RAF was not 100 per cent. certain about its safety, if the risks were calculable and the chance of fatalities was assumed to be minimal. As I understand it, those harsh judgments must be made in times of such stress. That supplies a context for some of the decisions and the reactions of some of the personnel involved.

I do not question the probity of the individuals who took the decisions, but I associate myself with the criticisms of opinions presented as facts. Such criticisms have been made repeatedly in the columns of respectable journals such as Computer Weekly, which went to great lengths to examine the software debate.

I have always been uneasy about the decision. I am not in a position to say whether those men were innocent, and I cannot say that there is no doubt whatever. However, I think that we should reopen the issue and start an independent inquiry that is acceptable to all concerned.

For a long time, some felt that we should not rake over the coals again, because an inquiry would unduly distress the families of the 25 security personnel, disquiet those of the two other service personnel, and at best reach a verdict that was merely satisfactory to the families of Mr. Cook and Mr. Tapper. Those days are past. We are now hearing from several families who want to find out once and for all why their loved ones died and whether anyone was responsible.

The Government must take a step of the character that the Opposition Chief Whip showed this morning. I support the Government, and some of my closest and oldest friends have been responsible for laying out their case. I have had passionate and occasionally distressing arguments with some Ministers, but not with my good friend the Under-Secretary. My fierce arguments about the issue with previous incumbents have given me no pleasure.

The security argument that if this incident had been shown to be the fault of the RAF, it would have been a propaganda coup for the IRA, or the forces of terrorism in Northern Ireland, no longer applies. There was also an argument that, if it had been shown to be caused by narrow procurement considerations—the availability of kit, the expenditure on defence— people could have made great political capital out of that. Those issues are no longer relevant.

We must return to the fundamental point that a great deal more evidence has emerged since the decision was handed down by the air marshals. I am sure that the Minister will attempt to discredit some, if not all, of that evidence. Time will probably prevent him from dealing with it all. However, it is fair to say that the evidence must be looked at dispassionately. Too many people in the Ministry of Defence have a vested interest in continuing to rubbish the evidence without adequate examination. Such examination can be afforded only by a full, open, credible inquiry. The form of inquiry that was held behind closed doors at the MOD is now a thing of the past. The families concerned would now have access to legal representation and there would be a proper weighing of the evidence by people other than those who take the final decision. That was not available at the time of the inquiry, and it should be available now.

I urge the Government to consider carefully the possibility of setting up an inquiry that would enjoy the confidence of the families of all concerned, of service personnel and, indeed, of the air marshals, whose credibility would be put on the line. The wealth of evidence that has emerged since the original decision demands reconsideration, and I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will look sympathetically at this issue.

Mr. David Rendel (Newbury): I am delighted to have the opportunity to take part in this debate, and I congratulate the hon. Member for Tatton (Mr. Bell) on securing it. This important subject has raised a great deal of concern among Members of Parliament as well as outside the House.

The concern relates to whether this is a case of the top brass in the armed services trying to divert blame from themselves, for their faults, on to those who, sadly, are no longer in a position to defend themselves. There are considerable worries that that might be behind the failure to reopen the inquiry.

My interest in the case first arose from a Public Accounts Committee hearing following a National Audit Office report on the way in which new military software and hardware was brought into use following its development. A large part of that hearing related to the Chinook accident. People outside this Chamber might think that they have identified the cause of this tragic accident as pilot error, but no one in this debate has suggested that the cause has yet been properly identified. I say that because I do not believe that it has been identified in any direction. I am not going to suggest that the cause has been identified as a technical malfunction. Everyone has accepted that it is at least possible that the cause was pilot error. However, the point is that there is no proof either way. A high degree of doubt still exists as to the real cause, and I want to concentrate on one significant aspect of that doubt.

The FADEC system—fully automated digital electronic control system—was introduced as a new engine control system in Chinook. The way in which that system was tested is of interest for today's debate. The system was to be tested by the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency based at Boscombe Down, which gave a contract to EDS-Scicon to look at the software. EDS-Scicon decided to use a system of testing known as static code analysis. Having tried to test the code by that method for some time, once those in the EDS-Scicon team had got through about 18 per cent. of the code they gave up. At one point they said that they were so concerned about the safety implications of their findings that they would stop testing and raise their concerns immediately with Hawker Siddeley, even though they had got only a short way through it. Later on they said that there was > an unquantifiable risk associated with the unverifiable nature of FADEC software.

They concluded that the rewriting of that software was—I use the word advisedly—"essential". When one is told that the tests on one's software have shown that its rewriting is essential, one can accept that suggestion, go through a rewrite and try to improve it; or one can do what the MOD did, which was to say that the testing method was unacceptable and use an alternative method.

Having seen that the static code analysis threw up a huge number of problems, the MOD decided instead to go in for dynamic testing of the code. It put the code through 70,000 hours of dynamic testing and, when that failed to throw up any problems, said that that proved that FADEC was a safe system for introduction. Since then, I understand that it has gone through over 100,000 hours of operational use, and the MOD is still saying that it has shown up no problems.

Those figures may sound large—testing a computer programme for several thousand hours without showing up any errors—but we have recently all become aware of a problem in the air traffic control system, which apparently showed up a fault in the software for the first time after 20 years. Those of us who have been involved in writing or analysing computer programmes know only too well that sometimes it takes a long time for a bug to show up and that sometimes circumstances occur so infrequently that a failure in the programme takes a long time to come to light. Therefore, the suggestion that the dynamic testing of this system over some 200,000 hours is sufficient to prove beyond all doubt that the system is safe in all circumstances seems a ludicrous exaggeration. The MOD should certainly take that into account in considering this sad accident.

The MOD's argument is that there has been no other FADEC-related failure and that, therefore, it must be a safe system. However, just before its meeting, the Public Accounts Committee was privileged to receive a letter from three members of the Select Committee on Defence, in which they made the following points. They say that after the Chinook Mk 2 was brought into operational service in November 1993 > pilots experienced serious FADEC-related problems. Engines would cut out or suddenly run out of control. Sometimes these problems left no trace.

The members of the Defence Committee quoted from an internal MOD memo, dated 11 January 1995, in which Captain Brougham of the Procurement Executive stated that the Chinook Mk 2 suffered from > a series of problems...many of which were traced eventually back to software design and systems integration problems.

Indeed, according to the letter from the members of Committee, the board of inquiry concluded:

> Nevertheless, an unforeseen technical malfunction, which would not necessarily have left any physical evidence, remained a possibility and could not be ruled out.

I do not suggest that any of that proves that FADEC was the cause of the accident. Sadly, we will probably never know whether that was so. Equally, however, we cannot say that FADEC was not the cause of the accident.

The issue is not simply a technical one concerning computer software, but one of fairness and justice. What happened is a travesty of justice, and the matter must not be left where it is. That would be grossly unfair—not only to the two pilots concerned, but, almost more importantly, to their families. The inquiry must be reopened.

11.1 am

Mr. Robert Key (Salisbury): We are not here today to question the honour or integrity of air marshals, nor are we discussing money or compensation. This is about natural justice, future morale in the Royal Air Force and a particular failure of Government. I congratulate the hon. Member for Tatton (Mr. Bell) on securing this important debate.

I was surprised by Air Marshal Sir William Wratten's article in The Sunday Times of 18 June. He stated:

we stand by every word we wrote in reaching the judgment we did.

He then demolished his own case by saying:

there is inevitably a degree of speculation as to the precise details of the events prior to impact.

He also said:

Why they elected to ignore the safe options open to them and pursue the one imposing the ultimate danger, we shall never know.

But that is all that we are saying. The RAF's own rules state that there must be "no doubt whatsoever"—a higher standard of proof than that required for murder.

Sir William also wrote:

The evidence taken by the board of inquiry with witnesses under oath, cannot now be replaced by hypotheses.

Yet that is precisely what he and Air Marshal Day did when they overturned the verdict of the board of inquiry and substituted their own judgment. The air marshals have never explained why they did that—not even at the countless briefings that were given to some of us, and which they clearly found so laborious.

That is one of the many reasons why the board of inquiry should be reopened. I have a great deal of sympathy for the Under-Secretary, the hon. Member for Kirkcaldy (Dr. Moonie). He has to hold the line maintained by his predecessors and others—including the previous Secretary of State, Lord Robertson, the right hon. Member for Hamilton, North and Bellshill (Dr. Reid), the hon. Members for Warley (Mr. Spellar) and for Newcastle upon Tyne, North (Mr. Henderson), Lord Gilbert and Baroness Symons. The members of the Mull of Kintyre group represent a greater continuity of interest and experience in this matter than current Ministers or most of the officials concerned. We intend to stay put for some time yet.

The Chinook crash verdict has all the hallmarks of a miscarriage of justice. Opposition Members believe that it should be overturned, or, if that is not technically and legally possible, that a new inquiry should be established. In the end, the Prime Minister will have to square up to this matter. Whatever Defence Ministers say, either an independent inquiry should be held now, or the verdict should be overturned. Otherwise, the issue will rumble on with claim and counter-claim, which will undermine RAF morale for years to come.

Like the right hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field), I too, as a Minister, have come up against the departmental culture and the civil servants who are the guardians of policy. Ministers come and go, but civil servants go on for ever. That is a great strength of the British system of government, but it can also be a great weakness. That weakness has been recognised by Sir Malcolm Rifkind, who was Secretary of State at the time, by my right hon. Friend the Member for North-East Hampshire (Mr. Arbuthnot) who today gave a brave speech, and by Lord Trefgarne, who was also a Minister in the MOD. I, too have an interest in this matter—the reputation of Boscombe Down, where aircraft testing and evaluation are carried out, has been impugned.

Every time more evidence is produced, the MOD says either that it is not new or that it is irrelevant. The official line is to adopt a stonewalling position, but that is untenable. Sir Malcolm Rifkind said on "Channel 4 News" on 13 October 1999 that it was an error of judgment not to tell the fatal accident inquiry about the EDS-Scicon report, the 3 June Boscombe Down memorandum, which grounded the Chinook fleet, or the Textron case. I entirely agree. As recently as 19 June, on the "Today" programme, Sir William Wratten said:

We can never know precisely what happened.

Exactly so.

There are still some 38 Chinooks flying. No one suggests that they are unsafe aircraft, but it concerns me that the majority of them are still to be fitted with cockpit voice recorders or accident data recorders, which were promised for the fleet some years ago and mentioned in the Defence Committee's report. On 18 November 1997, I asked the Minister for the Armed Forces how the programme was going. I was told:

The equipment will be fitted to the first 6 aircraft by December 1998, and embodied on the rest of the fleet by late Spring 2000.—[Official Report, 18 November 1997; Vol. 301, c. 153.]

On 19 May 1999, I asked where we had got to in this regard, and the Minister for the Armed Forces referred me to a letter from Sir Robert Walmsley, which stated:

We now plan on having the first six helicopters fitted by late November this year. The plan to fit the remainder of the Chinook fleet by the end of 2000, remains as previously advised.—[Official Report, 19 May 1999; Vol. 331, c. 345.]

On 1 February, Baroness Park of Monmouth asked in the other place how things were getting along. She was told by Baroness Symons:

Cockpit Voice and Flight Data Recorders have now been fitted to four of the RAF Chinook Mark 2/2a Fleet ... This reflects the six-week period required to fit and test each aircraft.—[Official Report, House of Lords, 26 June 2000; Vol. 614, c. 51W.]

Most of the RAF's Chinooks have not been fitted with that equipment. What is the latest position?

Much has been made of the Defence Committee's report on the Chinook crash on the Mull of Kintyre, which was published on 13 May 1998. It has subsequently become clear that the Committee was misled—unintentionally, I am sure—on at least five, if not six, major points. Nevertheless, events have moved on and new evidence has appeared. That is important—we should not simply let the matter run, and people should not continue to believe that what the Defence Committee was told was beyond doubt. I am grateful to the hon. Member for Newbury (Mr. Rendel) for drawing attention to the fact that members of the Defence Committee are fully aware of that.

The many technical arguments that have been used, not least in the press, are at least as important as the moral arguments. They point to doubt in this context. In the case of the Chinook that crashed, there was no flight data recorder, no cockpit voice recorder, no radar trace, no emergency call and no information from the wreckage that showed for certain how the aircraft was performing on its flight path on the approach to the mull. However, the decision was taken to blame the pilots and thereby to exonerate the equipment. From little more than two pieces of information—a waypoint changed in respect of an unknown position and a height reading, also taken in respect of an unknown position—and in the absence of clear contradictory information, the MOD said that the aircraft was under control and travelling in a straight line directly towards the mull. Officials have made much of computer simulations, but they provided clues about the last three or four seconds only, and assumed that the aircraft was under control until that point.

The main issue is whether the pilots flew into the mull compulsorily or voluntarily, and no one can answer that on the basis of the wreckage. What is known is that the helicopter's FADEC engine control software had a history of problems, and some of the most serious design flaws were not drawn to the attention of accident investigators. In conducting its formal inquiry, the air accidents investigation branch relied on the assistance of FADEC's manufacturers, and was unaware that the Ministry of Defence was suing the manufacturers at the time of the crash for failing to show a duty of care in the design, development and testing of FADEC.

Those and many other concerns have not been addressed satisfactorily, and we are alarmed by the many incorrect statements that were made at various times.

Mr. Geoffrey Clifton-Brown (Cotswold): Mr. Brian Trubshaw, the Concorde experimental pilot, who is a constituent of mine, wrote to me on 12 October 1999. The letter, a copy of which I sent to the Ministry of Defence, refers to the Chinook crash in the United States in 1996. It states:

> Subsequent investigation found electrical failure and the pilots were cleared of blame. Boeing settled for $4 million. The Minister—that is the Minister for the Armed Forces—

> also makes no reference to Boeing's admittance that all Chinooks flying between 1992 and 1996 were subject to power problems due to salt water seepage. ZD576 flew over a lot of salt water.

It is clear that technical doubts exist about this particular Chinook.

Mr. Key: Of course, my hon. Friend is right and I am grateful to him, because he has saved me the need to go into further technical detail. Surely we have established beyond reasonable question that doubt, at least, surrounds the matter.

Why does this issue continue to matter to serving RAF personnel and their families? If you are in any doubt, Mr. Deputy Speaker, you need only read the personal testimonies of service men in the RAF, and I shall quote from one or two. The first states:

> After serving in the RAF myself for 12 years, I can't believe that the Government, MoD and RAF have ruined the reputations of a flight crew and their families in this manner. It makes me angry to think that the time I spent in the service of my country was for nothing...current service personnel and their families serving the country are apparently doing their "bit" for nothing.

Another e-mail states:

> As a former Flight Lt who served at RAF Aldergrove at the time of the crash, I most certainly support your campaign to have the pilots names cleared...the techniques of half-truths employed by the MoD in this case came as no surprise.

This issue really does matter. According to one submission to the military pilots' internet site, > it may have been pilot error, it may have been something else. Until we know for sure what happened we can not blame the crew. A sad decision that reflects badly on both the Minister—> and those who advise him.

RAF Odiham's Chinook Wokka website is very good, but if one turns to the Links page, one discovers that the official RAF Odiham site has been deleted. Why has it been deleted?

What is the way forward? In the other place, Lord Jacobs asked the Government a number of questions. He asked whether the deceased pilots could be found guilty of gross negligence if the inquiry were reopened under current rules, and if not, why not. The Minister of State, Baroness Symons, replied:

> The terms under which the inquiry may be re-opened, in the event that new evidence came to light which justified that course, would need to be considered at that time.—[Official Report, House of Lords, 21 June 2000; Vol. 614, c. 29W.]

It seems that the Ministry of Defence is not closing the door on this inquiry.

There is one other clue to the way forward. William Tench, who was chief inspector of the Civil Aviation Authority in 1986, was commissioned in the late 1980s by Lord Trefgarne to review the procedures pertaining to service boards of inquiry. His report was never published, but it was critical of the process and stated:

> involvement of some Station Commanders, Air Officer Commanding's Staff Officers and even the Commander-in-Chief, is an unwelcome intrusion upon what should be the complete independence of the Board of Inquiry.

The relevance to ZD576 is that both air marshals concerned were involved in the introduction of the Mk 2 into service and some believe that their independence was compromised from the start.

I hope that the Minister will now agree to publish the Tench report. It would be possible to reopen the inquiry. The Secretary of State recently wrote to my right hon. Friend the Member for North-West Hampshire (Sir G. Young) and stated:

> The power to convene, or re-open a Board of Inquiry may be exercised by any two members of the Air Force Board of Defence Council—of which I am a member. The other 10 members include Air Marshal Day and the Minister for the Armed Forces, the hon. Member for Warley.

I believe that the answer lies in Ministers' hands. There is no technical reason why they cannot reopen the inquiry and, in the interests of the dead pilots and of the future morale of Royal Air Force personnel and their families, those Ministers should now do so.

11.15 am

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence (Dr. Lewis Moonie): May I apologise to the hon. Member for Tatton (Mr. Bell) for my inadvertent discourtesy in arriving late, and for the absence abroad on departmental business of my hon. Friend the Minister for the Armed Forces, who would otherwise have responded to the debate.

I congratulate the hon. Gentleman on securing the debate and my right hon. Friend the Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) and others who have contributed to it. As we pass the sixth anniversary of the tragic crash on the Mull of Kintyre, the matter continues to attract attention. I pay tribute to the hon. Gentleman's sincerity and the measured and thoughtful way in which he made his points.

Much has been said and written about the accident over the years, often reflecting the unswerving determination of the fathers of the two dead pilots to clear their sons' names. None of us can feel anything but sympathy for them and their families. Equally, we remember the families of the other 27 people who died in that crash on 2 June 1994.

The hon. Member for Tatton and others raised a number of issues and I shall do my best to respond to them. I hope that he will forgive me if I say that none of them is new. Sadly, some of the reporting in the media about this accident has not reflected the profession's high standard of regard for proof and accuracy to which he subscribed with such distinction over the years. I want to take the opportunity to correct some of the inaccuracies.

The circumstances of the crash, as established by the Royal Air Force board of inquiry are as follows. On 2 June 1994, Chinook ZD576 departed from RAF Aldergrove on a flight to Fort George, Inverness. The aircraft had a crew of four and carried 25 military and civilian passengers who were to attend a conference in Inverness. It took off at 17.42 and at approximately 18.00 it crashed on the Mull of Kintyre. All on board were killed.

Before departing RAF Aldergrove, the pilots obtained an accurate weather forecast for their flight. They elected to carry out the flight under visual rather than instrument flight rules. Under visual rules, aircrew must remain clear of cloud and are required to keep the surface in sight. The weather forecast was suitable for a flight under those rules, but it warned of poor conditions affecting the Mull of Kintyre, as is often the case, and a bad weather contingency plan would have been required. The highest point of the Mull of Kintyre is 1,463 ft above sea level. Instrument flight rules stipulate that an aircraft must be least 1,000 ft above the height of the highest obstacle along the intended track if the crew is not in visual contact with the ground. Transit across the Irish sea was uneventful and conducted in clear conditions, but, as forecast, there was very low cloud and poor visibility around the mull.

A witness reported that, at a distance of about two nautical miles from the mull, or about 40 seconds from impact, the aircraft was flying at a height estimated to be between 200 and 400 ft. The witness estimated that visibility was about a mile and noted that the mull was covered in cloud and fog. Other witness statements from those who were on the mull at the time, including that of the lighthouse keeper, also refer to the fog and poor visibility.

The first waypoint or landmark that the pilots entered on the on-board navigational computer was the Mull of Kintyre lighthouse. At 0.95 nautical miles, or about 20 seconds before impact, the crew released the computer from its fix on the Mull of Kintyre and set it to indicate the bearing and distance to the next waypoint at Corran, 87 miles to the north. At that point, the pilots knew how close to the mull they were, and, given the deteriorating weather and the strict visibility requirements of visual flight rules, they should have already chosen an alternative course. As they had not done so, they could—and, under the rules, should—have either turned away from the mull immediately or slowed down and climbed to a safe altitude.

At 15 to 18 seconds before impact, the aircraft was at a height of only 468 ft, as recorded on its tactical air navigation system. The pilots would have seen the same information on the radio altimeter, but even so, the aircraft was climbing only gently at that point. At four and a half seconds before impact, the crew performed an emergency manoeuvre and climbed about 150 ft in those final seconds. The aircraft crashed at a height of 812 ft, at a ground speed of 151 knots, or 174 mph.

The evidence given by the eyewitness about the situation 40 seconds before the crash, and the evidence that the crew reset the navigational computer about 20 seconds before the crash are telling indicators of the fact that, at the time, the pilots were not grappling with an in-flight emergency, yet they flew on, contrary to instrument and visual flight rules. The evidence is that they were already too close to the cloud-covered mass of the mull and were travelling too low and too fast. Had the aircraft been flying over the sea, as it should have been under visual flight rules, none of the relevant factors or scenarios would have had an influence strong enough to prevent such an experienced crew from maintaining safe flight.

Those are the findings of the Royal Air Force's board of inquiry, duly convened and constituted under statute for the purpose of investigating such accidents. The board of inquiry had available to it a wealth of expertise and experience in all the relevant disciplines, including helicopter and aircraft operations. In addition, there was the considerable technical expertise of the air accidents investigation branch. Other authorities, such as the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency, and the manufacturers of the aircraft—of its engines, equipment and avionics—made evidence available to the inquiry. The board's findings, together with a mass of technical and supporting information, have been made public.

Two years ago, the Defence Committee produced a helpful report on the lessons to be learnt from the Chinook crash. The Committee considered the suggestion that the crash pointed to the existence of fundamental flaws in the design of the Chinook Mk 2 and its components, but found no compelling evidence to support it. The Public Accounts Committee, whose report we await, recently inquired into the Ministry of Defence's processes for the acceptance of equipment into service and took the Chinook Mk 2 as a case study.

I shall turn to the points raised today. I shall answer them as fully as possible, and I shall write to hon. Members on any matters on which I do not have the necessary technical informati .. The hon. Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key) raised a point about the Tench report. The report's recommendations were not acted on when it was issued in 1987. We cannot rewrite history. The board of inquiry was conducted under the procedures that existed in 1994, which also applied to other inquiries at that time. I am aware of requests for the release of copies of the report, but hon. Members will be aware of the convention that existing Ministers cannot be made aware of advice given to previous Ministers, nor of those Ministers' views on the report. That convention may exasperate us, but it has always been applied, irrespective of the Administration.

Officials are carefully considering whether the report can be released. I appreciate that it has been outstanding for a few months and I hope that the Department will provide an answer in the near future.

Much reference was made to uncommanded flying control movements and other technical problems with the Chinook. The AAIB investigated in detail all relevant technical aspects of the crash and carried out a thorough assessment of control system components, but found no sign of pre-impact failure or malfunction. The hon. Member for Newbury (Mr. Rendel), who went into detail on the matter, missed the point. He and others suggested that in less than 20 seconds after the waypoint change that preceded impact, there was a major emergency that cleared itself and yet left no trace. As Air Chief Marshal Wratten said, negligence on the part of the pilots preceded the waypoint change; had the aircraft been flying as it should have been over the sea under visual flight rules, or at safety altitude under instrument flight rules, any temporary problem of the sort described could easily have been dealt with.

I shall write to the hon. Member for Newbury on the technical points relating to the FADEC process and the checking of the software sensor, because it is not an appropriate matter for a debate when time is limited. He may, of course, distribute copies of my letter to other members of the Committee. The suit mentioned by the hon. Member for Salisbury concerned a case of negligence by the manufacturers during a ground test of one of the helicopters—it was not about the FADEC system itself. The IFF setting was considered by the AAIB but thought to be of no significance in the crash.

The hon. Member for Salisbury suggested that the Ministry of Defence was dismissive of information provided and did not give it proper consideration. I refute that: all arguments and theories were examined compassionately and in depth. Ministers and officials went to unprecedented lengths to explain the rationale behind the board's findings and will continue to do so whenever points are raised with us.

What I have said will seem unsatisfactory to those who believe passionately that the Ministry of Defence is wrong in this case. I came to my job after a lifetime in an occupation in which I was taught to question severely any information that I was given—I was taught always to be sceptical and to look for alternative answers. I adopted that attitude in considering the information before me recently. Somewhat reluctantly, as a natural sceptic, I concluded that the findings of Air Marshals Wratten and Day and the board of inquiry were correct, and that there was negligence on the flight prior to the vehicle entering cloud which, sadly, was responsible for the death of 29 people.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. John McWilliam): Order. The Minister described this as a Committee and said that the hon. Member for Newbury could pass a letter around. This is not a Committee, it is a Chamber of the House and if the hon. Gentleman wants the information to go to all Members he should put it in the Library.

Global Warming

Mrs. Helen Brinton (Peterborough): The potentially devastating effects of world climate change through global warming are becoming increasingly clear. The world will be 3 per cent. warmer in a hundred years' time and the sea level is projected to rise by 40 cm by 2080. Sixty million people will be at risk of flooding and many will have to flee their homes permanently.

The Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution has only recently underlined the starkness of the threat and the scale of the challenge. Refrigeration is contributing significantly to the problem. Under the Montreal protocol, chlorofluorocarbons and hydrochlorofluorocarbon refrigerants were to be banned because of their potential to damage the ozone layer. Most users of refrigerants decided to switch to hydrofluorocarbons, which do not deplete ozone; however, they have a significant global warming potential or GWP. The Government estimate that, on average, HFCs have 2,274 times the GWP of carbon dioxide. If anything, the trend of recent scientific research is to rate the GWP of HFCs ever higher.

As long ago as 1995, the United Kingdom Government panel on sustainable development recommended phasing out HFCs. Kyoto included HFCs among the emissions that must be reduced to stop global warming. As "Climate Change: draft United Kingdom programme" published in March stated, the trouble is that as the mass change to HFCs projections show, there is > a strong underlying upward trend in emissions, as HFCs are used as a replacement for ozone-depleting substances.

It continued that the Government > believes that this trend is unsustainable in the longer term and that action should be taken to limit the projected growth

A recent study by Atlantic Consulting concluded that, by 2010, HFCs might represent 4 per cent. of the United Kingdom's greenhouse gas emissions. On that basis, phasing out HFCs would help us to achieve more than a third of our legally binding target reduction of 12.5 per cent. of greenhouse gases.

We will not learn to live without refrigeration unless we really have to, so what can we do? Fortunately, there are alternatives: technically, they are known as NIKs—not in kinds—most of which are represented by hydrocarbons, or HCs. HCs do not damage the ozone layer; their GWP is negligible. They are extremely efficient and effective refrigerants and, most importantly, the technology is available and they are in increasingly wide usage. There is no refrigeration application for which NIKs cannot be used. That is why they are being used in supermarkets, petrol forecourts, art galleries, banks and people's homes, and even in the McDonald's restaurant in the famous dome.

The Government have toughened their stance on HFCs. In the same publication on climate change they said:

> HFCs are not a sustainable technology in the long term—the successful phase out of ozone-depleting substances is being achieved with a range of technologies and HFCs are only necessary to replace ozone-depleting substances in some applications. The Government believe that continued technological developments will mean that HFCs may eventually be able to be replaced in these remaining applications. HFCs should be used only when other safe, technically feasible, cost effective and more environmentally acceptable alternatives do not exist. HFC emission reduction strategies should not undermine commitments to phase out ozone-depleting substances under the Montreal protocol. HFC emissions will not be allowed to rise unchecked.

The balance of evidence in the HFC debate has shifted. For many years, the discussion centred almost entirely around the availability of alternatives to HFCs. The HFC producers, of course, asserted that there were none. However, after years of successful development and use, much of it in the United Kingdom, it is clear that a range of alternatives is available and that the burden of proof is on the chemical industry to prove that HFCs are necessary.

That leaves us with two challenges. Those who make and profit from HFCs will want to fight their corner. They have alleged that HFCs will prove to be an insignificant part of the global warming issue. However, the current volume of HFCs in the atmosphere is 1.6 billion tonnes of carbon dioxide equivalent, which is rising by 5 per cent. a year. That is not insignificant. They have also said that the energy efficiency of HFCs more than offsets their direct GWP. Yet an analysis of some 50 studies of the relative energy efficiency of HFC and environmentally benign HC refrigeration shows that, on average, HCs give an improvement in energy efficiency of 6 per cent. in domestic use, 15 per cent. in commercial use, 9 per cent. in air conditioning and 10 per cent. in heat pumps.

It is true that HCs are highly flammable, but so are many other substances that we use every day. The technology is well proven and safe. In Germany, which has some of the strictest attitudes and laws on health and safety, more than 95 per cent. of domestic refrigerators use HCs, and after more than 70 million operational years, not a single accident has taken place. The polluters continue to promote their pollution, but I urge my hon. Friend the Minister to stand firm, because the Government's policy is right.

However, a second challenge awaits. How do we progress from having good intentions to achieving the needed market shift? I suggest that we consider incentives to change. Will my hon. Friend confirm that supermarkets that want to reduce their climate change levy might be able to negotiate away part of their liability if they use HCs in refrigeration? Will he consider including NIK refrigerant and air-conditioning systems in the technologies covered by the enhanced capital allowance scheme and in the definition of low-carbon technologies, which will determine eligibility to receive encouragement from the £50 million energy efficiency fund?

Will the Minister study the Danish proposal to tax the consumption of refrigerants in accordance with their global warming potentials? Lord Marshall had more than one economic instrument in mind when he examined the problem, and he was highly sceptical about the ability of voluntary measures to reduce HFC leakage.

Companies investing now should not be locked into capital stock that does not meet good environmental standards. Action taken this year can prevent pollution that will otherwise cause global damage in the next 20 years of equipment life. Developing countries such as China, India and Indonesia are moving straight from CFCs to HCs, without bothering with the now dated technology of HFCs.

I shall now speak wearing my Select Committee on Environmental Audit hat. Only some Departments and quangos are shaping up to the challenge by installing green refrigeration where possible. I do not yet see a central push covering all the Departments and the devolved Administrations. In hospitals alone, there must be enormous potential to convert refrigeration to environmentally benign systems. Is a mechanism available to co-ordinate such a scheme? That would show genuinely joined-up government, to use the common phrase.

I endorse the Government's policy. It is right to get tough on HFCs. I do not blame the manufacturers for defending their vested interests, and I am sure that my hon. Friend the Minister will listen carefully to their arguments. I urge him to consider a range of incentives to produce the market shift that we need to avoid decades of unnecessary pollution.

Last, but by no means least, it is pleasing that the United Kingdom is the world leader in developing the alternative technology. Our technical advantage presents us with an opportunity to take a rewarding industrial and political lead. The sooner we move, the sooner the benefit will arrive.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (Mr. Chris Mullin): My hon. Friend the Member for Peterborough (Mrs. Brinton) raises an important matter. Global warming is probably the most important environmental issue facing the world. I shall begin by making a few general points about the action that the Government are taking to tackle the threat of climate change, then respond briefly to some of the points that my hon. Friend made.

Evidence mounts that climate change has begun. Globally, the past decade was the warmest recorded. In the United Kingdom, four of the five warmest years ever measured fell in the past decade. We are now continually reminded of our vulnerability to climate events. We cannot say for sure that events such as the storms that hit Europe at the end of last year or the floods that devastated Mozambique are the direct result of man-made changes, but we can expect such extreme weather events to become more frequent and more severe as temperatures rise.

Despite the milder winters that we have recently enjoyed, the United Kingdom will not escape some unwelcome effects, which could also involve huge costs. We know that we shall not be able to avoid some climate change. Greenhouse gases that have already built up in the atmosphere will make some rise in temperature and sea level inevitable. We must work together to ensure that we are best placed to adapt to the impacts that we cannot prevent.

However, all is not doom and gloom. The worst effects of climate change can be avoided if every country, Government, organisation and individual acts now to cut emissions. That will be a major challenge, but it is one to which we must all respond. At the Rio Earth summit in 1992, countries agreed voluntarily to return their emissions to 1990 levels by 2000. The United Kingdom will be one of the few OECD countries to meet that target.

At Kyoto in 1997, developed countries agreed collectively to reduce emissions by 5.2 per cent. during the period 2008 to 2012. For the first time, targets will be legally binding and different countries have taken on different targets to reflect their national circumstances. Following our negotiations at European level, the United Kingdom agreed to a 12.5 per cent. cut. Although the Kyoto agreement was a significant step, it is only the first stage in an effort that will need to continue throughout this century and beyond. Much bigger cuts in emissions—perhaps 60 per cent. or more—will be needed globally if we are to avoid devastating climate change.

The draft climate change programme that we published on 9 March provides a new, strategic focus for action against climate change in the United Kingdom. It sets out the way in which we shall meet our Kyoto target and move towards our domestic goal of a 20 per cent. reduction in carbon dioxide emissions. It builds on the positive action that business, local government and other organisations are taking. It signals that changes will be needed in the long term. It also provides a framework that draws together existing actions and a series of new measures that will ensure that the UK's emissions continue to fall during this decade and beyond.

The draft programme covers all sectors of the economy, and we have focused on flexible, cost-effective policies that will be good for the economy and for people, as well as for the environment. The refrigeration sector, on which my hon. Friend focused, is important. We all recognise the huge social benefits that refrigeration brings. We all use and need refrigeration, but it has an impact on the environment in terms of energy usage and emissions of refrigerants. Over the years, the industry has made great efforts to improve the energy efficiency of refrigeration and air-conditioning systems, and we hope that improvements will continue to be made. However, we also face the challenge of reducing HFC emissions from refrigeration and air-conditioning equipment.

As my hon. Friend explained, HFCs are powerful greenhouse gases and, as they are increasingly being used as replacements for ozone-depleting substances such as CFCs and HCFCs, emissions are forecast to grow strongly in the near future. This trend is unsustainable in the longer term, and action must be taken to minimise emissions. That is why we announced our new position on HFCs in the draft climate change programme. I am aware of the concern expressed by industry in relation to this announcement, and I am grateful for this opportunity to explain what we are trying to achieve.

It is vital that our position on HFCs is seen as a whole, in the context of the proposed measures set out in the draft programme, which states that > HFCs are not a sustainable technology in the long term.

However, it also recognises that they are necessary to replace ozone-depleting substances in some applications, and that HFC emission reduction strategies should not undermine commitments to phase out ozone-depleting substances under the Montreal protocol. This is very important, as the new European Commission regulation on ozone-depleting substances, which comes into force later this year, will ban CFCs and introduce tighter controls on HCFCs.

For some, it will be necessary to switch to HFCs, but we are now asking industry and users to look closely at all the alternatives and select those that are more environmentally acceptable. Safety, technical feasibility and cost-effectiveness should be taken into account before investment decisions are taken. Some businesses have already made the move. I think that my hon. Friend mentioned the example of Iceland Frozen Foods.

I want now to respond to some of my hon. Friend's suggestions for encouraging the move to alternative refrigerants. In relation to the climate change levy, she mentioned reduced liability for supermarkets using hydrocarbons. Eligibility for a discount in respect of the levy is based on the sectors covered by parts A1 and A2 of the Pollution Prevention and Control Regulations. That has a clear rationale, because it covers the main energy-intensive sectors, and firms covered by those parts of the regulations must operate in an energy-efficient manner not required of other firms. The climate change levy is designed to improve energy efficiency in the business and public sectors. The Government welcome improvements that may flow from using hydrocarbon refrigerants, but they do not intend to open eligibility for a negotiated agreement to those who take action in this area.

As I am sure my hon. Friend appreciates, decisions under the enhanced capital allowance scheme are a matter for the Chancellor. However, refrigeration equipment is one of eight technologies listed in the March Budget that the Government intend to make eligible for the enhanced allowances. Decisions on which low carbon technologies will be supported through the energy efficiency fund will be made in the light of the outcome of the forthcoming spending review, on which I am not in a position to elaborate.

As regards the tax on refrigerants, the Government share my hon. Friend's aim in tackling the issue of climate change and, as a matter of course, will keep a close eye on environmental developments and proposals in other European Union countries. I should add, however, that Lord Marshall's report focused on the business use of energy rather than on refrigerants. The Government have set out their environmental tax policy in their statement of intent on environmental taxation.

As regards the public sector's use of alternative refrigerants, Departments are encouraged to avoid HFCs wherever they can, although, as for other organisations, there may be occasions when a non-HFC solution is not feasible. My hon. Friend is right to identify hospitals as significant users of refrigerants, and I shall ask my officials to explore with their counterparts in the Department of Health the scope for further reductions in HFCs.

In the long term, however, as a result of continued technological improvement, HFCs may eventually be replaced in the applications where they are still needed. In the meantime, we shall discuss with industry the measures that can be taken to minimise emissions from these sources. We hope that that can be done by strengthening our voluntary agreements with industry.

The consultation on the draft climate change programme has now ended, and we are carefully considering the responses. We plan to publish a final programme later this year, which we hope will provide a framework that enables the United Kingdom to face the challenge of climate change and ensure that we safeguard our planet for the future.

Beta Interferon

12 noon

On resuming—

Mr. Steve Webb (Northavon): Provision for people with multiple sclerosis is an issue that has concerned hon. Members of all parties throughout the lifetime of this Parliament, and doubtless before that. The specific issue of beta interferon has been raised a by a number of hon. Members. It was raised last year by the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow), and more recently by my hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam (Mr. Burstow).

Today's short debate is timely, given a recent leak from the National Institute for Clinical Excellence, suggesting that NICE will recommend that provision of beta interferon for new applicants should not be funded by the national health service. That announcement was one of the few that has made me genuinely angry since becoming a Member of Parliament, because the hopes and expectations of MS sufferers had been raised by the involvement of NICE. Given the drug's effectiveness for particular groups of sufferers—which I shall discuss in a moment—the assumption was that there would be a positive outcome. I know from first-hand experience that both those who receive and those who might receive the drug were angry at the leaked announcement.

In this short debate, I want to discuss three aspects. The first is the effectiveness or otherwise of beta interferon, the second is why and whether the drug should cost so much, and the third is the process through which any Government must decide whether to pay for expensive drug treatments of this type.

On the drug's effectiveness, I shall begin by reading an excerpt from a letter that I received from a constituent. She first contacted me more than two years ago, at a time when her health authority, Avon, would not pay for beta interferon, although she would have got it had she lived in a neighbouring authority. She and I, with the Multiple Sclerosis Society and others, waged a campaign and were delighted when Avon health authority agreed at the beginning of last year to fund a limited number of courses of treatment—about 12.

My constituent was one of those who benefited. She now receives beta interferon, and it is paid for on the national health service. She said that the drug > is effective in slowing down the progression of my disease.

> During 1997 I suffered several attacks and was unable to work for three months. I was faced with the prospect of having to use a wheelchair within months. Since starting with Beta Interferon in December 1997—at which point, she was paying for private treatment—

> I have had only two attacks and I am still managing to walk and work.

It is easy for those who do not suffer from this disease unthinkingly to use the phrase "a relapse", but it is clear that relapses can be devastating to MS sufferers who, as a result, cannot work or look after their children. Any drug that can reduce the number and frequency of relapses will make more than a marginal difference to those concerned. I am not saying that beta interferon is a cure, but it is clear that, for some, it can bring about a real and substantial improvement in the quality of life.

Mr. Paul Burstow (Sutton and Cheam): My hon. Friend is right to draw attention to the many MS sufferers who feel that beta interferon treatment results in reduced relapses. Does he agree that the Minister needs to explain why NICE has apparently refused to take evidence from MS sufferers on the drug's impact on the quality of their lives?

Mr. Webb: My hon. Friend makes an important point. Clearly, anecdotal, individual experience does not provide the cast-iron proof that, say, a double-blind controlled trial might provide. If a body that is charged with assessing the consequences of spending money on a drug does not hear at first hand about the effects of that drug and the benefits that it can bring to real people in their real lives, it misses part of the story. It is therefore regrettable that that does not appear to have been fed into the process.

After I had secured this debate, my office received a phone call from a head teacher in Essex, who said that three members of staff in his school suffer from multiple sclerosis. Two of them receive beta interferon, and have benefited greatly from it. One had previously taken six months' sick leave. Since receiving the drug, one has taken just two days off sick and the other has taken three days. Furthermore, they are less dependent on steroids.

The head teacher pointed out that at his school the public sector pays £150 a day for supply teaching, and remarked on the cost to children in terms of disruption. His closing comment was that, as an employer, he feels that the Government need to do some joined-up thinking. One of my concerns about the process is that the cost-benefit comparison does not take a broad enough view of the potential benefits to people who receive the drug—not only to their individual lives, but to society and the economy as a whole. NICE is receiving only a partial picture.

I discussed the drug with Dr. Malcolm Campbell of Frenchay health care trust, who is one of the leading MS specialists in my area. His key point was that there is no alternative to the drug. People who can benefit from it have access to no other form of treatment to make their relapses less frequent. I accept that NICE is considering general provision for people with MS, and that there is a strong case for greater and improved provision for such people. However, it is a false dichotomy to say that some people can have a drug that prevents the disease from progressing, slows it down or makes it less awful, or other people can have proper community care—as though there is a fixed pot for MS sufferers, which can supply drugs or support, but not both. NICE is not there to make those kinds of decisions.

The consultant said that in the rest of Europe about one in eight MS sufferers typically benefit from the drug, whereas in the United Kingdom the figure is around one in 30. That leads to a fundamental question. Is the rest of Europe wrong, in that the drug is being given to people who do not need it or benefit from it, or we are wrong? During last week's Prime Minister's Questions, the Prime Minister said that only 12 per cent. of sufferers in France, Germany and Italy receive the drug. However, in this country the figure is only 3 per cent. He argued that the treatment will not benefit everyone, which is true, but it could certainly benefit more people than are currently receiving it.

There is currently no viable alternative to beta interferon. It clearly benefits people who suffer from relapses followed by periods of remission. In the long term, the situation is less clear. The consultant told me that some people have been taking the drug for five years, and that we do not know much beyond that in terms of whether it wears off or has long-term beneficial effects. However, the potential is there, and it would be disturbing if funding were to be cut off at this stage.

I want to refer briefly to the vexed issue of the cost of the treatment. I believe that a figure of £10,000 for a year's course is frequently used. Dr. Campbell told me yesterday that £8,500 is now more accurate, because of the Government's efforts to put pressure on suppliers to bring the cost down. The Government are to be applauded for that. However, he also told me that whereas the figure is £8,500 in the United Kingdom, it is $8,500 in the United States. For some reason, the same drug is substantially cheaper in the US. I have been told that the same is true of Portugal, but I do not know whether that is so.

In all debates on expensive drugs, questions must be asked about the prices that are charged by drug companies and manufacturers, and whether the Government are doing enough to apply pressure to bring those prices down. I accept that companies need a return on their research and an incentive to do that research, but is the balance right? If they are prepared to sell the drug for $8,500 a year in the US, why should the figure in the UK be £8,500?

My final point concerns the process by which the Government, or any Government, should decide about such issues: the NICE approach, so to speak. The principle that there should be an independent body that can do what dozens of individual health authorities across the country cannot reasonably be expected to do—that is, to review the written clinical evidence, take oral evidence and spend time and money evaluating the clinical effectiveness of the drug—is right. It will help to reduce unevenness in this country, of which we are all aware.

Of what should the institute take account? I believe that it is taking account of matters that are not its legitimate concern. Hon. Members do not have the clinical expertise to judge whether the treatment works, although such evidence exists. It is widely accepted that it reduces the number of relapses by about a third.

Originally, NICE had a remit for clinical excellence and effectiveness, but its remit has been extended. In August 1999—I do not suppose that August is prime time for hon. Members to scrutinise legislation—a short statutory instrument was laid before the House stating that NICE's constitution should be amended. It stated:

after the words "promotion of clinical excellence" there should be inserted the words "and of the effective use of available resources".

In a sense, no one could object to that—rather like motherhood and apple pie, all of us approve of the effective use of available resources. The question is, who should decide what is available? The answer must be that the elected Government of the day, rather than clinicians, should do so. If NICE took such decisions, it would be second-guessing political decisions on the Government's behalf. For example, the Government could have decided to put up the standard rate of income tax by 1p, and they could have put approximately £2.5 billion into the health service, which would have increased available resources. NICE could say, "Available resources are greater, and the health service should pay for beta interferon," but would it do so in that context? That would affect the resources that were available.

What is going on? Are not the Government abrogating their responsibilities? No one doubts that such decisions are difficult, and that prioritisation is needed, but the Government should not palm off such decisions to what is, in effect, a quango. Should not the Government accept responsibility for such decisions? They should say to the electorate, "We shall increase taxation to pay for the expensive drugs that we want in the NHS, or we shall not increase taxation, and you cannot have those expensive drugs." People elect us to take such decisions—they should not be handed to an allegedly independent third party.

Ms Oona King (Bethnal Green and Bow): Obviously, the Government have increased resources to the NHS. On transparency, does the hon. Gentleman agree that it would be helpful if the clinical guidelines on the overall management of MS, which the Government have asked for, were made available before a decision was taken about the availability of beta interferon?

Mr. Webb: I am sure that greater openness in this whole process would be advantageous. I have no problem with making more explicit the criteria that are used to take such decisions—in a sense, that is the thrust of my argument. A body is needed to examine clinical effectiveness and excellence, and it cannot exist in a world in which there are no financial constraints. Cost-effectiveness involves saying, "If £1 is involved, that is great, but if £1 million is involved, that is silly." We need to sort out the finer details concerning political priorities and available resources.

Why was the statutory instrument produced during the summer recess, when there was limited scope for scrutiny? I accept that the instrument was subsequently debated, but why was the provision introduced as an afterthought? My concern is that the Government felt that they had let the cat out of the bag—they had set up NICE and asked it to examine effectiveness, but they were worried that it would give the wrong answers. The provision was designed to stop it from doing so—that is what it was doing with regard to beta interferon.

I hope that the Minister will assure us that clinical judgments will be made by clinicians and that political judgments will be made by politicians. Those decisions affect my constituents and those of many hon. Members. I welcome the fact that many hon. Members have attended this debate in an effort to show their solidarity with those constituents who need beta interferon. I see many nods around the Chamber. I hope that the Minister agrees that clinical effectiveness is the key and that the Government will not simply say no and abrogate their responsibilities. They should take the political decision and decide whether money should be found for a treatment that many of our constituents need and expect.

The Minister of State, Department of Health (Mr. John Denham): I congratulate the hon. Member for Northavon (Mr. Webb) on securing this debate. This is a good time for me to place on record a few comments following the controversy aroused by the unauthorised release—the leak—of the National Institute for Clinical Excellence's provisional guidance on beta interferon.

I hope that the hon. Gentleman will understand that it was a leak, and that the Government do not intend to comment on it at this stage. There are further stages to be completed in the National Institute for Clinical Excellence's approval process. We have not made public comment on any of the draft appraisals so far circulated by NICE, and we do not intend to change our position on the issue. However, it is a matter of great public interest and I recognise how this discussion must appear to those who face this disabling condition and whose hope for any relief is entirely understandable.

Multiple sclerosis, as we know, is a disabling neurological disease affecting about 85,000 people in the United Kingdom. We have great sympathy for those patients and their families. It usually strikes early in adulthood, and affects about twice as many women as men. The course of the disease is unpredictable, and it varies in progression rate and severity between patients. It has a major adverse impact on the patient's quality of life, especially during relapses, which may require hospitalisation. Disabilities that arise can include weakness, chronic fatigue, impairment of speech, vision and movement, incontinence and complete paralysis, as the hon. Gentleman and the hon. Member for Sutton and Cheam (Mr. Burstow) said. The hon. Gentleman also said that there was no cure for MS.

A variety of services exists to minimise the suffering from this distressing disease, including skilled nursing support, physiotherapy and symptomatic drug treatment to help to manage symptoms such as fatigue, spasticity, pain and depression. Acute relapses are managed, when necessary, with corticosteroids. All those provisions require close collaboration between primary and secondary care services, and the development of pathways of care that we are promoting is well suited to foster the right management of care.

There are three beta interferon products. They are licensed for the treatment of the relapsing remitting form of the disease and one of them, Betaferon, is licensed for the treatment of the secondary progressive disease. The treatments are targeted at modifying and possibly slowing the course of the disease. The beta interferons commonly cause some side effects. The cost of beta interferon treatment is about £10,000 a year per patient.

Clinical trials have shown that all three products reduce the relapse frequency in patients with the relapsing remitting disease. The drugs may also reduce the severity of relapse. Disability progression also appears to be delayed by active treatment, but the longer-term effects are not certain, in part because of the production of neutralising antibodies whose clinical significance is still uncertain. Studies of the secondary progressive disease also show reduced frequency of relapses. There are inconsistent findings in the available clinical trials about the effects on slowing the accumulation of disability in secondary progressive MS.

However, the experts have so far placed differing emphasis on the evidence from clinical trials. Some neurologists are keen to prescribe these products, at least to some patients, but others remain sceptical as to the value of prescribing beta interferon or argue that available resources for MS care would better be used in providing alternative forms of health care support such as specialist nursing or physiotherapy.

The various policies adopted across the country for the use of this treatment confirm that clinicians disagree. There is also widespread agreement that we do not know as much as we would like about the longer-term effects of prescribing beta interferon year after year. These differences in clinical opinion were graphically illustrated only last week in interviews broadcast on the BBC news, when two consultants expressed diametrically opposite views on the clinical value of the drug.

Betaferon was the first product to receive a licence, in 1995. Differing views about the evidence from clinical trials were apparent at the time. The previous Government issued guidance in 1995 that left many of the key decisions to be taken at a local level. It recommended that prescribing should be initiated by hospital neurologists when clinically appropriate and asked health authorities to develop local arrangements with hospitals for purchasing and prescribing the treatment. Resource implications were left for local assessment.

The emphasis on local decision taking is the origin of the lottery of care often referred to as postcode prescribing. We continue to receive a steady influx of complaints across a range of issues from patients and clinicians, who cannot understand why there are wide divergences in local policies. All health authorities currently have policies in place by which some patients can receive beta interferon, but some are more restrictive. The percentage receiving beta interferon varies from about 0 per cent. to about 7 per cent. That amount of variation has given rise to great concern.

Mr. Barry Gardiner (Brent, North): Does my hon. Friend accept that the beta interferon decision will be critical to the future of NICE? If NICE loses public confidence over this issue, that will undermine its important work in providing medical solutions that are clinically rather than politically or financially led.

Mr. Denham: My hon. Friend will understand that one reason why I believe it is inappropriate for me to comment in this debate on what is currently a draft proposal is that the integrity of the NICE decision-making process must be seen to be intact and not subject to guidance, expressions of opinion or anticipation of outcomes from Ministers. The credibility of NICE is indeed important.

On this issue, as on a number of others, the Government believed that leaving decisions to local health authorities without any guidance or support was an evasion of the Department's responsibility at central level. That is the background to the development of NICE and the referral of beta interferon to it.

We have acknowledged on a number of occasions that priority setting is a necessary part of any health care system. It has always been done in the national health service and will continue to be. It is right and proper that priorities are set that make the best use of the NHS's available resources. We do not deny that difficult issues can arise that generate controversy, as when we are dealing with a devastating condition such as multiple sclerosis. That has been made worse in the past when the significance of the evidence has been uncertain.

That is the situation in which we found ourselves. It was an unfair situation and we were determined to tackle it. The National Institute for Clinical Excellence was set up to ensure that the NHS's resources could be used to maximum effect and to remove inconsistent and unacceptable variations in care.

Mr. David Watts (St. Helens, North): Does my hon. Friend agree that it would be ironic if NICE were to replace a system based on postcodes with a system based on whether one developed an illness or medical condition before a certain date?

Mr. Denham: Let me deal with a number of issues that have been raised about affordability and with the comments about the patients receiving the drugs.

The institute's extensive programme of work will set clear standards to ensure that the NHS can focus on treatments that are clinically and cost-effective. It is right to have a single source of authoritative guidance and information to assist health professionals in making complex decisions about patient care. NICE has begun its work. Its guidance to date relates to a number of topics such as wisdom teeth, Relenza, on which the guidance has been restrictive, and ways of promoting the wider use of drugs and technologies such as taxanes and stents, for example.

The hon. Member for Northavon asked about affordability and the changes made to NICE's directions last summer. We have been over this ground before. We made it clear on many occasions well before last summer that NICE would advise on clinical and cost-effectiveness and would issue guidance to the NHS. As we have always said, it is right and proper that NICE should consider clinical and cost-effectiveness side by side.

The hon. Gentleman also said that Ministers should decide the level of resources that are available to the NHS. We have already done so. We recently announced the largest ever injection of resources into the NHS, amounting to an average growth of 6.1 per cent. over four years.

The Government have always said that NICE guidance would take account of cost-effectiveness. The amendment order that we laid in August was a clarification, because we recognised that the original wording of the establishment order did not fully reflect our policy intention to take cost-effectiveness, as well as clinical effectiveness, into account. The amendment simply ensured that the order reflected the policy position that the Government had previously taken.

Mr. Webb: The Minister gave the example of wisdom teeth, on which NICE had made a recommendation. Is there not a difference between that and beta interferon? The argument is that taking wisdom teeth out does not work, not that we cannot afford to do so. That does not appear to be the argument on beta interferon. Is there not a danger that NICE is taking a decision that should be taken by Ministers?

Mr. Denham: Of course I recognise the difference in magnitude between the issues of multiple sclerosis and wisdom teeth. The hon. Gentleman will understand that. We established NICE to advise the service on the clinical and cost-effectiveness of a range of treatments and procedures. We asked NICE to review all the evidence on the clinical and cost-effectiveness of beta interferon for MS and to make recommendations on its use, based on that evidence. Those conclusions were issued in confidence on 16 June. The process is still running, and it would be premature to comment further.

However, following the leak last week of the draft appraisal conclusions, the institute's chairman, Professor Sir Michael Rawlins, said:

> In order to avoid any further uncertainty in the minds of patients and those who care for them, I have no option other than to confirm that the provisional opinion of the Institute's Appraisal Committee is that other than for those patients who are already receiving these medicines, they should not be made available at the present time. This is because, on the basis of a very careful consideration of the evidence, their modest clinical benefit appears to be outweighed by their very high cost.

Mr. Burstow: Given what the Minister has just said, does he not find it surprising that NICE did not seek evidence directly from MS sufferers in making that determination?

Mr. Denham: The exact way in which NICE seeks information is its responsibility. However, I know that NICE consulted patients' organisations directly as part of the appraisal process. Given that the Multiple Sclerosis Society in particular is a highly respected organisation, I am sure that it will have made adequate representation—although I have not seen it—about the impact on patients. It is also worth noting that from the outset NICE has been structured, through its partners council and in other ways, to ensure that patients' interests are taken fully into account in the way in which it takes decisions.

The final judgment will be taken by NICE. The current period of consultation ends on 17 July, and NICE will listen carefully to all the comments that it receives from those consulted. The procedures then allow for an appeal. It is only after those procedures have been exhausted that NICE will reach final conclusions.

A number of other issues have been raised, but I am not sure whether I can deal with all of them adequately. The hon. Member for Northavon asked about NICE's role in considering wider costs and benefits to society in making its appraisals. Again, I cannot comment specifically on the draft appraisal that is the subject of this debate. However, we have made it clear that companies are free to submit any relevant evidence to NICE that they want taken into consideration. NICE's task is to consider the evidence of clinical and other health-related benefits of an intervention and to judge whether a particular treatment can be recommended as a clinical and cost-effective use of national health service and personal social services resources. That is our position, which we have set out before.

My hon. Friend the Member for Bethnal Green and Bow (Ms King) referred to our request to NICE to produce clinical guidelines. Our research and development division has undertaken some preliminary work on the guidelines which will shorten the period—

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. John McWilliam): Order. Time is up.

Social Exclusion

12.30 pm

Mr. Michael Clapham (Barnsley, West and Penistone): I am grateful that this subject was chosen for debate. It will highlight Labour's policy on exclusion as it applies to Barnsley, and to my constituency in particular, and allow me to bring to the Government's attention the progress that has been made by the Communities that Care project, funded by the Joseph Rowntree Foundation, which operates in the Worsborough electoral ward in my constituency. It will allow us to consider the scope of future developments as well as the important issue of funding that important project.

I shall provide some background information against which the economic and social dislocation of the area can be understood. In the mid-1970s, the area was prosperous. The fortunes of the local economy were linked to the energy economy, which was defined at that time in relation to two sources—coal and nuclear energy—based on the security of supply and sustainability. That provided stability for the local economy. However, after the Coal Industry Act 1980, the bitter wind of competition from imports began to be felt. In its wake came the 1984-85 miners strike and the rest is history.

Inevitably, the Barnsley economy was hit hard over the next decade by colliery closures that followed in the wake of the strike. More than 20,000 jobs were lost in mining and the multiplier effect made the blow much wider and much worse. The social structure came under great strain. Unemployment, poverty, low esteem, low educational achievement, substance abuse, family break-up and a general loss of community followed. That was made worse in a borough with the highest rate of disability in the country.

The local economy went into a severe depression and there was little help from the Tory Administration. Statistics collected by the local authority in the mid-1990s graphically show how depressed the locality had become. The average household income per year on the council estates was between £5,000 and £6,000. The average across the borough was £11,000, which compares with an average in Yorkshire and Humberside at the time of £18,300. Almost 30 per cent. of households contained a disabled person, 12 per cent. of the population were carers and the locality had, and still has, one of the highest mortality rates in England. I draw attention to that because I want to make a point about the health action zone.

It was estimated that the area needed to create 19,000 jobs over three years from the mid-1990s just to reach the average national level of employment. Not surprisingly, a great deal of the work that the local authority undertook was directed towards creating conditions to attract new companies to the area to bring jobs. There has been some success: brownfield sites have been cleared and new roads have been built to provide access to the sites and to a route that will link them directly to the M1. However, too few companies, particularly high-growth and high-value companies, are being attracted to the area. I understand that the local authority recently undertook a survey that shows that Barnsley has a deficit of 2,500 companies compared with similar areas.

Although the new deal is admirable, it is less effective in Barnsley than in an area with a solid industrial base. Consequently, far more people in the area are without jobs. Even unemployment figures hide the real extent of the problem. For example, Sheffield Hallam university carried out a study when the survey to which I have referred was undertaken. The university calculated that the real unemployment level in Barnsley was 24.6 per cent., whereas the official rate was 8.4 per cent.

It is now three years since the Labour Government were elected. The policies that they have pursued have brought improvements, but there is still a long way to go. The minimum wage, the working families tax credit and the increase in child benefit have all contributed to raising the income of the most needy households in the Barnsley borough. Figures from the Budget show that 2,875 households will benefit from the working families tax credit. Of the 15,366 pensioners who will benefit from the increased winter fuel allowance, 6,147 will enjoy a free television licence from this autumn. In addition, 11,200 people will receive the increased child benefit. Labour's approach to tackling inequalities is beginning to produce improvements in Barnsley.

Historically, low educational attainment was associated with the heavy industrial base of the local economy. Now, it is recognised that low attainment levels impact adversely on work force skills. The local authority has responded by setting an ambitious target of reaching the national average level of attainment within the next five years. The Government have assisted in that by establishing an education action zone. I visited the education action zone with other hon. Members to see the work being done. It was commendable.

Barnsley people suffer from poor health. It is estimated that the illness rate is 43 per cent. higher than the national average and that the death rate from heart disease is 25 per cent. higher than the average. For that reason, the borough was included in the South Yorkshire Coalfield health action zone. It is therefore disappointing that that zone's budget was cut by 24 per cent. with immediate effect from 21 June. That is a reduction of £789,000 on the programme budget of £3.037 million. I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will raise that matter with Ministers at the Department of Health and urge them to reconsider.

Since the civic hall was mothballed two years ago, the town has lacked a sizeable theatre. That deprives local children of access to live theatre and excludes them from a cultural experience that most children take for granted. Last year, the Arts Council of England turned down the authority's bid for funding to renovate the theatre. That was disappointing. A new bid is to be made and I urge the Arts Council to address the problem of cultural deprivation in Barnsley and ensure that it has facilities for children to come into contact with live performances.

I recognise that closing the gap and reducing inequality in Barnsley will take time, but the figures that I gave show that a step has been taken in the right direction. Bringing about a cultural change and reversing the trend of the past decade will take longer and the Communities that Care project in Worsborough in my constituency, which is funded by the Joseph

[Mr. Michael Clapham]

Rowntree Foundation, is important. It also provides an opportunity to roll out the benefits of the project throughout the borough.

I shall outline the way in which the Communities that Care project works. It is one of three similar projects in the country and was the first to kick off. It is a long-term programme and the intention is to deal with the pressures and stresses that young people face in their communities. The project takes a new approach and an important factor is that it is owned by the community. At the core of the programme is the objective of building safer neighbourhoods where young people are valued, respected and encouraged to reach their potential. It is evidence based and founded on a partnership between young people in the community, the community itself, and the statutory and voluntary agencies. It encourages social commitment and achievement and takes a step-by-step approach to map out the risk and protective factors that influence young people in their community. The risk assessment group was assisted in its research by Oxford university. Sheffield university is also involved in evaluating the project.

A survey was carried out among 1,600 pupils at the two secondary schools. They were asked a series of questions about their attitudes, views, families and neighbourhood. Sixteen risk factors were analysed from the returns to give a picture of the risk and protective factors that were influencing the behaviour of young people in the Worsborough community. Following the prioritisation, five factors were identified as high-risk factors in the community: poor parental supervision and discipline; low achievement in school; disadvantaged neighbourhood; individuals, friends and peers condoning problem behaviour; and parents condoning such behaviour.

When the risk audit had been completed, the next step was to prepare a final strategy in the light of the evidence that had been collected from the survey based on an action plan. The purpose of the action plan is to increase the level of protective factors with the redirection of existing services to tackle risk and the introduction of a new focused intervention. It must be emphasised that the Communities that Care project is not trying to reinvent the wheel and I need to get it over to my hon. Friend the Minister that redirection of services and the focusing of intervention are planned in accordance with a menu. It is accepted that services are already being provided in that community—housing, education, social services and so on—but in the context of the Communities that Care project, the intervention is refocused to provide greater effect.

The project is working well. It started in 1998 and was funded for three years. The funding from the Joseph Rowntree Foundation will come to an end at the end of May 2001. Hearing what I have said, my hon. Friend the Minister may say, "What's new? We've been targeting communities in the UK for a number of years." I would not disagree with him, but what is new in this project is the way in which we can identify overlapping risks and protective factors. We need the community and the programme to proceed in an holistic way.

After three years' funding by the foundation, it is crucial to complete the project. All the research and analysis work has been done. Long-term implementation is now needed, and it must be assured. Various types of funding are available and can be applied for—for example, single regeneration budget and European funding—but the project's future must be more secure. I am aware that the Government's crime reduction strategy includes a £540 million fund for the Sure Start project.

Sure Start is aimed at families and children. It has been approved in Barnsley, but is not under way. Now that it has been approved, that gives us an opportunity to move forward. I ask my hon. Friend the Minister to consider ownership of the Communities that Care project after May 2001 and perhaps the extension of funding from the Sure Start project, so that we can ensure implementation and co-ordination of the Communities that Care project. I see no reason why we should not be able to extend the Sure Start scheme.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Social Security (Mr. Hugh Bayley): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Barnsley, West and Penistone (Mr. Clapham) on raising this subject. He is a persistent and persuasive advocate for his constituency, for Barnsley as a borough and for the coalfield communities as a whole. The way in which he keeps drawing the attention of the House to the needs of a community pushed flat on its back by Tory economic policies in the 1980s and 1990s is a credit to him and in the best traditions of Labour party representation in the House.

In passing, I pay tribute to the remarkable Rowntree family. Not only did they start the business that is now the biggest employer in my constituency—the Rowntree, now Nestlé, chocolate factory—but, when Joseph Rowntree, the founder of the dynasty, came to retire, instead of keeping private control of his huge shareholdings in the business, which had grown so remarkably, he put them into trust. He set up three great trusts which, between them, are the biggest independent private funders of social research, and social development programmes, such as the Communities that Care projects, the first of which is running in Barnsley. That was his major legacy to social policy. His son, Seebohm Rowntree, did the three poverty studies in 1901, 1936 and 1952 in York, as a fairly typical town. From those studies developed so much of Labour social policy, especially of the post-war Attlee Government that created the welfare state. They were two great social reformers.

I was interested to learn about the Communities that Care approach, which I like. It is right to build multi-agency networks to tackle the causes of deprivation and to concentrate on young people. The point at which escape from a life of poverty is most possible is when people leave home. That is when they either move into work and escape from poverty, or fail to do so and become trapped in a lifetime of benefits. That fact is recognised strongly in "Opportunity for All"—the Government's strategy to combat and defeat poverty. Everyone in every part of the country should have the opportunity to get on and prosper.

The Communities that Care strategy identifies what it calls the risk factors—such as school failure, teenage pregnancy, sexually transmitted disease, drugs and crime—that undermine opportunity for all and the ability of individuals to surmount obstacles and make their way in life. It stresses the importance of skills, social inclusion and the protective factors that enable real opportunity for all. It also stresses the importance of listening to and taking account of young people's views, recognising and praising what they do, and allowing them to get involved in their neighbourhoods.

A similar approach was taken in the rejuvenation of the Bell Farm estate, which is one of the most seriously disadvantaged estates in my constituency. The project had some support from the Joseph Rowntree Foundation, but the key was to knit together the agencies and give a voice to local people, enabling them to shape changes to the streetscape and decide on changes to individual tenants' homes. That approach has worked well. At the beginning of the project, only 4 per cent. of people who lived on the estate thought that it experienced less crime than other parts of York. In other words, almost everyone thought that the estate was a crime hot-spot. At the end of the project, 53 per cent.—a majority—thought that there was less crime on the estate than elsewhere.

The foundation has moved on from the Communities that Care approach, but it follows the same precedent by giving people in disadvantaged communities the opportunity to express themselves and their solutions. That approach dovetails well with the Government's strategy on poverty. In February 1999, the Prime Minister set the Government the ambitious and challenging goal of seeking to eliminate child poverty within a generation. Until the Government published "Opportunity for All", which outlines the strategy for eliminating poverty, people were sceptical about whether that goal could be achieved. If it is challenging for the country as a whole, it is particularly challenging for communities such as that represented by my hon. Friend, but there is a determination in all parts of the country to achieve it.

My hon. Friend described the damage and devastation that the Conservatives' economic policies inflicted on Barnsley in the 1980s and 1990s. He described the consequences for the health of the population of Barnsley in particular, and gave many indicators. This morning, I discovered that 8.6 children per 1,000 live births die in Barnsley. That is the fourth highest infant mortality rate in the country, and compares with 5.6 per 1,000 in England as a whole. It reflects the burden of deprivation that a neighbourhood can face. That is why the health action zone—

Mr. Clapham: I assume that my hon. Friend recognises the importance of trying to get the South Yorkshire Coalfield health action zone moneys back on track.

Mr. Bayley: That is why I mentioned that. I clearly heard what my hon. Friend said, and I will ensure that his views are conveyed to the Department of Health. The health action zone was established to address such problems.

The basis for achieving the Government's strategy to reduce poverty is the provision of the right macro-economic framework. When the Labour party came to power three years ago, we inherited a legacy of boom and bust from our predecessors. In just three years, we have made a major change to the nature of the economy. There is more stability. Throughout the country, 1 million more people are at work than in May 1997, and unemployment is falling. That is true even in places facing the highest burden of unemployment, such as Barnsley. In May 1997, the Barnsley travel-to-work area had an 8 per cent. unemployment rate, which has now fallen to 5.8 per cent. That is significantly lower than it was at its peak in the mid-1980s. In 1984, it stood at 14.5 per cent.

Mr. Clapham: I should emphasise that there is a great deal of hidden unemployment. The survey that was carried out in the schools at Worsborough showed that 50 per cent. of the households from which the children of Worsborough came had a head of the household who was not economically active.

Mr. Bayley: My hon. Friend stresses the nature of the problem.

It is not only a matter of Government policies taking a broad brush approach to unemployment and creating 1 million jobs, but of providing jobs at local level and targeting help where it is needed. That is one of the achievements of the new deal. In Barnsley, 1,251 young people are now in work as a result of the new deal, and 1,158 are in sustained employment. The new deal has worked. It has made the difference between long-term unemployment and employment. Long-term unemployment among young people in Barnsley is now down to 251. Those 251 people are the hard core of those who are most at risk of a lifetime on benefits, and therefore a lifetime of social exclusion. That is what my hon. Friend has highlighted today.

A wide range of initiatives is making a difference, as my hon. Friend knows, because he has argued for them and secured them for his community. The local education authority has secured rapid improvement in the education indicators since 1997, when the Government came to power. The learning gateway is providing opportunities for 400 young people. My hon. Friend also referred to the single regeneration budget, the education action zone and the confirmation of objective 1 status for South Yorkshire.

I stress that the Government's strategy to combat poverty lays a strong emphasis on work, because for most people of working age that is the best route out of poverty. Benefit expenditure tackles the immediate needs of those who cannot work, such as children, sick and disabled people and pensioners, and the Government have done a lot for those groups. Child benefit, having been frozen for years by the Conservatives, has increased by 26 per cent. in real terms to £15 per week for the first child and £10 per week for subsequent children. As my hon. Friend said, 11,200 families in Barnsley benefit from that.

The working families tax credit and the minimum wage will, in October this year, guarantee a minimum weekly income of £208 for a family with one child and one person at work. Couples on income support with two children aged under 11 will, by next year, be £1,500 a year better off. Those measures, taken together, have lifted 1.2 million children out of poverty. The Conservatives trebled the number of children in poverty, and we are taking action to reduce their number.

[Mr. Bayley]

We are providing more money, in real terms, for disability benefits, and £6.5 billion more for pensioners. We have started by helping the poorest pensioners. In Barnsley, 8,200 such pensioners gain the minimum income guarantee. They had a pension of £62.45 when we came to power; now it is £78.45. That is £16 more per week for the poorest pensioners in Barnsley as a result of Labour policies. Now we are targeting those whose incomes or savings put them just above the minimum income level, and they will get more too.

It being One o'clock, the motion for the Adjournment of the sitting lapsed, without Question put.

Organophosphates

Motion made, and Question proposed, That the sitting be now adjourned.—[Mr. Kevin Hughes.]

9.30 am

Dr. Ian Gibson (Norwich, North): People all over Britain will be waking up today wondering about organophosphates as we debate the subject in this august place. I am sure that we shall impart some information this morning, so that the public know why we take the matter seriously. I welcome the chairman of the all-party organophosphate group to the Chamber. I pay tribute to the Countess of Mar, who has fought a continuous battle and has bombarded Ministers with questions for years. Indeed, she has distinguished herself in that campaign.

The organophosphate group of chemicals causes many problems. They are implicated in the Gulf war syndrome, and they affect agricultural workers. Organophosphates have been the cause of debate in rural communities about their effects on the people who live and work there. The chemicals are the cause of problems in animal welfare, medicine is involved and there are many other aspects to the problem. Indeed, I note that the Sunday papers report that organophosphates can be found in aircraft; not only can one get a pulmonary embolism four days after flying, one can also get a good whiff of organophosphates on the transatlantic flight. That is something for everyone to enjoy.

The subject also creates problems for Ministers. It covers so many areas, and many Ministers have something to say about it. We have got round that problem today by not having five Ministers here. That would have been too much to handle, and, perhaps, too radical. I am pleased that we can concentrate on the agricultural implications of organophosphates and how they affect people's health.

My interest in the use of chemicals in rural communities stems from work that I did some years ago, when young agricultural workers in Norfolk wanted to talk to doctors about impotence and about not being able to start families. That was in the early days of chemical use in the farmyard. Insecticides and pesticides were implicated, because they washed into the Broads and the rivers and fouled up plant life there. We wondered then whether the chemicals could have had some effect on people in rural communities. Although gloves and uniforms were available as a safety measure, I am sorry to say that people had problems with wearing chemical suits to prevent their bodies getting near chemicals. People were found to be using about 20 chemicals a day. We tried to ensure that they took precautions, and many of those young men successfully sired children a few years later.

It was difficult to nail down which chemical could have caused the sterility, and a doubt remains to this day. Because so many chemicals are used, it is often hard to find evidence that a particular chemical has caused a problem. I am pleased that organophosphates have been studied and that research has been carried out, but it is sometimes difficult to gain the scientific and medical surety of evidence that is needed to take matters forward.

Organophosphates were first shown to have biological uses in about 1937, and they are now widely used as pesticides in agricultural, public health, veterinary, domestic and medicinal applications. Some organophosphates are used as lubricants and plasticisers. The one thing that is clear, however, is that whenever and wherever they are used, humans are always exposed to them; people come up against them, and take them in through the skin or in other ways.

The organophosphate compounds used in warfare are chemically different. We do not want a chemistry lecture—goodness forbid that. I do not understand chemistry much, anyway. We are not going to talk about the organophosphates said to have had an effect in Gulf war syndrome. They are a different kettle of fish, have different chemical structures and probably work differently from those used on farms.

The use of organophosphates in arable and livestock farming has raised many concerns. People will know especially of the adverse effects on sheep farmers exposed to low doses for long periods while, for example, sheep dipping. Publicity on that subject has come in at a great rate. We also know that it is possible to be affected during crop spraying. It has been suggested that pesticides, including organophosphates, have appeared in water supplies and food. There is much concern about that, and the issue is still very alive today.

Research has shown that many organophosphates work by affecting a key protein or enzyme in the human body, which is involved in nerve function—the way in which nerves interact. Brain function and the nerves controlling muscles are affected through contact with the chemicals. Organophosphates are of great use on farms. They are used to eliminate scab disease and they kill insects and plants. They are used around cats' necks to kill fleas and they are used around the home to kill flies, wasps and ants. They are often used in soil to affect living organisms by working through that enzyme. They have a function. Today, however, we are discussing the other side of the issue—the aberrant effects on humans.

It is often asked what the short and long-term effects are. I will not give descriptions using medical terminology, but saying that organophosphates do your brain in might help people to understand. That is how people describe the effects in the media. Organophosphates cause muscular twitching. There can be effects immediately or in the long term on muscle and brain function, memory retention, learning skills and other aspects of life. Chemicals, including lead, have often been shown to affect the intellectual ability of young people in particular, whose brains and cells are forming to function properly in school.

We will no doubt learn much more as research informs us about the way in which the chemicals work. I am sure that different classes of the chemicals will work differently and have different functions. We will have to find a language for describing medically the way in which functions are impaired by different organophosphates.

[Dr. Ian Gibson]

There has been much scientific and medical research into the effects of the compounds, both with regard to the Gulf war and to farms. Many reports have been produced by august bodies. The argument has moved forward in some ways, but it has not progressed fast enough. I will illustrate some of the directions in which we might still need to carry out research. The questions being asked about organophosphates concern long-term toxic effects following low-level exposure. That is an area of great debate. There is good evidence that where there is high-level exposure to organophosphates, there are immediate toxic effects on the peripheral nervous system and the skeletal muscle. There is uncertainty about the mechanism of how they work, but there is no real argument that there is an effect on those functions.

As the implications of the human genome project explode around the world and we get more information, we are sure to find that some people are more susceptible to the chemicals than others. That will make it more difficult for us to say that everyone will be affected by organophosphates. It is like an airline that says that it did not create the blood clot on the passenger's lungs because the clot developed four days after the flight. Many delayed effects can happen after the body is subjected to some influence.

It is agreed that OPs have potential long-term effects that justify caution in their use. That is the base line on which we can all agree. There is good evidence, too, for delayed effects. Some effects appear in the short term—a matter of days, weeks or just hours—but exposure to high levels of the compounds can also have delayed effects on the nervous and muscular systems.

An explanation is needed for a range of reactions from different organophosphates. The debate is often clouded by arguments about the difficulty of knowing the extent of someone's exposure to a particular organophosphate. It is difficult to record that information. Studies have been rubbished because of the problem of arriving at figures for the level of exposure, and that compounds the confusion in obtaining evidence that could lead to legislation.

Another problem is defining the effects. Some, such as dizziness and twitching, can always be argued to have been caused by something other than organophosphate exposure. It is hard to tie down such symptoms to a low or high dose of a chemical. Some of the effects that are claimed, such as suicide and depression, are also hard to narrow down to one event in someone's complicated life. There may be multifactorial reasons for those problems. However, when one starts to add all the elements together, a picture emerges. Something is going on with the coming of organophosphates into rural communities and lives.

I am pleased that the Government are investigating ways to increase research. I know that research councils and other bodies are funding research into not just Gulf war syndrome but other aspects of chemical pollution. We need more biochemical research, which raises the question of using animals. I see no other way to obtain the necessary results about the effect on nervous systems and behaviour. We can study the way that mice run in mazes, for example. That is the nearest we can come to decent experiments without using human beings. Of course, we can look at tissue culture and ask questions about the enzymes and proteins that are affected and the resulting effects on nerve cells. We can examine brain tissue in post mortems and study the concentration of organophosphates in nerve tissue. We can use electrophysiology to study brain and organ function for the effects of toxic subjection to an organophosphate. At the same time, clinical trials are being conducted—more will be needed—on groups of people who have been affected by the substances, to find out how memory and behaviour develop in the short and long term.

All the research has resulted in many reviews, but the royal colleges and the Medical Research Council tend to focus on symptoms and treatment. The Medical Research Council has gone a little further and suggested in its report that there > may be a correlation between occupations using OPs and learning problems.

The possibility of a correlation is about as far as one gets in this argument. One wonders what one would have to find out to establish a hard and fast link.

It is hard to define, using different studies from different countries, the general phenomenon of good mental health. That makes gathering evidence difficult and accounts for the many disagreements in academic circles. While admitting that there must be some effects from organophosphates, as they are not natural components of the human body, some authorities question their seriousness. They argue that the body has systems for dealing with the many foreign materials in food and that perhaps we can handle a little dose of organophosphate. However, I do not feel that that would ever be good for me and I do not believe that those who work on farms think that it is good for them. That raises an issue relating to those who say that a little new chemistry in the body does no harm.

How should we go about resolving the issues, given that the response to high or low levels of organophosphates is complex? As people agree that high doses can cause immediate, intermediate or long-term toxic effects, the regulations set about minimising those effects by attempting to limit exposure to sheep dipping or crop spraying. Those regulations often involve advising people to wear gloves, and so on. I understand very well why people are not too good at following that sort of health and safety advice. I am sure that every one of us in the Chamber has taken a risk at some time when we know that we should not have done so. I do not just mean by smoking, but when handling things in the home, spraying plants or whatever, because certain chemicals affect the person. Therefore, we have not resolved the problems of chronic and adverse health effects through regulation, and disagreement continues.

Although further research will continue to resolve some of the problems and find better answers so that we can say, "Yes, it does affect the system, so it is no wonder that people are feeling ill", we must have a much more determined approach.

There have been many suggestions about what we should do about organophosphates, especially in relation to sheep dippers. Many people have argued that there should be a moratorium. We have heard about moratoriums in relation to genetically modified crops, which expresses a certain attitude to tackling such problems while we do not know much about them. The other argument is to look for alternatives, such as other chemicals that might be less harmful to human beings. Another suggestion is to introduce tighter regulation to ensure that people are protected and that the regulations operate properly. I have spoken about how difficult the latter option is and about how difficult it is to get people to play along. On farms, continuous monitoring would be necessary because activities change daily and are unpredictable; people are in a hurry and so they cut corners. That is sad, but that is the way it is. There are other approaches to dealing with that problem, which I shall not talk about now.

The alternatives have not proved to be very effective. There is evidence that some of the alternatives damage the environment, get into rivers, cause algal blooms and destroy plant life and animal life around rivers. Some people throw up their hands in horror at the idea of a moratorium because they worry about how we would handle the problem of sheep scab. The only answer is that, in some countries where organophosphates are not used, there is no problem with sheep scab, so people argue, "If it all right for them, why is it not all right for us?" That argument is batted back and forth by the warring parties, and we do not seem to move forward.

Science is one way forward, and we are all in favour of good science and understanding things at a deeper level. At the same time, legal cases are pending. Sadly, some of those legal cases are resolved in out-of-court settlements. I say "sadly" because, although I am glad that the cases are resolved, that does not help in bringing cases into the legal system, where other minds and sensitivities can become involved in trying to resolve the problems of people whose health has clearly been damaged by being subjected to such chemicals. I believe that we shall see more instances of that in the next few years. Gulf war syndrome is one such illness that is setting precedents. Farm workers are also bringing forward cases.

We are learning something from Europe—this is something that we have discussed before in the House—from the so-called precautionary principle. That relates to the situation in which 100 per cent. scientific evidence that one thing causes another is unavailable and considers how that situation should be handled until more information is available. I am fascinated by the precautionary principle. I find that there is no definition of the principle in Europe, but there are 14 alternative interpretations of it in Government legislation around the world. I shall mention just two of those interpretations because the principle is relevant in certain situations, and we have used it recently in this country in relation to radio frequency waves for cellular phones and mobile phone bases. In the absence of 100 per cent. scientific evidence, the Stewart report made recommendations to the Government on the basis of the precautionary principle, stating that radiation emanating from phones and bases was causing problems.

In regulating new technologies, whether they are chemical technologies such as OPs or physical technologies such as cellular phones, there must be something in the equation besides science. It is increasingly obvious that public understanding and acceptance that there are problems persuade Governments to take action. For example, the public have been extremely influential in fashioning Government policy in the GM debate and we should be grateful for that.

On the precautionary principle, I pick the two extremes that support my argument from the 14 alternatives—I am prepared to elaborate on the other 12, but I hope that no one is too keen for me to do so. When a hazard is appraised, any risk of harm is noted, built into the control measures and taken seriously. If it is assumed that the evidence is indicative of a problem, that will be taken into account in framing legislation. One alternative would be to ban its use, another to limit the exposure but to take it seriously and accept that something is going on, and that what has happened is not an accident or an act of God.

Another view is that there must be reasonable grounds to conclude that there is a risk, although that gives rise to an argument about what are reasonable grounds. Those who support that view believe that there must be a good reason for doing nothing.

The first approach to the precautionary principle is an alternative to risk analysis; it is assumed that something is a problem and that is built into the equation. The second approach is risk analysis. I do not know how people decide which approach to take; to judge from published literature, the second approach is favoured in respect of OPs, but the first approach was taken by the Countess of Mar when she gave evidence to various committees. She is a brilliant advocate of the precautionary principle.

The issue is political as well as socio-economic, and public opinion has a vital role in bringing matters to the attention of Governments. The precautionary principle had to be adopted in the case of cellular masts for mobile phones because Members of Parliament were hammered by their constituents about the issue; people are suspicious about cellular phones, and especially about the masts on school buildings. The OP lobby, although it is laudable, may not yet have been voluble enough to make that kind of impact on political decisions.

In the three years since I have been a member of the all-party organophosphate group, which was formed eight years ago, the balance of the argument on OPs has been swinging towards a ban on their use, and to other methods of handling the problem of sheep, cat fleas and so on. I hope that the debate will support the argument that these harmful chemicals should be eliminated.

I welcome the Government's action on the issue. They are taking it seriously and tackling the problems, unlike the previous Administration. I urge them to take the final step and act to reduce exposure to harmful organophosphate chemicals.

9.54 am

Mr. Paul Tyler (North Cornwall): I congratulate the hon. Member for Norwich, North (Dr. Gibson) on securing the debate and on an excellent speech. He has scientific expertise that I, as a layman, certainly do not. That is one of the reasons why he and the hon. Member for Ludlow (Mr. Gill), who is also present, have been such valuable members of our all-party group.

I do not have the scientific background of the hon. Member for Norwich, North, but I want to follow his definition of the precautionary principle in relation to long low-level exposure to organophosphates. My simple, layman's translation of that principle is, "If in doubt, don't". I have learned that that principle has not applied in many areas from meeting a huge number of people over the past 10 years who have been exposed to these extremely damaging chemicals.

The focus in the recent past has been on the use of organophosphates in agriculture, but they have a long history and are used in several other ways, both domestically and commercially. I want to consider the use of OPs as a lubricant in aircraft engines. The hon. Member for Norwich, North referred to that subject, but he would agree that it has not received the same attention as the agricultural use. It is worrying that some aircraft that use those lubricants are especially susceptible to problems. One of those aircraft, the BAe 146, is used by the Queen's flight, so the House will recognise that the issue is important. The health of pilots, crew and passengers could be affected.

In its evidence to the current House of Lords inquiry into aircraft cabin environment, the Aviation Health Institute—a reputable body—has admirably summed up the situation. Its document states:

> Passengers and crew on some aircraft are being subjected to organophosphates exposure from oil seal leaks into the air conditioning systems. The most common aircraft models involved are Airbus 320 MD-80 and the BAe 146. In the case of the latter, Professor Chris van Netten has demonstrated that filters had sometimes been overloaded allowing fumes to enter the cabin.
> It is known that organophosphate pesticides have a significant deleterious effect on the human immune system as well as being a neurotoxin. In the UK the DETR has confirmed that the failure of oil seals occurs in one in every 22,000 flights, resulting in organophosphate exposure. At Heathrow, where there are 440,000 aircraft movements, this could effect 20 aircraft a year or some 2,000 passengers.

That is not a tiny minority. The document continues:

> In Australia a senate committee is investigating the neurotoxic effect of BAe 146 and lawsuits are pending in the US and Canada on leakage of organophosphates into aircraft cabins.

I am in touch with the chairman of that Australian senate inquiry, whose report is imminent. He is visiting this country shortly, and I hope that he will have the opportunity to meet others of us who are concerned about the issue.

I find alarming the apparent complacency of the United Kingdom authorities. We have known for some time that those potentially lethal chemicals are used as lubricants in aircraft engines—not only fixed-wing aircraft but in helicopters. I notice from this morning's Hansard that, in the debate about the RAF Chinook crash that took place in this Chamber yesterday, the reason why pilots took the action that they did was not identified. There may be a connection with organophosphates.

Early in 1999, I obtained information from Ministers at the Department of Health and the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions. Since then, we have sought assurances about the use of OP lubricants and safety precautions. Last December, I received a disturbing report from Sweden, which stated that, on 12 November, an unidentified toxic gas almost caused a catastrophe in a BAe 146 passenger aircraft operated by Braathens Malmo Aviation. The Minister may be able to correct my Swedish pronunciation, as she is a known linguist.

On the first leg of a three-part trip, the cabin attendants felt strange and experienced incredible pressure. One attendant described the experience as like a "moonwalk." On the second leg, the discomfort returned, and the two pilots experienced it too. On the third leg, to Sturrup airport, the cabin manager realised that something was seriously wrong, went forward to the cockpit before landing and found that both pilots were wearing their oxygen masks. The captain was so near to blackout, in his words:

> feeling dizzy and groggy despite the oxygen that he had instructed the first officer to take over the controls and land the plane.

The Swedish board of accident investigation, the airline and the aircraft engine manufacturers all treated the incident as very serious, as well they might. The initial investigation pointed to a leak of a potentially toxic engine lubricant. I was anxious to establish whether that was an OP. We already know that they were originally intended only for helicopter engines, which operate at relatively low altitudes—therefore without the air pressure problems—and at lower speeds.

That incident and others have been drawn to the attention of our Ministers, but there seems to have been no effective analysis or dissemination of information to warn aircrews and passengers. In evidence to the House of Lords, the British Air Line Pilots Association writes:

> Our concerns have been raised with both the CAA and the DETR, however, their response was that any such contamination could be controlled by either isolating the air conditioning unit or shutting down the affected engine. This action, however, can only be taken after exposure has occurred and this would be experienced by not just one or two individuals, but possibly all of the passengers and crew.
> Due to the flight safety issues raised by the symptoms of exposure such as disorientation, blurred vision, impaired memory and altered coordination, attempts have been made to address these problems worldwide. These include changes in design, maintenance and operation procedures. However, while the problem persists, exposure of staff and the public to levels of toxicants that may affect safety and health continues.
> Despite the flight safety issues and health risks associated with the use of toxic compounds and reported incidents of cabin air contamination, neither the Industry nor Government has fully investigated this issue. We, therefore, feel that the use of these substances should be investigated and reconsidered.

I apologise for reading a long extract from that evidence, but I think that hon. Members will agree that its influence and importance are considerable, as it comes from such an authoritative source.

However, Ministers still show the most extraordinary and breathtaking complacency. As long ago as last December, I asked the Ministry of Defence and the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions to investigate the implications of the BAe incident. A Minister from the MOD replied:

> We have no record of any recent military aircraft incidents relating to the use of organophosphate lubricants. The organophosphate compound tricresylphosphate is present in almost all military aero-engine lubricants and, as no viable alternative products are available, appropriate measures are taken to avoid the exposure of air and ground crew to any potential health hazards. We understand that BAe systems is investigating the incident involving a civil BAe 146 aircraft on 12 November and we will consider any recommendations that emerge.—[Official Report, House of Commons, 20 December 1999; Vol. 341, c. 363W.]

I will not repeat the DETR's answer, because other hon. Members want to speak, but I hope that they will accept that it is similar. Again, acute exposure high-level dosage is mentioned, but there is no recognition of the damage that can be caused to human health by low-level exposure over a long period.

What conclusions have been reached? It is now many months since the incident, and presumably there has been at least an interim report. What advice has been given to airlines that operate those planes or, indeed, those who operate the Queen's flight? Are there maintenance or flying instruction implications? Who knows? Ministers continue to disclose the minimum of information. I have again questioned them and received equally sketchy answers. I tabled written questions to ask the Secretary of State for Defence and the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions whether their reviews of the incidents involving possible organophosphate air pollution on board aircraft had reached conclusions. On 13 June, the Minister for the Armed Forces said:

> We have no evidence of organophosphate pollution on military aircraft affecting personnel, but we will consider carefully any conclusions from an on-going BAe Systems investigation into an incident involving a civil BAe 146 aircraft last year.—[Official Report, House of Commons, 13 June 2000; Vol. 351, c. 564W.]

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, the hon. Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin), said:

> The investigation of these incidents is still under review. The report will be published following its outcome. I am unable to comment until that stage has been reached.—[Official Report, House of Commons, 13 June 2000; Vol. 351, c. 555W.]

The emphasis is on allowing the commercial operators or manufacturers of the aircraft or the engines to do their own research. It worries me that there is no sign of any external, objective and authoritative analysis of that incident.

In the meantime, I have received an interesting letter from BAE Systems. It does not deny any of the information that I have related, but, in a revealing phrase, it claims that the implication in a recent report that the issue is specific to the BAE 146 is inaccurate. In other words, other craft may be involved. Two wrongs, let alone 2,000 wrongs, do not make a right. There was no attempt to suggest that the media or those directly involved as air crews had encouraged the concern. BAe Systems accepted that a problem exists. Of course, it, too, awaits the outcome of the Swedish investigation.

As the hon. Member for Norwich, North said, official research reports dating back to the 1950s identify OPs as potentially extremely dangerous toxic chemicals. In concentrated form, they have been proved to have acute effects on human health. Low-level dosage over long periods is still being investigated, and I, too, pay tribute to the Government for accelerating such research in the past three years. There is widespread evidence of chronic effects in at least a substantial proportion of those exposed to OP vapour.

If the legal and official inquiries produce firm evidence that the health and safety of aircraft crews and passengers are being risked regularly by exposure to toxic fumes, the consequences will be far-reaching. This summer, tour operators, those responsible for military aircraft and perhaps the officials responsible for the Queen's household should be made aware of the facts. I hope that as soon as the current investigations are complete, the Government will produce a full report.

Investigations by the OP Information Network, an extremely effective voluntary organisation which has done much pioneering work, have revealed a hiatus at the heart of the Government. The Department of Health, the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, the Health and Safety Executive, the Environment Agency and the Civil Aviation Authority do not accept responsibility for threats to human health once an aircraft has left the ground. People are on their own. A request that the application of the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1999 be checked has remained unanswered.

The OP saga remains a chronicle of disinformation, dither and delay over many decades. The continuing failure of the United Kingdom authorities to insist on a withdrawal or moratorium on the use of OP products until they are proved to be safe will expose Ministers to renewed claims for compensation. Meanwhile, as the hon. Member for Norwich, North said, research at Imperial college London, and University college, London shows new evidence of damage to human brain and nervous systems, even from long-term low-level exposure to OP sheep dips. The many victims are now asking, "When will Ministers ever learn?"

10.9 am

Mr. Christopher Gill (Ludlow): As a fellow vice-chairman of the all-party group on organophosphates, I congratulate the hon. Member for Norwich, North (Dr. Gibson) on having obtained this important debate.

I also congratulate the hon. Member for North Cornwall (Mr. Tyler), who was the driving force behind the formation of the all-party group. I should like to voice my appreciation of all the time, effort and sheer hard work that he has put into the topic over a long period. It is rare in this place for compliments to be handed across the Chamber, but I would like to give credit where it is due, and he deserves some recognition for his work on this issue.

The hon. Gentleman spoke about OP use in relation to aircraft, and I am sure that hon. Members were interested in what he had to say. I will confine my remarks to OPs in the sheep industry, of which I have first-hand experience. Colleagues will recognise that the sheep industry is valuable and important in the Ludlow constituency.

Based on my experience and from talking to many farmers, I can say that a generation of farmers, shepherds and others involved in sheep dipping were totally unaware of the risks of using organophosphates for a long time. Although it might be feasible for the Government to claim that individual users of OPs should have taken greater steps to satisfy themselves that they used materials safely, the investigation of the past few years has shown that successive Governments have failed to impress the dangers on the users. To this day, it is emphasised that the user should take all reasonable precautions and, for example, read the instructions on the label. I shall describe in a moment how the guidance is not practical and has not had the desired effect. I shall mention some cases of people in my constituency affected by OPs.

[Mr. Christopher Gill]

As an officer of the all-party OP group, I welcome the decision made by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in December to put a temporary ban on the production and sale of OP sheep dips, pending the industry designing safer containers. I was surprised at the reaction of the National Farmers Union, which I gathered from the farming press was critical of Ministers' decisions. I understand why; there is no question but that OP sheep dips have been efficacious and relatively cheap. If a product that is effective and cheap is taken off the market, sheep farmers and their profit margins—if they have any—will obviously be affected.

I have received no representations from the NFU or individual farmers to say that the Government were wrong to make that decision. That puzzles me somewhat. I would have expected some of my sheep-farming constituents to approach me, knowing my involvement in the all-party group. The fact that I have received no such representations suggests that the majority of sheep farmers, at least in my constituency, recognise that the decision may have been right and understand the serious effect of the chemical on the health of their colleagues.

I shall quote three examples: first, the case of Mr. Evans of Lydbury North who kindly convened a meeting of farmers in my constituency who had various tales to tell about OPs. Mr. Evans believes that his health was impaired as a result of using organophosphate sheep dips, and one of his greatest difficulties was that the medical profession refused to accept that. For a long time, doctors said, "You have all the classic symptoms of Parkinson's disease. Go away and do not trouble us again." That is a common experience. One of our problems in the industry has been persuading general practitioners and others in the medical profession to accept that the symptoms displayed by sheep farmers are more likely to have been caused by the use of organophosphate sheep dips than by more conventional, recognised diseases or illnesses.

Another case involves a constituent who drank from a work mate's pop bottle on a very hot day. Unfortunately, the contents were not pop but sheep dip, which had been bottled by the farmer for use on another occasion. That case, which will shortly come to court, is technically sub judice, so I shall say only that between drinking the contents of the bottle, which my constituent thought was pop, and his life being saved in hospital a few hours later, technically the man "died" several times, because the effect of concentrated OPs on the human body is dramatic and devastating.

My next case concerns a constituent who suffers from a condition caused by low dosage absorption of OPs over a long period. The man ran a pregnancy testing service for sheep farmers. He went round farms testing the ewes to see whether they were in lamb, which helped the farmer to decide on their nutritional requirements. They need less feed if they are not in lamb and more if they are carrying twins or triplets.

My constituent operated the sheep pregnancy testing service for 10 or 11 years until he began to feel unwell. He concluded that he became ill as a result of his contact with sheep, especially their nether regions, to which the sheep dip migrates. The man possibly never saw the sheep dipped because he would be carrying out the pregnancy testing at a later, indeterminate stage. It is unlikely that he ever saw a tin of dip with the instruction on the label that Ministers are keen to tell farmers that they should have read. That man was not technically a sheep farmer or a shepherd, but he was closely involved in the sheep industry. He is convinced, as I am, having heard him speak about his experiences, that his health has been impaired because of his provision of that service.

As the hon. Member for Norwich, North has said, organophosphates potentially affect the human body in all sorts of ways. They are obviously invasive of the nervous system and there is no doubt that they affect memory. They cause intolerance to alcohol, affect muscular processes and, as the hon. Gentleman said, lead to mental health problems. There is circumstantial evidence that such health problems lead many farmers and shepherds to take their life.

People suffering from the ingestion of OPs are shy about telling others about another aspect of the symptoms. The chemicals can affect libido. Such people might not feel quite themselves. I was going to say that they might feel under the weather, but that would take us back to the pregnancy tester. Naturally, someone in that situation would not want to tell their family and local community that they had lost their sex drive. He might be thought to be rather an odd fish. We are considering just the tip of the iceberg. For that reason and others, there is great reluctance among people affected to declare their concern about the use of organophosphates.

Has the Government's reaction to OPs been proportionate? How does the action taken compare, for example, with the action on BSE or CJD? As the hon. Member for North Cornwall said, it appears to many people that there has been complacency on the issue, even though there has been so much circumstantial evidence suggesting that people's health has been seriously impaired by the use of the chemicals.

Dr. George Turner (North-West Norfolk): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, North (Dr. Gibson) on introducing the debate on what is an important topic for me and my constituency because organophosphates are produced in King's Lynn.

As ever, my hon. Friend has given a balanced view of the topic. However, that is not always what we find in the media. I have been made especially aware since my election of the dangers of hype and of what I refer to as junk science. For their own reasons, the media, businesses, politicians and individual scientists sometimes wish to use faulty scientific data and, in particular, to group together chemicals that should not be grouped together. I would like to make it clear that I do not want to argue with the need for caution or that some organophosphates are not dangerous. We must not conclude that we should be frightened of using chemicals because some are dangerous, but we must be careful to act on real evidence and not to be pushed or harried by exaggeration into actions in our role as regulators that are detrimental to the wider interests of not only agriculture, but all our constituents.

This morning's debate is timely because the product that is made in King's Lynn has been in the international news. In the United States, the Environmental Protection Agency, through agreements with Dow Chemical Company, has introduced changes to its regulations, which remove the single most used insecticide from the domestic market in the US and restrict its use in agriculture. I was aware that chlorpyrifos was part of an insecticide named dursban, which has been produced in King's Lynn since 1978. Last year, as a result of scare stories, I checked what was made at Dow Chemicals and looked at some of the chemicals' properties.

Chlorpyrifos is not emitted into the air during manufacture. It has low vapour pressure, and I was assured that there is no danger to those who work in the plant or to the local community from the manufacturing process. It is not listed as a human carcinogen. Extensive tests are required around the world, including in the US and Europe, and the tests for carcinoginicity, mutagenicity and teratogenic activities were all negative. Therefore, I have no concerns about my constituents who live or work near or at the plant. However, like all hon. Members, I am anxious that we should heed good science and protect consumers.

The announcement was made in the United States on 6 or 7 June. On 9 June, a press release was issued by a pressure group in the United Kingdom, demanding that Britain follow the American lead and bans the dangerous pesticide chlorpyrifos, which has been associated with brain damage...UK consumers are regularly exposed to this chemical in their diets.

The press release quotes documents from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food as saying that the chemical has been found in apples, grapes, strawberries, oranges and celery. It goes on to say,

New research by the US Environmental Protection Agency has shown that it can cause brain damage in rats.

The pressure group comments:

This filthy pesticide should be taken off the shelves at once. If it's too toxic for the US, it's too toxic for us. Next week is Food Safety Week—the Government will be telling people how to prepare their food safely. But the Government has to set an example—and make sure that food is grown safely in the first place.

That sort of press release is not untypical of pretty junky science. I took the trouble to look up some of the original documents to see what was said in the press reports and by scientists about the decisions taken in the United States. I also looked at the summaries of the pesticides monitoring data published by MAFF to see what was actually said. The fear expressed in the press release is that people are regularly exposed to the chemical, are finding it in their fruit and that it must be taken away.

The independent chairman of a working group on the subject said that it was not possible to detect the pesticides in almost 99 per cent. of the samples examined. The legal limits are set so as to include large safety factors. The chairman said that none of the residues that exceeded those limits were high enough to cause concern. He said:

The extremely small proportion of samples which exceeded the legal limits would not cause harm to consumers.

Similarly, it has been said that the results show that consumers would be at negligible risk from the small proportion of samples where maximum residue limits were exceeded. Of course, samples that show that the legal limits have been exceeded are cause for concern, but they are not necessarily cause for panic if we have gained efficacy in the product. The reason that such products have been used for 30-odd years is that they are known to be efficient.

In looking at the US decision, I was particularly interested in an article in The Seattle Times by William O. Robertson, who was head of the Washington poison control centre for 30 years. He explained that he did not recall a single incident of dursban-caused illness. He went on to explain that that chemical was withdrawn because safety factor was piled upon safety factor. The US Environmental Protection Agency decided that it would not use human test data; it was thought to be ethically unacceptable. It decided instead to base the safety factor on animal doses. It worked out the dose that seemed to cause an effect on the animal, multiplied it by 10 for safety and then by a further factor of 10; it also took account of the size of the animal compared to humans to allow for the possibility that we might be more sensitive than the animal, and then added another factor of 10 because children might be involved. That is a safety factor of 1,000.

I know that time is pressing, Mr. Deputy Speaker, but I want to balance the argument. I accept the precautionary principle, but I want to add a little common sense. A safety factor of 1,000 is leading to the removal of goods from the shelves. That may be correct, and I am happy for our regulators to consider it, but we should not automatically assume that we need a safety factor of 1,000 between what the tests show to be harmful and what we allow. There is room for debate.

For instance, I shall consider the precautionary principle in relation to the poison that I know best—alcohol. If we tested how much alcohol could be given to a dog before it became affected and then applied a safety factor of 1,000, I would not be allowed even a teaspoon of beer. That is not reasonable, because we have thousands of years of experience of alcohol. The precautionary principle depends on a degree of ignorance. It might be argued that, because children are damaged in motor vehicle accidents and exposed to risks on the roads, we should introduce a further factor of 10 as a precautionary principle and reduce the speed limit on motorways to 7 mph.

A balancing act is needed. I hope that the Government will take it seriously. Of course we must listen to what science has to say, but we must use a modicum of common sense in balancing efficacy against knowledge. We have 30 years' experience. I hope that the Government will distinguish between chemicals, consider the evidence and not be bulldozed into making decisions across broad spectrums because of the trash science that we too often read in our media.

Several hon. Members rose—

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Frank Cook): Order. I appeal to the remaining speakers to take account of the reduced time left for Front-Bench spokesmen.

10.34 am

Mr. Colin Breed (South-East Cornwall): Successive Governments have shown a remarkable unwillingness to act on any sort of precautionary principle in the handling of OPs. Indeed, as early as 1951, it was recommended that dye be added to organophosphate sheep dips to enable farmers to identify splashes, and that labels reading "Deadly poison" be used. What we are talking about has been known for a long time.

I believe that OP sufferers have gone for years without being properly diagnosed. General practitioners and hospitals have received little guidance in diagnosing the symptoms, and many victims have been diagnosed with different problems, such as myalgic encephalomyelitis or Parkinson's disease. It is only recently that, following the report of the Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment and the recommendation of the Veterinary Products Committee, it has been decided to ban OPs pending the improvement of their containers, to prevent exposure to concentrate.

At present, no one is really winning. Farmers are suffering because of sheep scab in their flocks while OP dips are banned. More importantly, they suffer ill health after years of inadequate precautions. There seems to be no doubt that OP sheep dips are dangerous and toxic. Surely, all the evidence that has been available for some time is sufficient to conclude that the precautionary principle in some form—and I accept that there are various forms—demands protection for all those who work with OPs as well as substantial Government support for the development of alternative, and less risky, methods of preventing sheep scab in particular. Like many of my colleagues, I was a little disappointed by the failure of the Agriculture Committee's report to expose the area of need that I have outlined. By focusing chiefly on the containers issue, the Committee has deflected attention from the crucial need to investigate alternatives.

The Government have sought to deny any risk, claiming that most of the people in contact with concentrates such as OPs would have been environmental health officers, technicians or individual regimental hygiene duties personnel, who are appropriately trained in procedures and the use of equipment. However, it is clear that many people use OPs without that training and without an understanding of the precautions that are needed. Indeed, an answer to a recent parliamentary question stated:

> there is currently no reason to believe that Gulf veterans who might have been in casual contact with dilute pesticide...or with the malathion dust used to de-louse Iraqi prisoners of war, are at increased risk of long-term ill health.—[Official Report, House of Commons, 20 January 2000; Vol. 342, c. 536W.]

Surely, however, the crucial word in that passage is "currently". Constant use of such language leaves the door open. The scientific jury is clearly out, and there is a need at least for further investigation of such poisoning.

What all kinds of sufferers want is real action by the Government. I have three quick suggestions. First, we should clearly and immediately adopt the precautionary principle, and Government policy should in every way possible take account of the lessons of the past when insufficient precautions have been taken. Secondly, we should undertake a scheme properly to assess the risks associated with OPs. Those are jumping up in all sorts of areas, such as aircraft lubricants, as mentioned by my hon. Friend the Member for North Cornwall (Mr. Tyler). There are all kinds of ways in which OPs can become a part of people's lives without their knowing about it. Thirdly, I am concerned about funding for research and development. We heard earlier about the genome project. The money available to investigate that was enormous. That is because of the enormous commercial benefits. Research and development today seem to be driven more by the commercial benefit imperative than by some other considerations such as the health of people who come into contact with chemicals.

Mr. Lembit Öpik (Montgomeryshire): Will my hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Breed: I am afraid that I do not have time.

Mr. Malcolm Moss (North-East Cambridgeshire): I shall be brief, to allow the Minister time to respond. I add my congratulations to those already given to the hon. Member for Norwich, North (Dr. Gibson). This is an important debate and he has given a comprehensive presentation on this problem.

It is no surprise to me that the Minister of State, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food is responding to the debate. However, the issue straddles more than one Department, and the need for co-ordination between Government Departments is one message that has come out of the debate. The matter should be addressed from several different angles, not only from the MAFF perspective.

I shall restrict my comments to the MAFF decision taken in December 1999 and announced through a written answer in the Lords to withdraw all organophosphate sheep dips in response to fears that the chemicals posed a danger to human health. We should be clear that the ban is not a blanket ban on OP dip chemicals, but a withdrawal of the OP dip containers. The Government appear to be saying that OPs will be reintroduced when the containers have been redesigned to minimise operator exposure to OPs. Many anti-OP campaigners, including the Pesticides Trust, welcomed their move, as have most of this morning's speakers, but the general reaction from the agricultural community has been more hostile.

Many livestock producers believe that OP dips are the most effective means of controlling common ectoparasites on sheep, such as scab and blowfly. The alternatives are all problematic owing to lack of effectiveness, expense and time restrictions on releasing treated animals into the food chain. The main alternatives are synthetic pyrethroids, greater use of which is likely to increase resistance to parasites.

Farmers are concerned about their animals' welfare and fear the effect of worsening animal welfare on their livelihoods. Although parasitic infection may not cause premature death, there is a direct read-across from it to rate of maturation, the value of by-products such as sheepskin and increased veterinary expenses. The greatest fear is of an outbreak of scab. The hon. Member for Norwich, North said that there was little sign of that at the moment, but the use of illegally held stockpiles of OP dips may be keeping such an outbreak in check.

Although farmers are primarily concerned with the animal welfare consequences of withdrawal of OPs, concerns have also been expressed about environmental consequences. The problem lies in the lack of suitable alternatives to OPs. The Environment Agency, which monitors pollution levels in watercourses, warns of a much greater risk of groundwater pollution from the use of synthetic pyrethroids, which are the main alternative to OPs for sheep farmers. Those chemicals are 100 times more toxic to aquatic life than OPs, and pose a particular threat to invertebrate creatures that sustain larger aquatic animals such as salmon.

The Agriculture Committee report was critical of the Government and took MAFF to task over its handling of the decision. The Committee said that > much of the confusion surrounding the announcement of 20 December could have been prevented if more effective procedures had been in place for consulting manufacturers, farmers' representatives and statutory agencies and for disseminating advice and information after the decision had been made public.

The Committee was also clear about the consequences of the Government's actions, stating:

> We remain concerned that users of sheep dips are without their preferred means of combating sheep disease for the foreseeable future and there are likely to be severe economic, environmental and animal welfare implications as a result.

Mr. Richard Livsey (Brecon and Radnorshire): Does the hon. Gentleman not agree that the horns of the dilemma are that either the chemicals used seriously damage human health or they devastate the environment? Should not objective, non-commercial research be carried out to produce new products as soon as possible to overcome both those problems?

Mr. Moss: The hon. Gentleman makes a good point, but the Government are not saying that at the moment. They have acted merely because doing nothing would not have been acceptable. There are no real alternatives to OPs apart from pyrethroids. Research, not least into the effects on human health, is important in regard to every aspect of OPs.

I wish to ask the Minister several questions, some of which she might not be able to answer today; if not, I would welcome answers in writing. First, why did not MAFF Ministers consult more widely before announcing the ban on OP dips? Which organisations did the Government consult in the months between receiving the report from the Institute of Occupational Medicine and making their decision to withdraw OPs? Does MAFF have any contingency plan in the event of a major outbreak of scab occur? If MAFF intends to reintroduce OPs, will it publish a timetable for that? What advice will MAFF give farmers on alternatives to OP dips? Why did not the Government consider the environmental impact of OP withdrawal before making their announcement? Finally, will the Government accept and implement the recommendations of the Agriculture Committee?

The Minister of State, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (Ms Joyce Quin): I am pleased to respond to the debate, which is on a subject of interest and concern to many people. I begin by emphasising that the Government take those concerns seriously. Two years ago, we initiated the most rigorous and transparent scrutiny of OPs ever undertaken.

I appreciate the way in which the debate has been conducted, beginning with the balanced introduction of my hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, North (Dr. Gibson). He pointed to the wide-ranging nature of the debate and said that the concerns that have been expressed relate to a number of different Departments. I do not accept the criticism of the hon. Member for North-East Cambridgeshire (Mr. Moss), who speaks for the Opposition on such issues, that we do not have a co-ordinated approach to the matter. The Government set up an official group on OPs, which is co-ordinated by my department and which reported in June 1998. Since then, all Departments with an interest have been involved—the Ministry of Defence, the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, the Health and Safety Executive, the Cabinet Office, the territorial departments and so on. We are anxious to ensure co-ordination on the issue, different aspects of which come under the responsibility of different Departments, and to ensure that the matters are properly considered. The existence of the all-party group helps in that respect because it offers a way of bringing together interested members from all parties who may be interested in different aspects of the issue—that has certainly been reflected in the varied contributions that have been made this morning.

We all know that OPs are toxic chemicals, acute exposure to which has ill-health effects. The question that needs to be answered is whether long-term exposure to low levels of OPs has similarly detrimental effects—a point that was made by my hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, North in his introduction. It is the question that we put to the Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment—COT—in 1998. It set up a working group of the best specialists in the field, which took evidence from those with an interest in the problem, including representatives of sufferers' groups. Its report was published last November. It concluded that ill-health effects from prolonged low-level exposure to OPs remained unproven, although there is still a question about whether a small group of individuals may be especially susceptible to OPs.

The three regulatory committees that advise the Government on the subject are the Veterinary Products Committee, the Advisory Committee on Pesticides and the Committee on Safety of Medicines. We asked them to consider the implications of the report. They all advised that, on the basis of current scientific knowledge, there should be no general withdrawal of OPs from the market. However, they endorsed the need for further research to tackle the identified points of uncertainty.

Simultaneously, the Veterinary Products Committee advised us on the results of a three-year study by the Institute of Occupational Medicine in Edinburgh into sheep dippers' exposure to OPs. It suggested that the greatest hazard arose when handling the concentrated dip.

We took immediate action to implement the committees' advice through a four-point plan. First, marketing authorisation holders were required to withdraw all OP sheep dips from the market pending the introduction of modified concentrate containers designed to minimise the risk of operator exposure. Secondly, we revoked the approval for three OP pesticide compounds for which data packages had not been submitted as part of the review on OPs by the Advisory Committee on Pesticides. Thirdly, we implemented measures to promote best practice and, fourthly, we are developing a targeted research programme to implement the research recommendations of the committees. The importance of research was rightly emphasised by several hon. Members in the debate.

Many views have been expressed. The hon. Member for North-East Cambridgeshire mentioned the report of the Select Committee on Agriculture. The hon. Member for Ludlow (Mr. Gill) referred to concerns in his constituency and to his contact with the farming community, especially sheep farmers. He signalled the fact that there has been a mixed reaction to the Government's decision. Some people have supported it, but we know that the National Farmers Union did not welcome the procedure or the substance of the decision. Nor did other organisations such as the National Sheep Association.

Hon. Members will be aware of the views that were expressed to the Select Committee on Agriculture. It concluded that, although it did not want to dismiss the sufferings of those whose ill health had been linked to OP sheep dips, it would be of general benefit if OP sheep dip concentrates were restored to the market in suitably designed containers as soon as possible. It is fair to say, therefore, that many different views have been expressed on the subject. It is the Government's responsibility to listen to representations and to act on the basis of our scientific advice, which we have done. However, I would not underestimate the complexity of some of the issues involved, and my hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, North did not do so either.

Mr. Öpik: As a member of the Select Committee, I want to remind the Minister that the view expressed in the report was mainly based on the fact that at present no alternative product balances the interests of preventing sheep scab and not wrecking the environment.

Ms Quin: I understand the hon. Gentleman's point. Some products are used as alternatives; the hon. Member for Ludlow spoke about their cost and efficacy and the question of long-lasting effects in controlling the parasites and the relevant diseases. That explains many of the representations that the Government have received.

I understand that hon. Members are concerned to know whether OP sheep dips might return to the market and, if so, when. All that I can say is that we expect to receive further advice from the Veterinary Products Committee shortly, and, in common with previous practice, we shall make an announcement to Parliament before informing the marketing authorisation holders of the Government's decision.

The hon. Member for North-East Cambridgeshire asked several questions that were also raised in the Select Committee's report. Obviously, the Government have a responsibility to respond to that report and shall do so shortly. If that response does not answer the questions that the hon. Gentleman asked, I shall write to him and, given the interest that has been shown this morning, ensure that my letter is available in the House of Commons Library.

The precautionary principle was mentioned, and I accept that there is no universally accepted definition of the principle, either domestically or across Europe, where many such regulations are negotiated and agreed. None the less, the authorisation procedures for veterinary medicinal products and pesticides take a generally precautionary approach to risk assessment. The thrust of our precautionary approach is that exposure should be reduced well below the level that might cause problems.

The Health and Safety Executive evaluates the practicality of recommended proportions. Surveys of dipping practice and inspections have taken place, so we believe that there is evidence of improved practice. That is borne out by the fact that the number of incidents investigated has now fallen from its peak in the early 1990s. We must pay tribute to those who expressed concern about the products. Their action brought about some extra controls and extra precautions. As a result, an approach that is generally more responsible has emerged. I would not like to under-emphasise that.

The risk from pesticides was mentioned, and, in that regard, the Government's primary aim is to protect people, animals and the environment. Like veterinary medicines, all pesticides are assessed for safety in use, and no pesticide may be sold or used unless approved by Ministers. All pesticides are subject to routine review if evidence emerges about their safety. In response to public concern, our current domestic review programme has focused on the use of OP compounds.

I shall briefly refer to the research programme that we are undertaking. Hon. Members present, particularly those in the all-party group, are familiar with the research programme, but the hon. Member for Brecon and Radnorshire (Mr. Livsey) asked about research into alternatives to dips, and I feel that neither he nor the hon. Member for North-East Cambridgeshire recognised the work that we are doing.

We are funding a major programme of research into alternative strategies for controlling sheep scab, costing £1.6 million. The projects include basic studies on the biology of the scab mite, aimed at identifying aspects of the mite's physiology that could be targets for alternative control methods. They could include vaccines, fungi pathogenic to the mites, means of altering the allergic response of the sheep or means of interfering with the mite's feeding process. It is important that hon. Members recognise that the Government are focusing on that and are keen to deal with the issue seriously

I welcome the fact that this debate has taken place. Ministers in other Departments who are interested in the subjects raised will be aware of it, but I shall draw their attention to the comments made by hon. Members about the responsibility of other Departments. I hope that, in attempting to answer at least some of the questions that have been asked, I have persuaded hon. Members that the Government are dealing with the issue with the utmost seriousness.

Fraud (European Community)

11 am

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Frank Cook): We come now to the next issue for our consideration. I call David Michael Davis.

Mr. David Davis (Haltemprice and Howden): Thank you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, for giving my full title.

The fact that the European Commission suffers from fraud, corruption, incompetence and nepotism is a matter of public knowledge and public record a little more than a year after the pseudo-resignation of the Commission. I say "pseudo-resignation", because it was designed to protect rather than punish the guilty. The pay, perks, pensions and powers of all the Commissioners were maintained until their eventual replacement by the current Commission.

I raise the issue of fraud because of an event that took place before those resignations that makes me worry about the extent to which the European Union takes the issue seriously. A year before those dramatic events at the Commission, the Public Accounts Committee had for the second time raised the problem of fraud in the European Union. The European Court of Auditors had raised the matter more than once. I took part in a debate with Jacques Santer, the President of the Commission at that time, on the "Today" programme. His first response—admittedly, a year before the crisis, but after he had received at least two ECA reports on the matter—was to deny that there was any significant fraud, despite our criticisms and the fact that it had been raised at the Council of Ministers.

Secondly, when that argument failed, Mr. Santer said that fraud was the fault of the member states—that more than 80 per cent. of the fraud related to members states, not the Commission, so the member states should solve the problem. Thirdly, he said that the mechanisms available to deal with fraud were perfectly okay and that OCLAF—the office of the Commission that was supposed to co-ordinate anti-fraud efforts— was doing its job and there was no need to make it more independent. All that was contrary to the eventual findings of the committee of wise men appointed by the European Parliament.

I mention that individual event, because historically the tendency of the Commission and all the institutions of the Union has been to sweep uncomfortable issues under the carpet. I am one of those—perhaps we are in the minority in this Room—who do not believe that we should leave the European Union. We must build a Union that can hold the faith of the public whom it serves. The current Union does not do anything like that. I do not want the Union to be allowed to forget about the problem, so that it returns in five or 10 years' time in an even more unpleasant and virulent form.

I have seen no reference—this may be my fault—in the intergovernmental conference preparations or in the agendas of Feira or for Nice in December to deal with the problems of fraud, incompetence and corruption in the European Union. What are the Government's plans? I, and many others, have no intention of letting the issue be forgotten.

I have several questions for the Minister: first, what immediate action has been taken on the frauds that we know about? Such action is a test of the resolve of this Government and of those throughout the European Union to deal with the issue, rather than being a conclusive answer to the problem. Secondly, what reforms will Vice-President Kinnock introduce to resolve the issue, and how speedily will they be made? Thirdly, what further actions will be taken to deal with the issue? Will they be on the IGC agenda in December?

I have my tongue in my cheek when I say "immediate action" because I am basing my comments on data from the 1998 European Court of Auditors report, the most recent one available. It is two years since the matters that we are discussing were aired and three years since the actions were committed. That is an aside, but it has implications for the European Union.

The ECA raised the matter of frauds and irregularities in individual countries; this country was not perfect as there was fraud totalling some £12 million. However, far and away the biggest irregularity was in Italy, where the total reached £106 million, mostly in four major olive oil scandals. As the United Kingdom is one of the few net contributors in the European Union, those scandals cost British taxpayers tens of millions of pounds. The Treasury should therefore take an interest on behalf of the British taxpayer. Was a penalty levied on Italy for the £106-million irregularity? If so, has it been paid?

The second issue raised in the ECA report was a substantial fraud relating to the export of meat to Jordan. A subsidy of £46 million was involved, but it was not really for export to Jordan—it was an embargo-busting operation for Iraq. European Union taxpayers' money was used in defiance of a United Nations resolution and western nations' actions to control the evil dictatorship in Iraq. I want to know whether a prosecution has been brought against those who defied almost every national policy in the European Union and used significant sums of British taxpayers' money to do so.

A third issue in the ECA report was the contract awarded for guarding the European Commission buildings. That is poignant because it was awarded by the security department, which is responsible for protecting the integrity—in every sense—of the European Commission. The contract was found to be fraudulent; it involved ghost workers and criminal false accounting. The ECA report stated that four members of the department would be disciplined and the case was handed to the Belgian police for prosecution. Has that prosecution been completed, and if so has anyone has been punished as a result? As I said, we should bear in mind the fact that the issues I have raised are three years old.

I raised those cases as symbols of how seriously we take the matter. The Chamber will note that one of them relates to a national failure, one to an individual contract, and one to something done by the Commission. I picked them because the way in which they will be dealt with is interesting.

I am also concerned about the strategic reforms that the European Union is undertaking. I should say up front that I approve of the fact that Vice-President Kinnock has been put in charge of the reforms. I might upset my Conservative colleagues by saying that, but he is a tough and honest politician; nobody would deny him that. He knows the European system. Some would consider that a vice rather than a virtue, but in this context it is a virtue. More importantly, he knows our system, which is one of the best for maintaining propriety in public life. We are not necessarily alone in that: one or two other systems in Europe are comparable. Vice-President Kinnock does not have to reinvent the wheel in what he is doing in the European Union. He has lived in a system that puts propriety at the top of the priority tree.

However, no matter how good, determined or tough he is, he cannot do the job alone. The Comptroller and Auditor General and the Public Accounts Committee have sought to help him. He will need UK Government support. Sometimes, support takes the form of pushing as well as helping. I will return to that point.

I will focus on the nature and speed of what Vice-President Kinnock intends to do. I disagree with him about the new anti-fraud office. The National Audit Office's staff are not civil servants. They are independently recruited; there might be secondment arrangements, but there is not an integrated career path by which a member of the NAO's staff could look forward to working in, for instance, the Department of Social Security or the Ministry of Defence. That is so for a good reason—it means that there is no social or career pressure on an individual to pull punches in criticising the body that he is investigating. That is not true of the new European Anti-Fraud Office—OLAF. I am not criticising any individual. I do not know the new head of OLAF, Franz-Hermann Bruener, but, as far as I can tell from studying his curriculum vitae, he is well qualified and independently minded, although he has previously been employed by the European Commission in other respects.

Simply being a part of an organisation can make it difficult for an audit body or an anti-fraud body to be as impartial as it ought to be. That situation can render it open to corruption or to pressure. After all, one of the issues that I raised earlier concerned the security arm of the Commission. OLAF should properly have been a completely separate body, accountable either to the European Court of Auditors or to the European Court of Justice. I am concerned about the situation, especially because the pressure to prevent that from happening came from two sources. Surprisingly, it came not from the Commission in the first instance. Instead, it came from the European Parliament—I am afraid that there is no surprise in that, to put it bluntly—and from the Council of Ministers. What stance did the British Government take on the matter? If we did not support the British parliamentary model and the other best models, most of which come from northern Europe, why not, and what was the logic behind the position? That situation is a flaw in the system. There is supposed to be a superstructure to protect the system, but it will not prevent the pressures about which I am concerned.

Some of what I am about to say with regard to the European Parliament's role might be an important component of possible proposals for the next IGC. A Parliament—certainly our Parliament—is a fierce and largely independent scrutineer of Government, although there are obviously party pressures within it, which I shall discuss in a moment. The European Parliament has a peculiar problem, which is not entirely its fault. As a result of the relative power in Brussels, a dependency relationship has developed between the European Parliament and the Commission. The Commission has always been the source of most power. Therefore, if a European parliamentarian wanted to get something done, it was useful to have a contact at the Commission. In a sense, that is sensible politics, but it means that there is not the same separation between the Executive and Parliament as exists in our system—even though we have the Executive within the Parliament—when challenges are made over spending, corruption or whatever.

Moreover, no single party is in power, which is a natural outcome of the arrangements in Europe. What tends to happen is that natural alliances are formed between parts of the European Parliament and individual Commissioners, either on the basis of national origin or, more often these days—perhaps this is a fitting European ideal—on the basis of party. I am afraid that the Minister might find this uncomfortable, but we saw something of that in the affair of Madame Cresson, which led up to the great crisis that produced the change in the Commission. Madame Cresson is a socialist French Commissioner, and there is no doubt that socialist Members of the European Parliament attempted to protect her. I do not hold that against any one party. It is a structural element of the Parliament that right-wing or Christian Democrat parliamentarians will tend to form alliances with Christian Democrat Commissioners, and that socialist parliamentarians will tend to form alliances with socialist Commissioners. That means that the whole concept of having a separate, impartial Parliament is flawed.

Gladstone dealt with that issue by setting up the PAC. To my great benefit today, he ensured that the Chairman of the PAC—the principal scrutineer in Parliament—is a member of the Opposition, who is clearly not a member of the Executive. We might suggest to the European Parliament or to the IGC a series of reinforcements of the budgetary committee of the European Parliament, one of which would be a rotating chairmanship, so that whenever a Commissioner from any party was in front of the Commission, the chairmanship for that session or report would be held by a member of an opposing party; a Christian Democrat in the case of a socialist Commissioner or a socialist in the case of a Christian Democrat Commissioner.

Mr. Mark Oaten (Winchester): The right hon. Gentleman makes an interesting point, but would he extend that idea to require opposites in terms of the countries from which individuals come?

Mr. Davis: That is a fair point. I have considered that, but have to say that I ducked it because I was not at all sure how it would work with the oath sworn by Commissioners on taking office, in which they undertake to give up all their national affiliations. All of us who have worked in Europe know that the oath is a complete nonsense because Commissioners look to their national origins, but I was unsure whether such a proposal would be at odds with some fundamental part of the treaty. I have not had a chance to re-read the treaty to check that, having read it too many times. However, the hon. Gentleman makes a fair point and I would be inclined to agree that his suggestion would reinforce the independence of the budgetary committee. In addition, I strongly believe that we should give the budgetary committee of the European Parliament the right to summon persons and papers—the same right as we have in the House. Over the years, the Government have stressed that the first duty of the European Parliament should be financial scrutiny. We cannot ask it to perform that role unless we give it that power.

Mrs. Teresa Gorman (Billericay): My right hon. Friend's analysis fascinates me. I am sure that he would agree that the role of independent employees of the Commission should be taken into account, one of whom blew the whistle on the latest fraud. Will my right hon. Friend acknowledge the role of Brian Connolly, who worked in the European Commission treasury department and who wrote a marvellous book entitled "The Rotten Heart of Europe" in which he described those practices? Those who work inside the system should have the opportunity to declare their concerns.

Mr. Davis: I entirely take my hon. Friend's point. Like the hon. Member for Winchester (Mr. Oaten), she has caught me on something that I had decided not to mention, but I shall deal with the issue now. If my hon. Friend will forgive me, I shall focus more on Mr. van Buitenen, because although Mr. Connolly made some interesting points, he would have been in breach of British civil service rules as he was writing about policy matters outside his remit.

Mr. van Buitenen, the Dutchman who blew the whistle, was badly treated. Indeed, his treatment still seems shocking. It does not reflect well on the Commission, the EU or its member states. I believe that whistle blowers should be protected. Vice-President Kinnock's proposals include such a provision, but I would have made it retrospective. I believe that we should compensate Mr. van Buitenen for the way in which he was treated. I would even consider compensating Mr. Connolly, because, even though he was in breach of British civil service rules, the treatment that was accorded him was inappropriate.

The answer to my hon. Friend is yes—I would write that into the IGC. It is an area where the EU has, in my judgment, been in breach of its much-vaunted commitment to human rights. One of the fundamental human rights is not being asked to do something that is immoral or improper; that right was not provided.

My next proposal might shock some of my hon. Friends. I have tussled with the problem at length because I do not believe in giving more power to the EU. It has enough power for the moment, but, in this context, I would give it one more power relating to the budgetary committee. In cases of malpractice, such as those of the past year or two, I would allow it to dismiss a Commissioner. I would not allow dismissal for policy issues or other matters; but for malpractice it is implausible to ask a Parliament to oversee financial expenditure and not to allow it to penalise those who engage in malpractice. I agonised over the issue, but I concluded that if an action was justiciable as malpractice, removal should be available.

The third item of Mr. Kinnock's proposals is not greatly known; indeed, even as a Minister for Europe, I barely heard reference to it. I speak of European staff regulations. Hon. Members may not be aware of them, but they virtually have the force of law within EU institutions. They would make our labour laws of the 1970s look progressive. [Interruption.] I have struck a chord with the right hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field). They limit what can be done when a malpractice is found. The best example is one of the earlier frauds discovered in 1990 by Edward McMillan-Scott MEP, in the tourism directorate, which has yet to be brought to court. If my memory is correct, the sum of £5 million was involved and the people concerned—I cannot call them the guilty people, because we do not know about that, the case not having come to court—are still in receipt of pensions and full benefits from the Commission.

The staff regulations have been an impediment to resolving fraud and malpractice problems all along. The Kinnock reforms, the timetable for which I have before me, and which, incidentally, incorporate the whistle blower protection that we discussed earlier, do not even involve consultation on the question of proposed changes to staff regulations until the first quarter of next year. It is not proposed to bring those reforms of staff regulations before the Council until the end of next year. The earliest point at which we could conceivably obtain a change to one of the most fundamental impediments to proper management of the Commission would be four years after the crisis that led to debates such as today's. That is altogether too slow. Why is there such a delay? If the Government do not agree with it, will they do something to speed matters up? Given that there has not even been any consultation for a year, the problem is clearly not one of negotiation or proper practice. It is more a problem of failing to make the issue enough of a priority.

The European Court of Auditors pointed out that many of the problems that we are discussing arise because the European Union tries to do too much. The worst example of that—the Cresson failure—demonstrates that the lesson has been completely ignored by the current Commission. The European Commission Humanitarian Office—ECHO—was the site of the worst of the problems exposed a couple of years ago. Hundreds of millions of ecus or pounds were improperly accounted for. We do not know that they were fraudulently disposed of, but we do not know where they went, either. However, we know that at least one contract, for £2.4 million, was completely fictitious; there was no other contracting party. The money was being leached out of the system to be used at the discretion of various members of the Commission. That arose directly from the fact that the European Union was trying to do too much and had created a culture of going around the rules. Perhaps that might be done in the first instance to achieve worthwhile aims, but from then on the rules become irrelevant. The barrier against malpractice, fraud and criminal activity then vanishes.

What I have described happened a few years ago. What is happening now? Only six weeks ago, Chris Patten made some cogent comments about his directorate of the Commission. He showed that staff are trying to spend two, three or four times as much money as would be normal in an international development department. That led our Secretary of State for International Development to describe the European Union as the worst aid agency in the world. I do not often agree with her, but she has a point. As Mr. Patten said, it can take as long as nine years for it to fulfil a promise. To a Nicaraguan whose home has been swept away by a flood or an African peasant whose family is dying in a famine, nine years is eternity.

The issue is not simply one of fraud, but one of people dying because of our incompetent system. What Mr. Patten has talked about shows that we still have the same problems as we had two or three years ago. He has come up with 23-point plan to try to spend the money that he has. Having looked at that plan, I have no confidence that it will stop any fraud whatever. Mr. Patten talks about relocating decisions to EU posts around the world—which, invariably, will mean less control—and a series of things of that nature, none of which will resolve the problem of fraud. That is a serious weakness in the system.

I have no confidence that we have made any progress. The lesson of the Cresson behaviour was learned, namely that the European Union should do less and do it better. As long as the EU focuses more on politics and promises than on good management and delivery, two things will happen: on the one hand, British and other taxpayers' money will be wasted and, on the other, the reputation of the European union will go down. That cannot be a good thing, whatever one's view of the EU.

Mr. Edward Leigh (Gainsborough): It is a great honour to follow my right hon. Friend the Member for Haltemprice and Howden (Mr. Davis) both as a friend and as a member of the Public Accounts Committee, which he chairs and on which I am honoured to serve with him. As always, my right hon. Friend has done a great service to Parliament in the way in which he presented his speech.

I am happy to speak on the issue because agricultural fraud has had a major impact on my constituency. I shall return to that in a moment. Of course, no one really knows how much fraud there is in the EU as, by its very nature, it is impossible to quantify. Klaus Tiedmann of Freiburg university in Germany thought that it might be anything between 7 and 10 per cent. of the total EU budget. If it is, we are talking about very large figures indeed. Needless to say, the European Commission has a far lower figure and says that fraud could be as low as 2 per cent. However, even the Commission acknowledges that the cash figure is much higher than the EU's reported figure, which is based on auditing agricultural spending exclusively. By any measure, the problem is enormous and costs all of us who live in Europe a very large sum indeed, which is why our debate is important and timely.

My right hon. Friend dealt with some of the major scandals that have afflicted the EU over the past 10 years. He mentioned that our colleague, the Conservative MEP Edward McMillan-Scott, detected the tourism fraud which amounted to some £3 million. As my right hon. Friend said, we are still waiting for that to come to court. In November 1995, the Court of Auditors refused to certify the EU's annual accounts on discovering that nearly £3 billion was not properly accounted for. My right hon. Friend mentioned that, in early 1998, the Commission's anti-fraud unit revealed that some £600 million of its humanitarian aid budget between 1993 and 1995 could not be accounted for, of which £1.5 million had been intended for refugees from the genocide in Rwanda and Burundi. That £1.5 million had simply vanished into the ether. To make the episode worse, the incident only came to light years after the fact, allegedly because the Commission did not inform the Court of Auditors when irregularities in the aid programme were first noted in 1994.

Some explanations of why that money went astray are sublimely pathetic. Some reports, such as one in The Sunday Times in October 1998, maintained that money intended for field workers in areas of conflict was spent on hiring more bureaucrats in Brussels. Another reason, according to a report in The Daily Telegraph in October 1998, was that the money was not necessarily misspent or wasted, but that no one either knew or could trace where it went. Clearly, fraud can take place in many areas under many guises and we must find a system that will ensure that we try to reduce it.

In my few short remarks, I want to deal with agricultural fraud and the major problem of fraud in the common agricultural policy. Agra Europe, the European independent weekly, summed up that problem rather well. It said:

> The essence of the major—and minor—frauds . . . is either claims for subsidy payment on products which do not exist or the misrepresentation of a less valuable form of a commodity as a more valuable one. Almost all CAP frauds are variations on these essentially simple stratagems. The more it becomes necessary for the EU to support and protect every part and sector of the agricultural market, so these measures become more comprehensive and more complex.

Commenting on why fraud is so closely associated with the CAP, Agra Europe said:

> The reasons are obvious: the CAP still accounts for almost half of the EU's expenditure and spending within the . . . budget essentially involves payments to individuals and companies involved in trade in agricultural commodities. Expenditure in other sectors of the budget tends to involve payments to government and other official bodies and fraud is therefore much more difficult to perpetrate on these types of payments.

That article sums up why fraud in the CAP—accounting, as the policy does, for half the EU's budget—is such a great problem. It also explains why so much of the EU's expenditure is diverted directly to individuals, small companies, farms and so on.

How can we deal with that? Last Friday, I got some insights when I visited Mr. James Walgate, who farms in Swallow in Lincolnshire. Turning from the rather esoteric arguments in which we talk about millions and billions of pounds, I shall take matters right down to the farm gate and give an example of how fraud affects farmers in our constituencies. I sat in Mr. Walgate's farmhouse and talked through some of the issues with him and his colleagues who, as a group of English farmers, are tearing their hair out at the amount of regulation and red tape with which they have to deal. They told me that they feel that they are not farming barley, wheat, cows or sheep, but brown envelopes, filled, not with cash—sadly for them—but with forms. Indeed, they showed me form after form after form.

No doubt, all those forms are considered necessary to combat fraud, the very issue discussed by my right hon. Friend. The farmers showed me page after page of the set-aside form, much of the information in it duplicated. They showed me a folder full of all the enforcement notices on health and safety at work with which they must deal. My right hon. Friend may tell me that all those issues show that the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food is doing its best to ensure that the subsidies that are available to our farmers are not misspent fraudulently. However, one must ask oneself whether those farmers' competitors in other EU countries, especially Mediterranean countries, face the same degree of regulation and oversight. Our own farmers are convinced that they do not.

I do not want to get into that debate too much as that ground has been well ploughed in the past. Essentially, the argument is negative, as it is difficult to quantify exactly how much fraud is going on in Spain, Portugal, Italy or wherever. We have heard about olive oil scams and so on, and the Government argue that, in any event, such matters are not their responsibility. However, they are responsible for ensuring that the money is spent correctly with minimum regulation and bureaucracy being imposed on our farmers.

I shall offer a practical solution to finding a way out of the appalling level of fraud in the common agricultural policy. As the article in Agra Europe sets out, that fraud is the result of the very nature of the subsidy system in Europe which, essentially, is based on a long series of production costs and units, such as the suckler premium scheme, the beef special premium scheme, the veal calf premium scheme, and so on. Such a large number of complex support schemes, which are distributed to many individuals, small companies and farmers, means that fraud is inevitable.

The only suggestion that I can make is that we should change the whole subsidy mechanism so that we subsidise incomes rather than production. The Government have introduced the working families tax credit in this country, so why can we not have a working farms tax credit in Europe? That would shift subsidies from the series of complex support mechanisms into simple support for farmers' incomes, especially those that are relatively low.

I know that our Government have argued against such a scheme in the past because our farms tend to be larger than those on the continent, where there are many more part-time farmers. However, I should have thought that one could create a mechanism based on the farm's working population so that the subsidy would depend on whether the farm employed an individual, a family or farm labourers. It would then be far easier to track where the money was going and to deal with fraud. I can see no other way to solve the problem.

I am impressed by what my right hon. Friend has said, and I warmly support all his points about trying to support Vice-President Kinnock. I share his view that Mr. Kinnock is probably the right man for the job—anybody who could sort out the Labour party in the early 1990s is surely capable of having a good go at fraud in the EU. I am sure that my right hon. Friend is right to say that we can try to develop mechanisms within the European Parliament which mirror this country's effective mechanisms such as the National Audit Office.

We must ask, "Who guards the guards?" How can we have a genuinely independent office in the EU, with independent staff and oversight by independent politicians, which can delve into the inner recesses of the EU? These matters are detailed and complex, and we need a body as independent and professional as the National Audit Office to cope with them.

I have no argument with anything that my right hon. Friend said, but I would just point out that, in dealing with the CAP and an area as wide as the EU, in which farming stretches from Sicily up to the north of Scotland, simply tweaking the mechanisms in the European Parliament or the Commission will never enable us to get to the root of evil in the system. It is difficult to root out fraud when such complex, wide-ranging and different subsidies apply to the whole range of production. I end with a plea: will the Government argue for a complete change of the support mechanism which gets to the heart of fraud and moves the basis of subsidy from production to people?

Mr. Frank Field (Birkenhead): I apologise, Mr. Deputy Speaker, for being late to the debate; it is a discourtesy to the Chamber, but I did tell the Speaker that I would be delayed. It was a double blow because I missed half of the speech by the Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee.

I want, first, to centre on why this is such an important issue, whether one is for or against Europe or the euro, and, secondly, to make some suggestions to my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary, who is to reply to the debate. There is no reason why she should respond immediately, but I would be grateful if she corresponded with me and put her replies in the Library.

This issue is so important because there are large sums of British taxpayers' money at stake. Taxpayers are forming a view of Europe as a result of our ability or inability to satisfy them that we are safeguarding their hard-earned cash. In Birkenhead some time ago, we had a debate, not about Europe but about the euro, and very strong views were expressed. It is to the credit of those who were pro-euro that when they went out to try to get the Labour vote out in the European elections, they came back and reported honestly Labour voters' response to the idea of Europe and to voting in a European election: the voters summed up what they saw in Europe as a thieves' kitchen.

That is worrying for those who are serious about the long-term prosperity of Europe. It is more worrying for those who are madly in favour of all that Europe does than it is for those of us who may have some questions, particularly about the euro. It is therefore crucial that the Government respond properly and effectively to the issues that we are raising today.

I would like the Government to take certain steps. We should learn from our efforts in this country to counter fraud, which are admirable compared with those in Europe. It would be sensible for us to give up thinking that we can devise a grand strategy which will deal with fraud with a big bang. We need to learn from one another about the steps that we can see working in member countries and implement those measures across Europe to protect the taxpayers' money that feeds the European machine.

I shall make five brief suggestions. First, given that we do not know whose hand is in whose pocket over there, let alone whose hand is in our pocket over here, it is crucial that we have an independent system of auditing, separate from the main Departments because, clearly, some of the problems are in the Departments themselves. The one organisation that shines out among all others is the Court of Auditors, which is beginning to show the independence that one would expect from a body within the British political tradition. I suggest that the independent audit office that is to operate in Europe should not report to any of the Departments or even to Commissioner Kinnock, although I totally agree with the comments that have been made about him. The office needs to report to the body that has begun to show its independence, as it did in supporting Paul van Buitenen, who has already been mentioned.

Mr. Oaten: I agree in principle with what the right hon. Gentleman is saying, but will he expand on his remarks? If the body is not reporting to the Commission, but only to the Court of Auditors, where is the democratic accountability? How do we get the report and recommendations before elected politicians?

Mr. Field: I have problems about whether the institution is democratic anyway, but I shall deal in a moment with how we can make the EU more accountable to all of us, in Europe and here at home.

My second suggestion is that we should draw attention to the Government's success on whistleblowing. The measures that this country has to protect whistleblowers should operate in Europe as well, where there is an appalling state of affairs. The guy who bravely and effectively drew our attention to what was going on in the thieves' kitchen was set upon by people, many of whom were the thieves themselves, who were trying to make sure that he did not continue to speak. Moreover, he is already back in the dock as a major suspect for leaking papers in another area of fraud. How much pain can one individual take if he is not protected properly by the safeguards for whistleblowers that we in this country think are important? [Interruption.] There is clearly a European fly trying to dive-bomb me. I hope that he does not have one of those sharp umbrellas with which to attack me, or I may keel over.

My third point is that we know that the Commission returns some of our money to us to spend in this country. There is now concern about whether the employment programme funds have all been spent as they should in this country. I ask my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary to look into that matter and report on whether we have followed up the complaints that the relevant Departments in Europe have made about the spending of money that went from this country to Europe and has been recycled back again.

Fourthly, may I suggest, as a method of increasing confidence in what goes on in Europe, that the Government regularly publish the names of those who are charged with fraud offences in Europe; when they were charged; what action is being taken and the final outcome, both internally and then, I hope, in the courts. That would boost morale in this country and show that we are attempting to get to grips with the problem of fraud, the size of which is unclear.

Fifthly—this touches on the point made by the hon. Member for Winchester (Mr. Oaten)—never mind what the European Commission comes up with, could the Government present an annual report to Parliament on what new moves are being undertaken to protect our funds and then find time for us to debate it?

I am pleased to have the privilege of speaking in the debate. I do not think that there is a grand strategy or that we can sit around for decades trying to work out how to deal with fraud, in Europe or elsewhere. The method must be to find out what works and then to build on that. I have made five suggestions, but I have not had a chance to warn my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary about them. I shall understand if she cannot respond to them at the moment. However, I should be grateful to her if any correspondence could be placed in the Library so that we could all draw on it.

Mr. Christopher Gill (Ludlow): I shall make but a brief contribution to the debate. I congratulate my right hon. Friend on obtaining this important debate. In previous years, I have been a regular contributor to the debate on the Court of Auditors report. I have concluded over the years that fraud is endemic in the European Union, and I do not have much hope that it can be eradicated. I shall ask a question that goes to the root of the matter: what is the EU doing with the funds that are available to it that could not be done by nation states?

My right hon. Friend has said that the EU does not have the means or the mechanisms with which to control its funds adequately to ensure that fraud is reduced to an acceptable level. I do not say that fraud can be non-existent, because we shall never live in that perfect world. He was right to say that there is a great difference between what goes on in the European Parliament and the Commission and what happens in the United Kingdom, where our system ensures that there is little dishonesty or fraud in the body politic.

The explanation for that is that we are all directly answerable to our electorates in a way that continental politicians simply are not. If we were caught up to mischief, the electorate would wreak their vengeance on us and we would no longer be Members of Parliament; indeed, the whole Government could suffer a similar fate. In contrast, from time to time on the continent, those whom the electorate have rejected reappear not only as members of their parliaments, but as members of their administrations. Of course that removes one of the important checks and balances of our system, which I believe to be absolutely invaluable.

Rather than Europe trying to drag us into its system of doing things, there would be great virtue in our persuading Europe not only that our system works and ensures that there is little fraud, dishonesty or corruption in our body politic, but that we have the blueprint that the rest of Europe would be well advised to follow.

What does the EU need the money for? I contend that the functions that it discharges that involve or require large sums can and should be carried out by individual nation states. The answer to that question is that the EU needs the money because it needs largesse, without which it could not persuade individuals and individual countries to do things the way it wants.

My hon. Friend the Member for Gainsborough (Mr. Leigh) has mentioned fraud in farming. In my experience, when we crack down on such fraud, the poor take the blame. I have a letter with me this morning about one of my constituents who has 42 cows. She is in desperate trouble because of a crackdown. She has made an error in her paperwork and will forfeit what to her is an important part of her income. That is not the source of the fraud; the source is in the big time. The Mr. Bigs of farming—more particularly, the Mr. Bigs of farming on the continent—get away with massive fraud, and that is the system there. It is probably more than an inspector's life is worth to take issue with the big-time fraudsters who prosper under the system.

My solution to the problem would be to repatriate the spending to the nation states. This country certainly has much tighter controls. If we did not, we as politicians would pay the price by losing our seats, or the whole Government would collapse. My contention is that such money is necessary not for the good that it does, but simply to ensure that the EU has a hold over those on whom it wishes to force its views. That is shown very much in this country's farming industry, where those who might otherwise comment on those matters in the context of agriculture in Britain are in receipt of large sums—some of the cheques are for more than £1 million. Clearly, they will not bite the hand that feeds them. They will not lead the industry in opposition to what I believe is a corrupt regime. That explains, in a roundabout way, why the EU needs that largesse; it buys off its opposition, so it can continue with the systems that many of us think are totally unsatisfactory.

Mr. Mark Oaten (Winchester): I begin by congratulating the right hon. Member for Haltemprice and Howden (Mr. Davis) on initiating the debate. I note that other hon. Members have avoided mentioning his constituency. I shall refer to him as the Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee, because that is easier. I agree entirely with the remarks that he made in his speech, which were powerful coming from the Chairman of that Committee. I hope that the Economic Secretary will deal with some of the points that have been made.

I agree with all the speeches that have been made, except the previous one. We have heard some thoughtful ideas, certainly from the right hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field), and the hon. Member for Gainsborough (Mr. Leigh) made some good points about the common agricultural policy, to which I shall refer later.

I welcome the opportunity to discuss fraud. The EU could deal with fraud in one of two ways: it could adapt and ensure that its public administration goes through the motions of reform, or it could tackle the problem and put in place genuine reforms so that it begins to revitalise the rather tarnished reputation that it has not only in this country but among the citizens of Europe.

As we have heard, it is now 15 months since the European Commission resigned en masse, so it is critical to find out what has happened in that period. We have heard this morning that the Neil Kinnock reforms are in place and bedding down. Whatever our views on Europe, we all hope that Kinnock can draw a permanent line in the sand by creating a much more transparent and accountable Commission.

Before I deal with the reforms and where they are going, it is worth reflecting on the scale of the problem. I speak as someone who is pro-European. I am passionate about our country's role in Europe, but, while researching my speech, I began to feel slightly Euro-sceptic, because the scale of fraud that is taking place brings out the worst in anyone.

This morning, we have heard that there are different debates about how much fraud there has been. The Court of Auditors, which I think is respected on the issue, has estimated that 5.5 per cent. of the EU budget is lost every year through what it describes as mismanagement, wastage or outright fraud. The amount is nearly the same as the UK's contribution to the EU in the first place. There are some who believe that that figure is somewhat conservative and that the real figure is nearer 10 per cent.

Frankly, whether it is 5 or 10 per cent., the figures are outrageous and totally unacceptable. How can any European citizen have faith in a system in which the budget is approved by a democratically elected Parliament, only to be squandered by bureaucratic, centralistic and unaccountable institutions, which is, sadly, what we have in the EU at the moment?

The Court of Auditors has had to deal with large amounts of EU money. I am concerned that there have been delays in the way in which it has been able to sign off accounts. We have heard that it does good work, but it cannot be right that it cannot sign off accounts even, sometimes, many years in arrears. It is not a good process and system to have in place. The Court of Auditors itself cannot work with the type of systems that we have in this country.

In March, I met Paul Van Buitenen, whom we have discussed and who is widely known as the whistleblower. He and I had an hour-long meeting. I was appalled at some of the stories that he told me about the intimidation and difficulties that he had had to face. I was shocked to learn that the Commission had in place what were effectively gagging order regulations against individuals such as him to prevent them from talking about the irregularities that he had discovered. It epitomised the culture of the Commission that an official was forced to put his position and career on the line and to breach confidentiality to expose the substantial mismanagement and fraud.

Although I admired Paul Van Buitenen's courage, I was astounded by the absence of checks and balances that should have been there in the first place. That raises the question: if he had not had the courage to intervene as he did, would the Commission not have resigned? Would it be shielding some of the things that had taken place? I suspect that that would still be the position.

We have had evidence not only from whistleblowers, but, in April, from Sir John Bourn, head of our National Audit Office, who reported to this Parliament, identifying "significant weaknesses" in the management of the Commission's budget. The NAO found that there may have been errors totalling £3 billion in European payouts in 1998 alone. Together with new clear accounting policies to improve the reliability of the Community's accounts, he called for a simplification of the CAP.

I was interested that the hon. Member for Gainsborough said that the system was complex, and then suggested that we consider a farm tax credit. I am all in favour of simplifying the system, but that sounded like a more complex system. I am not entirely convinced that it would crack down on fraud, but we know that the CAP is badly in need of reform.

What are the solutions? Last November, for example, Neil Kinnock launched the whistleblowers charter for the European Commission, which aims to put in place procedures to protect whistleblowers. I hope that that to some extent deals with the concerns that the right hon. Member for Birkenhead raised about putting the processes in place.

The charter mentions the European anti-fraud office, also known as OLAF, as an external channel through which officials can safely report their suspicions to a body that is independent of the Commission. The new OLAF office organises and conducts administrative investigations to detect fraud and irregularities connected with the financial interests of the Community.

Between 1 June 1999 and 31 May 2000, 68 administrative investigations were opened, 30 others were closed and 67 reports were filed. The Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee said that he wanted more of those issues to be aired and some of the details to be available to the public. I welcome the fact that much of OLAF's work is now available on the internet. That is an important step towards much greater transparency and accountability, but, picking up on the points that were made by the right hon. Gentleman, it is important that OLAF's work is monitored independently, so that we have proper accountability.

The Kinnock White Paper detailed a promising reform programme, which was started in March and is expected to continue until the second half of 2002. It focuses on three key areas: comprehensive reform of personnel policy; modernisation of financial management; and control of new systems. I support that programme and agree with the concerns that have been raised about the time scales, which need to be put in place—but progress is being made.

This morning, I had an opportunity to meet Mrs. Fontaine, the President of the European Parliament, and to discuss the Kinnock proposals with her. People sense an atmosphere of change, and that the proposals are beginning to bed down, but, when I discussed the reforms with Paul Van Buitenen, he expressed a concern that, although they may deal with the internal processes, there is a fundamental problem in terms of the culture in the EU, which is much harder to tackle.

The issue that Paul Van Buitenen put to me in cultural terms was that the EU lacks genuine transnational political parties. His argument was that everyone feels a stronger sense of affinity to his own nation, rather than to a pan-European group, and that that can make the imposition of standards difficult and disjointed. I hope that the EU tackles the cultural issue much more.

Of course, the debate about delivery and accountability in Europe is not about just what goes on in the EU. Eighty per cent. of EU spending is disbursed by member states. That is where most of the fraud takes place. An anti-fraud strategy must go beyond Brussels. It must be Europe-wide. That will be a major challenge for some of the EU member states that do not, if I can put it politely, have the same standard of probity in public affairs as we do.

This touches slightly on the concern of the hon. Member for Gainsborough about the level playing field. If the EU is to embrace enlargement—I hope that it does so—to expand and include countries such as Albania, Poland and Hungary, we must be absolutely sure that the conditions of entry require those individual countries to raise their standards, too.

I am pro-European. I am pro-currency, pro-engagement and pro-Britain playing a full part in Europe, but I am disheartened by the fraud that is taking place. For those of us who believe that Europe is the way forward and is in our best interests, it is damaging our cause and our case. Bluntly, it is wrong that public money is mis-spent in that way. The Kinnock proposals represent a way forward, but, beyond that, there needs to be a cultural change in the EU. I hope that the British Government will take a lead on those issues when they argue for better probity at the conferences in the year ahead.

Mr. Howard Flight (Arundel and South Downs): I, too, congratulate my right hon. Friend the Member for Haltemprice and Howden (Mr. Davis) on securing the debate. There is obviously a model of proper conduct and of ways of dealing with such problems in the UK. It is a pity that it does not and cannot operate more widely in the EU.

I remind hon. Members that as late as the mid-18th century, the Paymaster General's role was to milk public funds. Indeed, Fox's father made himself rich by so doing. We have not always had the standards that Gladstone established, and they do not seem to establish themselves satisfactorily across the channel.

I echo the support for Commissioner Kinnock. I am sure that he has not been infected by the environment that he is operating in. As has been pointed out, the report seeks to address the processes at least—but I, too, doubt whether it will be effective, because of the cultural problems.

On specifics, I agree that the Court of Auditors must have a rotating chairmanship drawn from the opposition. It must have independent auditors; it is complete nonsense for it to be staffed with insiders, as it were. It must report to the European Parliament, and, potentially, to European Governments individually, on its findings about what has gone on in member states.

I cannot help feeling that it would be useful for the European anti-fraud office to visit Hong Kong, which has the most effective anti-corruption fraud office in the world, although admittedly it is a small country. Again, if the European anti-fraud office is not independently staffed, I cannot see that it can do a proper job. Clearly, it must be accountable to the Court of Auditors.

As others have said, it is clearly essential to have adequate protection for whistleblowers—and, I would argue, rather better protection in this country, given the background—and proper exposure and punishment of offenders. It is unacceptable that individuals can return to power when they have a track record of corruption. I suggest that the European Parliament could do with a Nolan, as it were. Its standards are certainly not the standards of this Parliament, but such a committee is probably the only body that has the power to dismiss a corrupt Commission. Having that ability would give it a powerful raison d'être.

The central problem of the common agricultural policy is that 80 per cent. of the money is dispensed by member states. The question is how they should be policed, because, to some extent, member states have a self-interest in obtaining as much as they can from the centre. It is a culture of "them", not "us". It will always be difficult for member states to police themselves, but it would be expensive to police them centrally. The common agricultural policy now costs £29 billion and the system clearly invites corruption. Ultimate reform can come only from the abolition of that system.

I wish to touch on a point that has not been raised. The CAP operates the exchange rate compensation scheme, which is drafted in a completely incomprehensible way. While sterling has strengthened by 50 per cent. against other currencies, and what is effectively one European currency, £1 billion or £2 billion a year in compensation has been paid out to Italy, Sweden, Germany and other member states. What is the logic of paying them compensation, because their currencies have weakened en bloc and they have enjoyed the advantages of that? On undertakings for collective investment in transferable securities, the German banks have blocked the development of money funds in Europe, and that is a different form of corruption.

The public in the United Kingdom have rumbled the situation. In a wonderful phrase, the right hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) pointed out that they perceive the set-up as a thieves' kitchen. As people on both sides of the argument have said, until there is an improvement and proper standards of conduct, the credibility and standing of European Union organisations will decline further in the eyes of the British public.

When I was a meritocratic student at one of England's leading meritocratic universities, I studied mediaeval history. The wonderful Professor Walter Ullmann put his finger on the problem. Whereas the UK and other Anglo-Saxon nations have the deeply rooted concept of power ascending from the people and the tribe, and leaders being accountable to the people, the problem with continental Europe is that it still has the Roman empire and mediaeval tradition of power descending from God, or what have you. That creates a powerful obstacle in the way of properly exposing corruption, because the citizenry does not expect that to be done. They expect lower standards of conduct than we are used to in this country.

Commissioner Patten has been mentioned. I specifically recollect that £500 million of development support was allocated to South Africa, of which only £20 million of actual expenditure was ever discovered, and most of that was wasted. Some £480 million was completely unknown and unaccounted for. That is unbelievable.

I am nervous that, despite the good intentions of Commissioner Kinnock, there is still not the will to tackle the problem effectively. As was said, we do not know whether fraud is 7 per cent., 10 per cent., or the Court of Auditors' estimate of 5.5 per cent. The issue is not on the Nice agenda, and the view is that it has been buried for the time being.

The Treasury will no doubt refer to its report and to the five proposals of the European Court of Auditors concerning the elements of the structure that are missing. However, the problem goes a great deal deeper. Perhaps, only when member states look to devising methods of imposing their own sanctions against corruption will there be any real and dramatic change. In the meantime, I wish Commissioner Kinnock every success, and I commend him on his proper standards and his attempts to address a major problem.

The Economic Secretary to the Treasury (Miss Melanie Johnson): In the 15 minutes allotted to me, I will struggle to respond to all the points that have been raised. However, I shall do my best. I apologise if my reply is a little bitty, but it is either that or answering fewer questions.

Like everyone else, I congratulate the right hon. Member for Haltemprice and Howden (Mr. Davis) on securing this debate. I know that the subject is dear to his heart and that he refers to it on many parliamentary occasions. I welcome the fact that he has raised the subject and I welcome the contributions that have been made. The Public Accounts Committee was so concerned about the issue that when its members visited Brussels last year, they interviewed key players and produced the important report on "Financial Management and Control in the European Union". It raised many pertinent questions about the state of European institutions and the Commission itself.

The right hon. Gentleman asked about the independence of OLAF and its relationship with the Commission. The arrangements that have been put in place are entirely right, because the Commission has the responsibility, under the treaty, for budget execution. That responsibility must include instituting effective fraud prevention procedures. The anti-fraud office needs to understand the organisation that it is investigating so, in that sense, it needs to be an insider with access to information about what is happening within the organisation. Past experience bears that out. The Commission's previous anti-fraud unit, UCLAF, investigated all the fraud allegations that featured in the wise men's report, but, under the previous arrangements, it had no responsibility for follow-up and there was no mechanism to ensure that the right course of action was taken.

The new arrangements under OLAF will make recommendations on follow-up, and the institutions will have to report on whether that has been carried out. In addition, the unit's director will report to the European Council and to the European Parliament. I take the point made by the hon. Member for Winchester (Mr. Oaten) that the important element of accountability in the reporting arrangements must be considered. It is important that we do not lose sight of that.

The question of whether we should replicate the arrangements used by the Public Accounts Committee was raised. The PAC works because officials have clear roles and responsibilities. The accounting officer in the National Audit Office knows that he is responsible for ensuring that Departments apply the rules and will have to answer if they do not. That is why we pressed the Commission, as a priority, to set out clear roles and responsibilities for all staff. Indeed, the White Paper on reform, which I shall refer to in more detail shortly, includes important measures in that regard. We know that the Commission intends all staff to have clear job descriptions and objectives by the autumn. We will keep up the pressure to ensure that there is real and meaningful reform. I agree with all the contributors to the debate who stressed the need continually to press for progress on that front.

Questions were raised by the right hon. Gentleman about Italy. Fraud cases tend to be enormously complex and can take an extremely long time—often years—to investigate. That is not unusual, if we compare it with fraud investigations in the UK on matters unrelated to the subject of the debate. That is frustrating for all of us, but it is not outside the bounds of our usual experience of the difficulties of detecting and investigating fraud. For that reason, it is difficult to comment on individual cases.

On the security contract fraud, the security firm was replaced and investigations by the Belgian police are still going on into the allegedly fraudulent contract arrangements mentioned by the right hon. Gentleman.

It may be helpful if I deal next with whistleblowing. It would have been wrong to intervene without knowing the full details of the case, as ill-considered intervention might have endangered ongoing investigations. However, I accept that there must be rules governing whistleblowing. Since the Government came to power, we have taken significant steps in the UK to establish such rules.

Van Buitenen was the subject of a disciplinary hearing, which reprimanded him for actions that were considered to compromise certain criminal investigations that were in progress; but the judgment was mitigated by the circumstances of his case, particularly the lack of proper procedures for reporting concerns about improper practice.

Mr. David Davis: I thank the Minister for giving way. I do not wish to delay her progress, but is it plausible for a whistleblower who has brought a matter to public attention for the first time to be reprimanded on the grounds that he is jeopardising a criminal prosecution, when no criminal prosecution has ever been brought to fruition in the European Commission?

Miss Johnson: The right hon. Gentleman makes a useful point, but it is fair to say that with regard to the way that van Buitenen behaved, there were issues on both sides. It was not an open and shut case. We accept that whistleblowing by employees is extremely important. If they suspect fraud, they should be encouraged to report it, and whistleblowers should be protected. That is an important principle. I agree with both the right hon. Member for Haltemprice and Howden and my right hon. Friend the Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field), who made those points particularly strongly.

The Commission's decision in June 1999 on whistleblowers sets out clear procedures for reporting suspected fraud, corruption and other illegal activities. Those procedures will be formalised in the revision of the staff regulations which is in progress, as part of the Commission's reform programme. The aim is to ensure protection for a whistleblower acting in good faith and in the public interest. We respect and value that in this country, and have taken steps to put it in place in full-blown form in the UK. Until just a few years ago, we could not claim that everything in our country was right, and indeed, we still cannot be confident that it is all right.

On the subject of structural flaws in the Parliament which lead to protection for individuals by political parties, it is essentially up to the European Parliament to decide how it organises its sessions. The right hon. Member for Haltemprice and Howden proposed an interesting idea in that respect which is worth exploring further.

The right hon. Gentleman also referred to tourism fraud. I agree that the Commission's handling of the matter was not competent. That is why it was so necessary to implement the reforms. There must be greater co-operation between member states. There is scope for taking forward and implementing effectively the Eurojust proposal for an agency to assist co-operation and to allow the exchange of information—for example, about the evidence that needs to be gathered in one member state to be used in legal proceedings in another member state with a different judicial system.

I am sure that Commissioner Kinnock will be somewhat embarrassed by the support that he has received from all right hon. and hon. Members present, but no doubt he will also be delighted. Of course, the Government support reform and the work that he is heading in the Commission.

I agree that staff regulations are too inflexible. Lengthy consultations with staff are required. The last reform took place 10 years ago, so the situation has been left untouched for too long. There is a need to get it right this time. That will take time and negotiation, but we are not complacent. We are keen to make progress, as is Neil Kinnock, I am sure.

There is already a code of conduct for Commissioners, and there are proposals to protect whistleblowers. The White Paper on Commission reform incorporates proposals to modernise staff management, including an overhaul of recruitment procedures, improved training and career management, a proper system of staff appraisal based on job objectives that are directly linked to Commission objectives—a highly desirable feature—a merit-based system of promotion, which is important, and a more effective disciplinary system, which is also important. All the right sort of measures are being progressed.

The hon. Member for Gainsborough (Mr. Leigh) spoke about the way in which EU funds are being wasted. The level of error is clearly unacceptable, and we have been pressing the Commission and other member states to take action. However, we must not lose sight of the fact, pointed out by several speakers in the debate, that 80 per cent. of the expenditure goes through individual member states, and is therefore up to them. We need to address the matter through the EU and by putting pressure on member states through member-state to member-state channels.

Contrary to what the hon. Member for Ludlow (Mr. Gill) said, it is not simply a matter of tackling the Commission. Member states must be tackled. We are working with them to improve financial control, which includes work to simplify regulations and provide clarification of eligible expenditure. I agree wholeheartedly with my right hon. Friend the Member for Birkenhead that the mismanagement of public funds undermines the confidence of European taxpayers in the EU. We must work together to remedy an unacceptable situation.

With regard to humanitarian aid, one of the problems is a lack of resources to manage the aid programme. Most of the resources did not go astray, but were used to administer the aid programme. That relates to the point about how much is fraud and how much is money mismanaged in various ways, which is also a big issue. Much of what is described as fraud is not technically fraud, but mismanaged funds.

Mr. David Davis: One example is the 2.4 million ecu contract, which was fictitious. Some of the money, as the hon. Lady says, was used for other employees, but two thirds of a million ecu are still missing. The money cannot all have been used properly.

Miss Johnson: At no time did I suggest that all the money was used properly. I believe that the sum of £400,000 is unaccounted for, but I agree with the right hon. Gentleman that money unaccounted for is unacceptable. We must do more to tackle the problem. Activity-based budgeting will help us to identify the administrative resources needed for efficient management. That is an important part of ensuring that resources reach their destination and that no fraud takes place. The distribution of aid has been the subject not only of proposals by Commissioner Patten, as the right hon. Gentleman said, but of considerable ongoing discussions in various EU forums, including the Budget Council, with which I am involved.

The hon. Member for Gainsborough spoke about the CAP. It is worth while pointing out in relation to his East Anglian example—I know the hon. Gentleman's constituency a little, and I am not sure whether Gainsborough considers itself part of East Anglia, but it is not far short—the claimant literature is constantly being reviewed. We are trying to simplify the pilot scheme for arable area payments in East Anglia. Those may not apply to his area, but efforts are being made to lessen the bureaucratic burden on farmers. We all—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Police Services (Sutton)

12.30 pm

Mr. Tom Brake (Carshalton and Wallington): I am delighted to have been given the opportunity to raise a number of issues about policing in Sutton. I know that my hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam (Mr. Burstow) would like to speak too, so I shall try to limit my contribution.

It may be unusual, as an Opposition Member, to say that, generally speaking, things in Sutton are working well. The overall policing picture is a good one by comparison with other parts of London and the country. Sutton has the second lowest crime rate in London, and I pay tribute to the local force and the local council for achieving that. I am happy to back the bid by Sutton police to make Sutton the safest borough in London.

Not everything is perfect, of course. The Sutton racial equality council is concerned about the under-representation of ethnic minority officers, the turnover of staff in the community safety unit and the degree of consultation with ethnic minority communities. Perhaps the Minister could comment on the progress that is being made in meeting the target of 5 per cent. ethnic minority officers by the end of the year. There are also concerns in the constituency about 999 calls that are unanswered. I know that that issue was touched on in the debate last Friday.

Sutton police force is having to adjust its numbers following the boundary change with Surrey police on 1 April. That change means that the police boundaries are, for the first time, exactly coterminous with those of the London borough of Sutton. That change has resulted in the creation of the smallest police division in London, but one which I believe is perfectly formed.

Inevitably, reorganising the force and deciding which officers go to Sutton and which to Epsom has not been the easiest of tasks. Furthermore, the boundary change has left Sutton over strength by a net number of 21 officers. The serious shortfall in police numbers across London—hon. Members should be aware that those numbers have fallen by about 1,700 since the Government came to office—has meant that the 21 officers have had to be redeployed elsewhere.

Not surprisingly, many of those officers who were forced to move wanted to stay in Sutton and have been upset by their enforced relocation. Does the Minister agree that enforced relocation, whether caused by a change in police boundaries or by the tenure policy that requires officers to be moved perhaps two or three times within their careers, is unpopular within the Metropolitan police and ensures that valuable local experience and specialised expertise are lost?

Will the Government provide input to the consultation with the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on this important issue and support changes that make these moves voluntary rather than mandatory? When do the Government expect the Commissioner to report back on his consultation?

Enforced relocation is not the only local issue; pay is another. I recently secured an Adjournment debate in Westminster Hall on public sector workers' recruitment and retention in London. During that debate, I raised the issue of the cost of living for those workers. The Home Secretary clearly read his Hansard and listened, at least in part, to some of the points that I and other hon. Members raised during the debate. Last week, he announced that effectively he was restoring to London police officers recruited after 1994 the housing allowance that the Conservatives abolished in 1994. That is a Liberal Democrat campaign success which, the Minister will be pleased to hear, we shall widely advertise in Focus. [Laughter.]

The Home Secretary made the correct decision, though it will not solve current problems. What assessment have the Government made of the extra number of police officers who will be recruited and retained as a result of the change? I know that the Home Secretary was not able to answer that question last Friday, but perhaps the Minister will have had time over the weekend to analyse its impact. It remains the view of senior officers in my patch that retention will still be a problem even after the Home Secretary's welcome announcement.

Even in London's second safest borough, we cannot afford to lose officers. Last year's crime figures in Sutton were a disappointment, and ultimately that is the test of a policing and crime strategy. There was an increase in crime overall and in each of the major categories. Although burglary and vehicle crime rose relatively little, violent crime increased by 22 per cent. and street crime by 36 per cent. Those are the most worrying features.

I am happy to praise my local police force, but those figures are depressing and we cannot afford to be complacent. I know that Sutton police are not complacent and that they are redoubling their efforts to get Sutton back on track. However, unless they are given the resources that are needed, they will be facing an uphill struggle because of the increasing demands on police resources.

Is the Minister, for example, able to confirm the cost of policing the £1.5 million party that Sir Bob Geldof will be organising for London's mayor, the hon. Member for Brent, East (Mr. Livingstone)? Who will be paying for the policing of that event? What mechanisms exist to stop resources being siphoned away from a relatively safe borough such as Sutton to inner-city boroughs by a Metropolitan police authority, which perhaps inevitably will have an inner-city focus? Will the Minister say how much of the budget of Sutton police will have to be paid out for the welcome increase in post-Sheehy officers' salaries, which will be effective from next week? I shall be happy for the Minister to respond later in writing because I have not notified him of all these questions.

There are ways of maximising the best use of police resources. I recommend the positive partnership approach that Sutton police have with the London borough of Sutton in tackling issues such as graffiti. Sutton council has also been working locally with the probation service on its anti-graffiti strategy. Following successful graffiti projects at Wallington station in my constituency and Stonecot hill, the council's community safety unit is co-ordinating a new project, again in my constituency, at Wrythe lane, Rosehill, which started on Monday.

Following consultation with shop owners, local residents, the police and the probation service as well as the Sutton youth awareness programme, murals are being created on 19 shutters at a row of shops in a busy shopping location. Not all the shop owners wanted a mural, and that is fine. None will be forced to take one. Offenders on community service orders will paint the shutters, ready for the murals to be painted on by local young people, supervised by Darren Cullen, who is a former graffiti artist.

I am sure that hon. Members will agree that that sort of partnership approach should be commended. However, I am concerned that the good work of all the organisations could be undermined in Sutton by the circulation of a magazine called Graphotism. I do not have a copy of the magazine to show hon. Members, but I have seen photocopies of some of the pages. The magazine is clearly dedicated to the promotion of graffiti. It features photographs of graffiti on commuter trains and it markets products for use by graffiti artists. Many people, including me, take the view that it encourages people to break the law. There is a very small disclaimer that can hardly be read on the pages of the magazine, and apparently that may be enough to let the producer off the hook.

What action can be taken against the publishers of such a magazine? I understand that the police solicitors and the Crown Prosecution Service believe that it would not be possible to prove mens rea, or intention. What further steps are the Government considering to deal with such a blatant incitement to commit a criminal offence?

One way of dealing with the problem of graffiti, if not Graphotism, might be through the creation of community constables, an idea that Susan Kramer promoted tirelessly in her excellent mayoral campaign. The idea is a simple one, and I am sure that the Minister will be familiar with it. I can point to a good example in my constituency. The Sutton parks constabulary is now in its second year and is proving very effective. Council officers are used to doing some of the work that would otherwise be done by the police and they are doing an excellent job. In the past year, for instance, the parks constabulary received 587 calls and dealt with a wide range of issues, mainly relating to youth disturbance, burglar alarms, unauthorised vehicles in parks, joyriding and abandoned vehicles. What plans do the Government have to extend the range of responsibilities that parks constabularies and others could take on?

Sutton is a relatively crime-free area. Local residents, the council, the police, my hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam and I all want to keep it that way. In fact, we want to make Sutton the safest borough in London, but we cannot do that without addressing the issue of officer retention and without a guarantee that Sutton will not be penalised for its success in keeping crime down. I hope that the Minister will be able to reassure Sutton residents on those points.

Mr. Paul Burstow (Sutton and Cheam): I want to underline one or two of the points that my hon. Friend the Member for Carshalton and Wallington (Mr. Brake) has made.

Some years ago, my parliamentary predecessor, Lady Olga Maitland, secured a debate in the House on law and order in Sutton. In that debate, she branded Sutton as crime-ridden and a dangerous place to live. She was wrong, but she secured banner headlines in the tabloid press—popular papers that many people read—portraying Sutton as a dangerous place. That did great harm to the borough and to the livelihoods of many of the traders in Sutton town centre. Those who think that Sutton is a dangerous place today are as wrong as she was then.

My hon. Friend is absolutely right to highlight the fact that Sutton is the second safest borough in London. That is something to be pleased but not complacent about. Sutton is also the smallest borough in London and, with the advent of the borough-based policing system from 1 April, which I certainly welcome, we now have the opportunity to have a much clearer focus of police activity on the problems of the local communities.

We can now have one set of partners. My hon. Friend has already said something about partnership working, which has been established in Sutton for 10 years, with the council, the police and many other community interests working together to develop and invest in crime reduction and prevention, tackling both crime and the fear of crime with initiatives such as closed circuit television, home security, gating projects and youth diversion initiatives.

My hon. Friend referred to the incitement, through a magazine that is circulating in the area, to damage property with graffiti. I hope that the Minister will say something about that and about what the Government intend to do about those who supply the paint products that are used for graffiti. Back in March, there was an initiative in Sutton that tackled the perpetrators. There were 30 arrests and a substantial reduction in graffiti following the concerted effort by the police, the council and others.

That exercise showed clearly that some of the people who supply and sell the paints do it in a way that is totally irresponsible, displaying them in such a way as to entice and paying no regard to the use to which they can be put. I hope that something can be done to control more effectively the way in which the products are sold.

Having the smallest division in the Met has many advantages, some of which I have outlined, but it also has some potential downsides. As my hon. Friend said, the Sutton division is having to slim down to get down to the 254 officers that it will have as a borough division, losing 21 officers from the bigger division that it once was.

There is also undoubtedly concern arising from the current tenure policy, and it is hitting morale. I have had letters expressing concern from local officers. A review of the policy is under way, and it certainly needs to be changed. We must ensure that we make best use of the experience that officers gain through their careers, and of the investment that the police service puts into the development of specialist skills. That can be lost through an ill-thought-out transfer to an area of activity that does not exploit those skills.

Last week, Sir John Stevens told the Commons Press Gallery:

> I need to maintain at least 25,600 officers if I am to police London with confidence. The people of London deserve nothing less than the best we can offer and if numbers continue to dwindle we are in trouble—make no mistake.

He went on to say:

> We do not have enough officers to police London with confidence. We have 25,480 officers—five years ago we had 28,000.

If the most senior police officer in London says that he does not have confidence that he can police London adequately, there must be cause for concern in my and my hon. Friend's constituencies about the fact that having only 254 officers does not give sufficient leeway to cover vacancies. We have already discussed the problems of recruitment and retention. With such a small number of officers, losing even one or two to vacancies has a disproportionate impact on the operational effectiveness of the division. That is why I hope that the Minister will say something about the tenure policy and the need to ensure that success in reducing crime is not rewarded by a further reduction in police numbers.

My hon. Friend rightly said that it is important, with a successful community safety strategy, never to be complacent. The crime figures in Sutton in the past year—for violent crime and street crime in particular—have been a cause for some disappointment and concern for my constituents, and for the council and the police, who need to redouble their efforts. They are doing that, but they also need to know that both the Greater London Authority, which is now the responsible body, and the Minister, who provides much of the funds, are mindful of the fact that a small police division needs to have a guarantee that its numbers will not be reduced any further.

The Minister of State, Home Office (Mr. Charles Clarke): I congratulate the hon. Member for Carshalton and Wallington (Mr. Brake) on securing this debate. We have debated policing in London a great deal recently, both in Adjournment debates and in the annual debate last Friday, so if he will forgive me, I will focus on the issues that he has raised relating specifically to Sutton rather than on some of the more general issues.

Both the hon. Gentleman and the hon. Member for Sutton and Cheam (Mr. Burstow) began by talking about current policing working well and rebutting the approach that was only too characteristic of Lady Olga Maitland when she represented Sutton and Cheam. It is worth placing on the record the comparative crime position in Sutton because, as has been said, it is very good.

Incidents of violence against the person in Sutton were 6.5 per 1,000 of the population in the 12 months to September 1999, compared with the Metropolitan police average of 11.2; sexual offences were 0.4 per 1,000, compared with 0.7; robberies were 0.5, compared with 2.3; burglaries from a dwelling were 2.1, compared with 5.1; thefts of a vehicle were 2.9, compared with 4.2; and thefts from a vehicle were 5.2, compared with 7.8.

None of that is reason to be complacent in any way, but both hon. Gentlemen are absolutely right to highlight the fact that Sutton is the second safest borough in London and to join the police in the borough in campaigning to make it the safest.

Greater London has witnessed significant change this year in its government, with the creation of the GLA and of the independent Metropolitan Police Authority and, most importantly in my opinion, with the consequential boundary changes that have affected Sutton and other London boroughs significantly. The hon. Member for Carshalton and Wallington put the case well when he referred to the encouragement that the coterminosity of boundaries affords to a whole range of partnership working.

Many police officers have described our Crime and Disorder Act 1998 as one of the most significant pieces of legislation ever to affect policing. That is predicated on good partnerships, which are massively assisted by being able to have common boundaries and therefore common professional, political and strategic links. That is extremely important.

Obviously, there may be teething difficulties, as there have been big changes in the policing of the Sutton area, with the transfer of the officers who police the Epsom area to the Surrey police. No doubt there may be some confusion in the immediate period, but I know that the hon. Gentlemen and all the authorities concerned will do their best to ensure that the transition is as smooth as possible. The ultimate result of the transition will, I believe, be positive for the residents of Sutton, as it will be more generally across the Metropolitan police force. The change is important and significant.

The issues raised by the hon. Members for Carshalton and Wallington and for Sutton and Cheam are important. Boundary changes under the leadership of the borough's police commander, John Bainbridge, to whom I also pay tribute, have become a conduit for the review of policing styles in Sutton. He has decided to adopt a combination of intelligence-led and problem-orientated policing that is locally delivered in partnership with the borough council. That is an important development. The Metropolitan police have invested more resources and effort into problem-orientated partnership activity, as in their view it will achieve lasting reductions in crime and disorder. Such improvements would have been more difficult to deliver before the boundary changes.

I understand the concerns expressed on the reduction in police numbers. I understand from the commissioner that the boundary changes left Sutton relatively over-staffed, when other London boroughs were short of staff. The result was the transfer of about 20 officers in June and July to other London boroughs, as the hon. Member for Carshalton and Wallington said. The process has been handled by the force as sensitively as possible, and I hope that it will take place smoothly.

I understand that the boundary changes have resulted in a target in the Sutton borough area of 254 police officers by 31 March 2001. They will be supported by 75 civilian staff. We do not believe that that change will compromise the Met's policing style. Nor will it affect their operational activities. The policing of Epsom and the other areas that have been transferred to Surrey police is a matter for the chief constable of Surrey, who I am sure will ensure that Epsom is as well policed as previously. Indeed, Surrey's budget has been increased as a result of the boundary changes to ensure that the resources are available.

Both the hon. Members for Carshalton and Wallington and for Sutton and Cheam referred reasonably to the issues of tenure, which are important to consider. The facts on tenure are straightforward. For reasons of not only specialism, to which the hon. Gentlemen referred, but community continuity, which is essential to partnership work, we have considered that it is important to address again the question of tenure. The commissioner is indeed doing so. The Metropolitan police service career management policy is about to be launched, which will replace the tenure arrangements—officer postings—with a much more effective means of capitalising on the needs of the organisation and officers' particular professional skills.

I believe that the change on tenure will be widely welcomed—I certainly welcome it—and that it will address much more effectively the need for stability and the removal of uncertainty to which both hon. Gentleman referred. I hope that the change will be welcomed by all people throughout Sutton and by the hon. Gentlemen. I certainly commend it to them. It is part of a significant and substantial programme on which I am happy to give further details to them in writing if it would be helpful. It is an important part of the remotivation and rededication of the police service in London generally, and Sutton particularly, to the issues that have to be addressed.

Mr. Brake: I would be grateful if, as far as possible, the Minister confirmed in his letter the timetable—when consultation will finish and when any recommendations will be implemented.

Mr. Clarke: I am of course perfectly happy to do that.

I apologise to you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, for my unparliamentary behaviour in laughing out loud when the hon. Member for Carshalton and Wallington claimed the increase in Metropolitan police pay as a Liberal Democrat campaign success. I have heard many things so claimed in my time, both in my constituency in Norwich and nationally, but without taking away any credit for the vigorous way in which the hon. Gentleman puts the case, I assure him that the announcement by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary on Friday was due to scientific assessment of a range of facts and the result of wide representation. I believe that it is out of order to laugh during a parliamentary debate, but I could not control myself. I try to be an extremely controlled individual, but I could not manage to be so on that occasion.

The hon. Member for Carshalton and Wallington referred to the Sutton parks constabulary, which is an important point. The constabulary is an important complement to the work of the Metropolitan police service in Sutton. The London borough of Sutton parks police work closely with Metropolitan police staff under a joint protocol for responses to incidents and the flow of intelligence. The parks police have been directly involved in the graffiti and under-age drinking initiatives. The constabulary has eight constables, and its work complements our continuing drive to develop partnership between police and local authorities.

In my city of Norwich, a similar parks police initiative under the neighbourhood warden and community constable scheme has had a major impact on improving the amenity of parks and on eliminating not only petty but sometimes more serious crime. I am therefore happy to commend the police, the council and Sutton parks constabulary for their work and look forward with interest to evidence of continued work in that area.

The graffiti campaign is important. I refer to the Adjournment debate on the matter on 27 March secured by the hon. Member for Twickenham (Dr. Cable). Indeed, in the policing debate on Friday, the hon. Member for Kingston and Surbiton (Mr. Davey) raised such points. I take the points seriously; they are important and we are seeking to address them.

Sutton's multi-agency approach between the police, local businesses and communities, schools and the Crown Prosecution Service seems to be effective. I understand that a database of tags has been developed and important links between graffiti artists and priority crimes have been established. A total of 50 reported allegations have been dealt with by various means.

I commend to the hon. Member for Carshalton and Wallington the development of new guidelines on closed circuit television in the context of his remarks on transport. I published them in February, and we gave particular priority to CCTV in areas where there is concern about transport. That will help our integrated transport policy and with the issues that he raised. I cannot tell him anything on the question of the publishers of the magazine, although I will look into that. We have looked carefully into the serious issues concerning paints and the way in which we can deal with them.

Mr. Brake: The Minister has not responded to the issue about magazines and it was certainly not addressed in Friday's debate. I would be grateful, therefore, if he responded in writing.

Mr. Clarke: I will respond; I was not aware of the problem more generally.

The hon. Gentleman raised the question of the 999 service, which is a serious concern. I dealt with that in my response to Friday's debate, so I will not go through the matter in detail except to say that many more staff have been recruited to address the issue. The issue of a major £1 billion investment in a completely new command and control system will be one of the earliest and toughest decisions for the new Metropolitan police authority. We in government have encouraged that. The Metropolitan police are working very hard on it and we acknowledge that serious issues need to be addressed.

As the hon. Gentleman knows, the target—I emphasise that such targets are not quotas—for ethnic minority recruitment is 25 per cent. by 2009, which is challenging. The majority of forces should meet their target in 10 years, but we have accepted that some may take longer. I have no other information to give him on that subject. We give great priority to it for the simple reason that, in cities across the United States of America, for example, when a community identifies with the police force that serves it, policing is strengthened in a variety of important and different ways.

On Bob Geldof and the mayor of London's campaign party, I must confess that I do not study the affairs, particularly the social life and plans, of my hon. Friend the Member for Brent, East (Mr. Livingstone) as closely as I perhaps should. However, I assure the hon. Member for Carshalton and Wallington that, under section 25 of the Police Act 1996, the commissioner has the power to charge for policing special events such as pop concerts. The matter is one for the commissioner, although any event that my hon. Friend might organise for his own pleasure and interest should not affect normal policing. Off-duty officers would often be used.

I have attempted to address the issues and conclude by commending Sutton for its extremely effective and strong safety record.

Paper Industry

1 pm

Mr. Jonathan Shaw (Chatham and Aylesford): I am grateful for the opportunity to debate one of the United Kingdom's great manufacturing industries. As chairman of the all-party group on the paper industry, I can tell the Minister for Small Business and E-Commerce that those hon. Members with paper interests in their constituencies are concerned about the pressures that the industry faces and believe that the Government should be seen to take those concerns seriously. Therefore, my purpose today is to highlight the industry's valuable contribution to UK manufacturing and present its concerns to the House.

The UK has 98 pulp, paper and board mills, employing about 21,000 people. Those mills produce hundreds of grades of paper and board, which convert into a wide range of products for industry, commerce, education, communications, distribution and personal use in the home, together with a host of other specialty papers for industry. It is estimated that 12.7 million tonnes of paper were used in the UK last year. Sadly, more than half of that paper came from imports.

Mills in the UK are concentrated in Lancashire, the west country, central Scotland and my own county of Kent. In the Chatham and Aylesford constituency, the industry has an annual production of approximately 1.4 million tonnes of paper and board, making it the largest single concentration of production anywhere in the UK, employing more than 1,000 workers.

The industry is highly capital intensive. A new paper or board mill can cost well over £200 million and may take up to three years from the design stage to commission. To obtain an adequate return on such an investment, a mill needs to operate 24 hours a day. Such huge investments make the industry volatile to fluctuations in demand. If the economy slows down, so does the demand for paper.

The measures taken by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor have created the type of stability that the paper industry needs. Yet, as I said, the market is a European one, with 80 per cent. of imported paper coming from Europe. During the past three years, the value of the pound has led to job losses, mill closures and lost markets. Within such a competitive market, it can be difficult to claw back those markets.

The paper industry takes seriously its responsibility to the environment. During the past 20 years, the industry has reduced its water consumption by 70 per cent., its energy consumption per tonne of paper is falling year on year, and many of the UK operations have transferred their energy needs to combined heat and power plants. Earlier this year, following negotiations with the Government on the climate change levy, the industry agreed tough targets. Before her transfer to the Department for Trade and Industry, my hon. Friend the Minister was very much involved in those negotiations, particularly at the preliminary stage.

I welcome the outcome of the negotiations. The industry felt that the Government had a genuine desire to listen and it responded. But there remains some anxiety in the industry, in particular about what is good quality combined heat and power, because it is that which will be exempt. It would be of great help if my hon. Friend were able to say when that matter will be clarified.

The industry knows that, if it is to compete, it must invest. Last year saw £300 million of capital expenditure, and, coupled with that investment, the industry has increased efficiency. Since 1989, output has improved by 43 per cent., and productivity per operative has increased by 140 per cent.

The paper industry is different from other traditional manufacturing industries in that capacity is increasing, not contracting. It is important to recognise that the industry has massive potential, and, with the right economic conditions, most of which are in place, it has the ability to beat all comers. As I say, despite technological advances, paper consumption has not declined but increased. The Government make their own contribution to that with their endless White Papers, Green Papers and consultation documents, all of which, I am sure that my hon. Friend will agree, make excellent and stimulating reading. Some may be better than others, but I shall leave it to my hon. Friend to say which. That also creates jobs.

In 1990, the UK consumed 1.8 million tonnes of newsprint, and in 1999, that had increased to 2.5 million tonnes. In the UK, we buy more papers and magazines than any other country in Europe, having recently overtaken Germany. I am bound to say that, indisputably, the best newsprint comes from Aylesford.

Given that the market is growing, with a forecast growth of 2 per cent. in the UK and between 1 and 3 per cent. throughout the rest of Europe, the question for us in the UK is whether our paper industry will be able to capture those markets and take advantage of the extra business and prosperity that that will bring. At present, we are at a distinct disadvantage.

Last year was a record year for production, with a turnover of £3.5 billion, yet the industry realised a pre-tax profit of just £150 million. The main problem facing the industry is the strength of the pound and the weakness of the euro.

The Graphical, Paper and Media Union, the main union representing workers in the industry, advises me that mills throughout Britain have closed, principally due to the strength of the pound. We have seen examples in Kent where profitable mills, such as Kimberley Clark Ltd. in Larkfield in my constituency and the Buckland mill, which produces the world famous Conqueror paper, owned by Argo Wiggins are in the process of closing operations, with about 400 job losses in Kent.

The industry knows that, to a certain extent, it must live with a strong pound. But to be told that it must be more efficient does not inspire confidence, particularly given the background of the figures to which I have referred. Cost-cutting and efficiency improvements have been made at the cost of many jobs—2,500 in the past two years, representing 10 per cent. of the work force. Importantly, they are well-paid jobs.

The Paper Federation of Great Britain recently held a referendum among its members regarding entry into the euro, and 60 per cent. favoured entry, believing that it was the right move for the industry, although obviously at the right rate. That view is shared by the GPMU.

It is vital that industry takes part in the debate. When we have a referendum, industrial leaders will have more influence on what is a major democratic decision than ever before. People who work in mills, textiles, and in the car and steel industries will ask their employers and union leaders what it will mean for their industry, job security, ability to pay the mortgage and have a holiday. Those are the issues that matter and those are the arguments on which we should concentrate. I should like the Government to take a more robust line as the matter is taken forward.

I have spoken about the great efforts that the industry is making in investment, productivity, the environment, and about the pressures that it faces. However, it is also important to highlight some of its shortcomings. The industry has an appalling health and safety record, which puts mill owners in the United Kingdom to shame. Twelve deaths have occurred in the past six years and scores of serious accidents.

Two years ago, the industry set itself a target of reducing serious accidents by 50 per cent. It is widely acknowledged that progress has not been satisfactory. Earlier this year, George Beattie, the GPMU national officer, told a meeting of the chief executive officers of the paper industry that they were not improving enough or even at all. That is a damning indictment.

The industry kills. There are examples of people being allowed to work 34 12-hour shifts without a break. The industry asks people to work for 40 days without a day off. Paper mills are dangerous places, and the industry has not taken health and safety seriously enough. The culture is far too macho, and there is a lack of interest in health and safety. The consequences are fatalities. People are dying in the industry.

There must be change, and I hope that the industry will take its commitments to targets seriously. There must be a wake-up call, and a sea change in the industry's attitude. The targets that the industry has set are not unrealistic because there are examples of good practice throughout the country in various mills, which have reduced their accident rates by 50 per cent. If some can do it, others can learn and follow their example.

Against the background of appalling safety, the GPMU will not sit back. I endorse its campaign themes. Its message is:

> We are here to work, not to die. Say no to unsafe jobs.

That is a powerful message, and I hope that mill operators will take it seriously. There is a firm basis on which employers and unions can improve their health and safety record: a positive and productive relationship between the two sides. The relationship between the unions and management could be held up as a model of excellent industrial relations. It is therefore possible to use that relationship to ensure that the health and safety record matches the technological, productivity and environmental advances.

The industry is good for Britain. With the right economic conditions, it can be a world beater because it has a skilled and dedicated work force. The Government need to listen and understand the anxieties and do everything in their power to create the right economic conditions for it to thrive. If we do that, it will thrive.

1.13 pm

The Minister for Small Business and E-Commerce (Ms Patricia Hewitt): I warmly congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Chatham and Aylesford (Mr. Shaw) on securing the debate and on his election as the new chairman of the all-party group on the paper industry. I also congratulate him on his excellent speech, which was made not only on behalf of his constituents who work in the industry, but on behalf of the whole industry.

I checked the parliamentary online information system—POLIS—and found that the paper industry was last debated in the House 14 years ago. I appreciate that my hon. Friend spoke on the importance of recycling in the industry in the Budget debate earlier this year. However, it is extraordinary that such an important industry has not been the subject of a debate before today. I therefore especially congratulate my hon. Friend on securing the debate.

I strongly agree with my hon. Friend's remarks on the industry's importance. This country has an extraordinary tradition of excellence and self-sufficiency in paper and board making. Fifty years ago, we were not only wholly self-sufficient in producing paper and board, but a major exporter. For a variety of reasons, that position has been steadily eroded until a nadir was reached in the mid-1980s. Employment in the industry has fallen from 52,000 in 1980 to less than half that number today.

The shrinking in employment does not provide an accurate view of what has happened in the industry. I am glad that my hon. Friend emphasised its productivity improvements and output growth. Both have been striking. In the past two decades, total annual production has nearly doubled from 3.8 million tonnes to 6.6 million tonnes.

There is still significant employment in the industry. As my hon. Friend said, some 21,000 employees work in fewer than 100 mills in several different parts of the United Kingdom, including, of course, my hon. Friend's constituency. If one takes the wider definition of the industry by the Office for National Statistics—it includes pulp, paper and paper products—the sector contributes more than £4 billion of value added to our gross domestic product. That is comparable to the manufacture of textiles and aircraft, and greater than the manufacture of steel and computer hardware. We are therefore considering a sizeable, high-productivity, high-technology manufacturing sector.

The industry's other distinctive feature, to which my hon. Friend referred, is its position not only in a European but a global marketplace. That is clearly reflected by the industry's ownership structure, with some 60 per cent. of capacity owned by overseas interests, including Nordic and North American interests. My hon. Friend rightly mentioned that we import more than half our total paper requirements. We are in a major market; our consumption is the fifth largest in the world and, as my hon. Friend said, it is growing. Imports are also growing fast. Exports have remained steady, but imports are growing rapidly. Our ability to recover paper from the urban forest—the newsprint and other forms of paper that have already been used—is crucial to our future competitiveness.

[Ms Patricia Hewitt]

The strong level of investment that continues in the industry is welcome. It has often been encouraged by Government grants. In the last three financial years, 93 offers of regional selective assistance grant have been made and accepted. They total some £19 million of Government support for investment in paper, paper products and packaging. Of course, the total value of the investments is far greater. That is encouraging for future productivity and the management's confidence in the capacity of the UK industry. The large amount of inward investment in the tissue products sector is especially welcome, as is investment in environmental improvements.

Although the industry faces competitive challenges in a global marketplace, and employment in the sector is contracting, it is fundamentally in good shape. Output has continued to increase, and productivity has been increasing substantially.

I should like to say more about the growing importance of recycling in the paper industry. As my hon. Friend knows, the so-called waste paper utilisation rate—the proportion of our paper production that is derived from waste paper and board—is among the highest in the world, at around 65 per cent. Aylesford uses only recycled stock for its newsprint production.

The other side of the coin, the recycling rate—the proportion of our total waste paper that is collected and recycled—is disappointing. It is less than half the utilisation rate. One of the reasons is that we consume far more paper and board than we manufacture. Consequently, several million tonnes of paper are landfilled each year. That is clearly a wasted opportunity for environmental sustainability and industrial competitiveness.

Waste Strategy 2000, the waste strategy for England and Wales, which we published in May, sets out the various steps that we are taking to increase the recycling rate. It has been good to see the response from the paper sector to the White Paper and the recent call for proposals under the recycling programme of the Department of Trade and Industry to support research and development, and to underpin projects that are designed to increase demand for recycled materials. We are now in the final stages of assessing those projects.

Mr. Shaw: This subject is close to my heart, and I spend much time lobbying every Minister about the need to provide more facilities so that local authorities can collect their waste in a way that means that it can be recycled. Does my hon. Friend agree that the three mills that can take newsprint and magazines are full to capacity and that no new mill has been built for nearly five years? The mills that have come on stream have been in Europe. It is a European market, so there is only so much capacity. We need to increase capacity and it is essential that the Government provide assistance for that. Without that, the strategy will not work.

Ms Hewitt: My hon. Friend makes an important point and I am well aware of his long-standing interest in the issue and the proposals that he has made to colleagues and myself. In the Waste Strategy 2000, we announced that we would set up the waste and resources action programme—WRAP—to overcome some of the barriers to reuse and recycling. The objective of that new body, which will be established later this year, will be to promote more sustainable waste management generally, but, in the first instance, to focus on developing markets and end uses for secondary materials. I hope that it will be able to tackle some of the market failures that exist in recycled materials, especially newsprint. Both the Department of Trade and Industry and the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions have committed resources to that new organisation to give some muscle to the strategy.

My right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment recently reached an agreement with the newspaper publishing industry on increasing its recycled content targets. I am sure that my hon. Friend agrees that that was an important development.

My hon. Friend referred to the climate change levy that will be introduced next April. That levy is a key element in our strategy to tackle the issue of global climate change and to deliver on our international and domestic targets to cut emissions of greenhouse gases. We have worked hard with industry—the paper industry and more broadly across manufacturing—to ensure that we get the design of the CCL right to achieve our environmental objectives in ways that do not damage, and indeed could enhance, the competitiveness of British industry.

As my hon. Friend will be aware, the Chancellor announced important revisions to our original proposals in both his pre-Budget report last November and in his Budget statement in March. When we announced the levy—I was involved as Economic Secretary to the Treasury—we made it clear that we would take especial notice of the position of the energy-intensive sectors that are subject to intense international competition, including, of course, the UK paper industry. I am therefore pleased that the Paper Federation of Great Britain, on behalf of its members, has negotiated with the Government an energy efficiency agreement which will qualify the industry for an 80 per cent. discount on the levy. That is an important step forward for the industry's competitiveness and the wider objective of improving environmental sustainability.

My hon. Friend rightly referred to the exemption from the levy for good quality combined heat and power. My right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment announced on 17 May how good quality would be assessed, using a simple and definitive methodology called CHP quality assurance. That followed valuable consultations with the paper industry and other CHP users. My right hon. Friend will issue the full details in the next few days, and they will be circulated to all companies using CHP.

It is worth stressing that the CHP plants that have been approved during and since the review of energy sources for power generation include four paper mill developments, totalling nearly 350 MW. I warmly congratulate the industry on those multi-million pound investments in new paper production technology.

My hon. Friend mentioned the issue of the exchange rate and the weakness of the euro. We know that that is causing difficulties for British industry, particularly paper and board manufacturing, 75 per cent. of whose exports go to the European Union. As my right hon. Friend the Chancellor has said on many occasions, the problem is the weakness of the euro, rather than the overall strength of sterling. Indeed, sterling had been stable for four years against the dollar, although more recently it has fallen to a six-year low against the dollar. The Government must take a long-term view of how to achieve the economic stability that, as my hon. Friend began by saying, is crucial to investment and confidence in the paper and other industries. We will not allow short-term pressures to risk returning us to the days of boom and bust and a constant change in policy that made investment in the UK's productive capacity so inadequate.

It is worth remembering that in the paper industry, and more broadly across manufacturing, we are seeing improvements in output, productivity and exports. Although manufacturing employment has fallen by some 160,000 jobs in the past three years, we should remember the period between 1979 and 1997, when manufacturing employment fell, on average, by 140,000 every year. The scale is very different today.

As my hon. Friend will be aware, the Government's policy on the single currency remains as it was when my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer set it out in October 1997. The determining factor that must guide any Government decision is whether the economic case for the UK joining is clear and unambiguous. We have set out five economic tests that have to be met before any decision to join can be taken, and we have made it clear that once the Government have made a decision, it will be put before Parliament, but that the final decision must be made by the people in a referendum.

I shall end, as did my hon. Friend, on the issue of the health and safety performance of the industry. I am glad that he tackled so trenchantly the appalling health and safety record that mars the otherwise highly impressive record of productivity and investment. I know from discussions with the Graphical, Paper and Media Union how hard it has worked with management, in a model of partnership with industry, to tackle that problem. The accident rate in the paper industry has persistently remained some 50 per cent. higher than the average achieved by all manufacturing industry. That record is simply not good enough.

For the past two years, the industry, the unions and the Health and Safety Executive have co-operated in a major initiative, strongly backed by Ministers in the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions. The initiative was designed to reduce accidents by 50 per cent. over three years, but the accident figures remain stubbornly high. That is unacceptable. We expect from the owners and management of the mills a commitment to safe working practices, and a culture of safety and continuous improvement in which people's health and lives are not regarded as expendable commodities in the quest for higher output. That safety record is the one blot on the record of an industry that is enormously important to this country, which has made real improvements in investment and productivity and which certainly has the backing and the practical support of the Government.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at half-past One o'clock.

Sanctions

[Relevant documents: Second Report from the International Development Committee, Session 1999-2000 HC67, and Government response HC473]

Motion made, and Question proposed, That the sitting be now adjourned.—[Mr. Pope.]

2.30 pm

Mr. Bowen Wells (Hertford and Stortford): I am delighted to be able to open this debate on sanctions. The Select Committee on International Development decided to investigate sanctions because of the humanitarian effect on the people of the countries affected. The compelling evidence that was given to us by many international organisations concerned with children and women, and with the humanitarian affairs of the targeted countries, showed that the policy was having a severe effect on the poorest people in the countries concerned, and very little effect in terms of achieving the aims of the Foreign Office and the international community. The major example is the compulsory economic sanctions that were imposed on Iraq, which have now been in place for 10 years. Inevitably, therefore, our report concentrates on Iraq.

The International Development Committee is particularly concerned by the statements made to us by organisations such as UNICEF and the Save the Children Fund. In 1999, UNICEF published the extraordinary estimate that an additional 500,000 Iraqi children under the age of five died between 1991 and 1998. During those eight years, in an average three-hour period—the length of today's debate—there would be 21 additional deaths of under-fives in a country whose population is one third of the size of the United Kingdom's. UNICEF's most recent child malnutrition survey, in south and central Iraq, found little, if any, change since 1997.

That is the result of the imposition by the international community of sanctions on Iraq. When they were imposed, the sanctions were designed to change the behaviour—or, indeed, the leadership—of the Government of Iraq. They were supposed to ensure that Saddam Hussein, the president of Iraq, was denied the means by which he could continue to manufacture, and threaten his immediate vicinity with, weapons of mass destruction, and to prevent him from carrying out aggressive wars and incursions into neighbouring countries such as Kuwait.

What have been the effects of those sanctions on Saddam Hussein's behaviour 10 years later? He is still in power, more certainly than he was when the sanctions were imposed. He and his family are considerably richer than they were 10 years ago. The imposition of sanctions has enabled him to impose a rationing system for food, medical supplies, health and education on all the people of Iraq, who have thus become totally dependent on him.

That shows the ineffectiveness of sanctions on Iraq. The Foreign Office's reply to the Committee's report is complacent and, in many ways, flabby. Before there are cries of pain from the Foreign Office, I point out that one would have thought that, in making a reply to a Select Committee, it would have made every effort to ensure that its facts were correct. It states that the United Kingdom has imposed universal sanctions only once since the second world war, but that is not the case. It has applied them three times, in Argentina and elsewhere. That illustrates a disregard for accuracy and a determination not to listen to the Select Committee's arguments for trying to do something more effective, and with fewer bad humanitarian effects for the countries being targeted.

Sanctions have never been effective anywhere. They are a diplomatic tool used to reply to a population's cry for the Foreign Office to do something. Doing something, for the Foreign Office, involves taking the easy option of saying that it will apply sanctions. The Foreign Office's—and the international community's—readiness to impose sanctions in answer to the demand to do something has increased since the end of the cold war. It is now involved in more than 25 sanctions regimes, most of which have been applied since then, and I fear that the number is growing.

Other regional examples of sanctions exist, in which we find severe humanitarian suffering—for example, in Burundi.

Ann Clwyd (Cynon Valley): I am sorry to have to disagree with the Chairman of our Committee, but paragraph 39 of the Committee's conclusions clearly states:

> Not all this humanitarian distress is the direct result of the sanctions regime. There is a tendency to blame all such distress on sanctions in the absence of clear evidence...The responsibility for the plight of the Iraqi people must ultimately lie with the Iraqi leadership.

It is only fair to point out that that formed part of our report's conclusions.

Mr. Wells: I entirely accept that. I was coming to that point later in my speech. Of course Saddam Hussein is responsible for all the distress in his country. His people are suffering as a result of serious maladministration, fraud, and the corrupt nature of his regime. However, without the sanctions, he would not have been helped to stay in power and to apply the rationing system to which I have referred. We cannot deny that, in Iraq and elsewhere, the perpetrators of serious international crimes are responsible for the humanitarian effects of those crimes on their countries, but we do not have to help them.

Mr. Andrew Robathan (Blaby): There is a great deal of common ground between my hon. Friend and myself. We all went through the lengthy business of compiling the report. However, I am not entirely sure that we have been helping Saddam Hussein as he appears to suggest. I do not disagree with him fundamentally, but I do not believe that the people of Iraq would have been in a much better position without sanctions.

Mr. Wells: I have to disagree with my hon. Friend. I do not think that Saddam Hussein would have remained quite so securely in power if he had not been assisted in doing so by international sanctions. Those sanctions legitimise his domestic position as far as the Iraqi people are concerned, because they are seen as an external threat not only to his regime but to the whole population. That gives him greater authority. The countries imposing the sanctions are not responsible for causing the suffering of the people of Iraq, however. Saddam Hussein is.

The sanctions against Burundi are among the examples of regional sanctions that have not worked and have produced severe humanitarian disasters. The sanctions imposed by three African countries on Burundi prevented the provision of medical assistance for well over a year. The result was severe outbreaks of disease for which no medical help was available. The civilian population also faced serious shortages of food and other vital supplies.

The other obvious failure was in Angola, where sanctions still apply. The evidence given to the Committee suggested that Dr. Savimbi is receiving the contents of at least seven flights a day, despite the international community's sanctions. Some of the aircraft are, in fact, so large that he is taking delivery of tanks. Such is the ineffectiveness of the sanctions against Angola that Savimbi is able to carry on a civil war. Angola provides some of the worst examples of human deprivation and, although it is potentially a rich country, it has become one of the poorest in the world. The effectiveness of the sanctions must be questioned, but the impact on innocent civilians and their children is substantial.

My next example relates to a real farce. I refer to the political ineptitude shown by the European Union—acting with the support of the United Kingdom—in the fuel for democracy regime that was imposed on Serbia at the end of last year. In that case, although the European Union had imposed sanctions on fuel supplies to Serbia, we chose to break our own sanctions. The world was conscious that, during the severe winter in Serbia and Kosovo, there could be a serious number of deaths from hypothermia among the weaker members of the population—especially young children and elderly people—as a result of the bombing of the region and the elimination of the power supply, so the European Union, supported by the United Kingdom, decided to supply fuel to those mayors of Serbian towns close to the border with Kosovo who would declare themselves for democracy and against Milosevic. That was done in the name of humanitarian assistance.

The bandying around of the term "humanitarian" in that context was deplorable. Since the Geneva convention, the understanding has been that any assistance provided under the humanitarian banner should be universal—it should go to all sides in a war. Those delivering such aid must be seen to be neutral, so that they will not come under attack from any side. Fuel for democracy violated all humanitarian considerations. It was supplied only to those mayors who were opposed to Milosevic. That is a serious undermining of the whole credibility of sanctions and humanitarian assistance and it should cease forthwith. In any case, that programme did not result in the overthrow of Milosevic, as had been hoped. The people of Serbia were saved from death in the cold by the Chinese, who supplied fuel, and the Swiss Government, who repaired many of their power stations. In terms of humanitarian efforts and focus, the Foreign Office and the European Union are unlikely to be effective in that example.

The question arises whether we should be using sanctions at all—whether we should give them up as a means of trying to exert pressure on countries that offend against international law. The Committee concluded that that would not be sensible. The evidence suggested that we should make sanctions sharper and more focused, and perhaps concentrate them on financial assets.

In recent years there has been a flurry of activity to examine how financial sanctions might be implemented. A major initiative has been the Swiss-sponsored Interlaken process, which has been examining proposals to improve the effectiveness of financial sanctions. The United Kingdom has been supportive of the Interlaken process, but the Committee thought that there was a gap between rhetoric and practice. For example, at the time of its inquiry, the Treasury informed the Committee that in the case of Angola only two accounts had been frozen and that the amounts frozen were not significant. Similarly, while the Government in their response stated that they take financial sanctions seriously, they also stated that > it is the responsibility of financial institutions to ensure that targeted accounts are frozen, and up to them to decide which systems they wish to use to achieve this end.

The Government's rejection of interdiction software, which is widely used in the United States and elsewhere, contrasts with the speech of the United Kingdom ambassador to the United Nations Security Council during a debate on sanctions on 17 April when he stated:

> I hope that modern technology will be able to help us in the financial area.

The Government also rejected the Committee's recommendation that an office for foreign assets control be established.

How many accounts have been frozen under the financial sanctions regimes against Iraq, UNITA in Angola, the Taliban in Afghanistan and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia? Is the situation satisfactory, or should the Government and the Bank of England be examining further options for freezing the funds of targeted individuals? Are the Government satisfied that the recommendations of the Interlaken process were taken into account when the most recent financial sanctions regime was implemented, against the Taliban in Afghanistan? The Foreign Office rejected the Committee's approach and I believe that it was seriously mistaken to do so. If we are to apply financial sanctions, the co-operation of not only the Foreign Office, but the Treasury, the Department of Trade and Industry, the Bank of England, Customs and Excise, the UK mission in New York and so on will be needed.

It is incorrect to say that the United Kingdom has never imposed unilateral financial sanctions. We did so on 2 April 1982 against Argentina and on 2 August 1990 against Kuwait, which was then part of Iraq. On both occasions, the Emergency Powers Act 1920 was used and the fact that the Kuwait measures were protective is irrelevant. The Committee's basic point is unassailable.

There will be coherent administration of sanctions only if responsibility rests with a single body that is responsive to the financial centre being policed.

The Bank of England used to do the job very well, but since the internationalisation of the banking system and the proposed transfer to Brussels of the Bank of England's powers to discipline the banking sector, its powers and capacity have been seriously undermined. Therefore, we need to replace those powers with a co-operative effort on an international and European Union basis which includes the United States and Japan at least. The Foreign Office should reconsider its rejection of that demand. I ask it to do so urgently. The whole Government must reconsider their position if they are serious about finding a means of targeting sanctions on the leaders of countries without creating unnecessary suffering for their unempowered people. It is illogical to apply sanctions that impact on people who have no power, in particular, no power to change the regime. They have no power because they have no money, because the very leaders whom we are trying to influence have taken it away. Sanctions should instead be targeted on the people whom we need to get at.

The Committee examined the present system of humanitarian exemptions and concluded that they should be based on a thorough assessment of the likely impact of the sanctions on the targeted population, and of other issues such as the level of economic development in the country targeted and groups that are likely to be disproportionately affected by the imposition of sanctions.

The Committee further recommended that sanctions regimes should be sufficiently flexible so as to allow for fine-tuning in response to any...adverse humanitarian consequences.

For example, in northern Iraq the universal food ration, which was introduced as part of the oil for food programme, resulted in the dramatic collapse of markets in key agricultural products such as wheat, flour, rice, oil, chick peas and lentils, impoverishing the farmers in that region. That mistake has been made time and again in international efforts to help people, particularly by the World Food Programme. We should have learnt from such mistakes by now, but in this case we apparently have not. It is vital that the humanitarian response to sanctions takes account of local procurement and the local economy.

Finally, the Committee looked at the capacity of the United Nations. The Government agreed with the Committee that there is a need for a dedicated and properly resourced capacity—not only in Britain but in the United Nations secretariat—to provide advice and support to the Security Council, sanctions committees, member states and regional organisations on all aspects of sanctions, including the targeting, implementation and enforcement of financial sanctions. The Government's response makes frequent reference to a Canadian proposal to establish a working group on sanctions in the United Nations Security Council. Has that group been established? Who will be involved and what will be its remit? How will it be funded and supported, both financially and logistically?

This is a very serious issue, and the Committee has made a major contribution to persuading the international community and the Foreign Office to do a lot better than they are doing at the moment. Among those who gave important evidence to the Committee was Mr. Jeremy Carver, who is a representative of one of the most important and best informed legal practices in this country. He believes that the Committee is right to press the Foreign Office to be more constructive and recognise the needs of those in the targeted nations who, because they are unable to respond to sanctions, are suffering seriously.

This debate is long overdue, and I hope that it will help to ensure a more sustainable, rigorous and disciplined policy that we can applaud and support in future.

2.53 pm

Ann Clwyd (Cynon Valley): I also want to quote from Mr. Jeremy Carver, who, as the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells) suggested, is a partner and head of international law at Clifford Chance. Mr. Carver took part in the Interlaken process, so he is well versed in these arguments. He told the Committee:

It is not the imposition or maintenance of international sanctions, but the policies of the Iraqi government which are the primary cause of this suffering. The Iraqi regime has cynically exploited sanctions: both to justify its neglect of its own population and as a tool to solicit external support for its reconstructed ambitions. A government which delights in showing foreign parliamentarians suffering infants, when its warehouses are overflowing with food and medicine undistributed for years, surely reveals itself, save to the gullible.

Representatives of the Iraqi opposition groups who gave evidence to us agreed. They questioned the extent to which the humanitarian impact of sanctions was the responsibility of the countries imposing the sanctions or of the Iraqi Government. They said that the sanctions had had an effect. None of us would argue that they had not—of course they have. The British Government have agreed that the humanitarian situation in Iraq has deteriorated since sanctions were imposed in 1990, but obviously there are differing opinions about the causes.

The opposition groups said:

After 60 or 90 days at the most the regime had the opportunity to remove sanctions if the international community's will had been accepted by Iraq—and if it had been implemented. However, they said:

Iraq has dragged its feet by denying the Iraqi population a better life in economic, political and even social terms...it has challenged the international community and the UN resolutions.

I could give hon. Members a list longer than both arms that would show the ways in which the Iraqi Government have refused to honour those resolutions and continued to go their own way.

The Iraqi opposition groups of course acknowledge that the sanctions are hurting the people, but they say:

they are absolutely necessary to keep pressure on the regime.

The solution, it is argued, lies in maintaining sanctions, albeit with improved exemption mechanisms. We should bring education, transport and the environment into the equation. That is the solution, not the total removal of sanctions.

[Ann Clwyd]

That was the opposition groups' argument, and it must be said that those people have family in Iraq, both north and south, and they know what they are talking about. The trouble is that it is difficult for us to establish for ourselves where the truth lies, apart from by listening to reports from other people.

Mr. Robathan: The hon. Lady and I share much common ground on the matter. I would like to raise one issue before she moves on from considering the Iraqi opposition. They made a point that is worth repeating. They were asked by the hon. Member for Stevenage (Barbara Follett) whether the people of Iraq wanted sanctions to be lifted. In response, Dr. Latif Rashid from the Iraqi National Congress said:

> I think that it would be a nightmare for the Iraqi people if the pressure on the regime was reduced.

That speaks volumes, does it not?

Ann Clwyd: That is an important point. The report is bulky and we took a long time to prepare it. The evidence in it is an accumulation of opinions, which is worth reading, if I may plug it. The then head of the middle east department at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, Edward Chaplin, said:

> there are other, rather startling anomalies in the way that, for example, Iraq exports food to Syria in significant quantities, while claiming that its people do not have enough to eat.

Further, Mr. Chaplin said that the regime had > reduced the amount of the calorific value of the food basket but put in large sums of money for the import of bank-note counting machines and telecommunications equipment, tens of millions of dollars for those items, but less than before going on the food basket. And then there is the problem of distribution, even the stuff that does get into the country.

Iraqi Kurdistan and northern Iraq are the subject of both UN sanctions and Saddam Hussein's sanctions. The UN and other humanitarian agencies have assumed responsibility for the provision of food and medicine there. Other witnesses noted the stark contrast between those areas and central and southern Iraq, where Saddam Hussein remains in control. The people in northern Iraq will certainly substantiate that.

I want to concentrate today on the human rights abuses of the Iraqi regime, because they are a factor that it is important to consider within the subject of sanctions. Like many of my hon. Friends, I went round the holocaust exhibition in the Imperial War museum. I spent two hours there the other week looking at the evidence of the terrible effects of the holocaust on peoples of various countries and the debris that was left of people's personal effects: the buttons off their coats, scraps of material, tin mugs, half combs, and many things that were dug out of mass graves. When one looks at the film of events that took place at the time, one sees the sheer terror on people's faces—on the faces of small children and old men and women.

As I walked around, I thought that in a few years' time we would see the same thing in Iraq, because of the extent of the persecution by that regime of the Kurds in the north, the Shi'ites in the south and the Iranians, with the use of chemical weapons on the people of Halabja and the written instructions given by many leading members of the regime.

The Iraqi regime is very like the Nazis and the Khmer Rouge in Cambodia, who kept explicit instructions about what should be done with people. For example, in the case of a group of Kurdish shepherds who were rounded up, a telegram was sent back to Baghdad to ask what should be done with them. The command was, "Dispose of them." They were shot. Afterwards, letters were sent out to their relatives asking them to come and collect the bodies. When they collected the bodies, they had to sign for them and pay for the bullets that had been used to kill their relatives. That is documented in meticulous detail by the regime, and that will be very useful in the future when the perpetrators appear before a war crimes tribunal.

I want to highlight the Government's response to part of the Committee's report. The report said:

> Any move away from comprehensive sanctions should go hand in hand with measures designed to target the real culprits, not the poor of Iraq but their leadership. Possibilities include a concerted attempt to target and either freeze or sequester the assets of Saddam Hussein and those connected to him, and the indictment of Saddam Hussein and his close associated as war criminals. To bring to justice Saddam Hussein is also a humanitarian imperative and this should be done without delay.

The Government agreed with that view. They referred to the fact that the UN special rapporteur for Iraq concluded in his most recent report that he had observed no improvement in the human rights situation there since his appointment as human rights rapporteur in 1992. In fact, he said that the situation was getting worse. The prevailing regime of systematic human rights violations is contrary to Iraq's many international obligations and remains a threat to peace and security in the region.

The Government share the view that Saddam Hussein and other members of his regime should be brought to account for the atrocities that they have committed over the years. The Government support Indict and other organisations that seek to bring them to justice. I should explain my own interest as chair of Indict, from which I receive no personal finances. That organisation is committed to bringing some of the main perpetrators of continuing human rights abuses before an international criminal tribunal.

One of the problems with the proposed International Criminal Court is that it will not be able to act retrospectively and, given the slow pace at which countries are ratifying it, it will be many years before it is set up. That is why I suggest that the action of organisations such as Indict to bring Saddam Hussein before an international war crimes tribunal could be an alternative to the easing of sanctions—that is, if the regime agrees to resolution 1284, which the United Kingdom spent so much time pushing through the UN, only to be told by Tariq Aziz that Iraq had no intention of agreeing to it. The resolution is all about the easing of sanctions. If the regime or its supporters favour the easing of sanctions, they should back it. They should also back the creation of an ad hoc tribunal at the UN to indict Saddam Hussein and some of his closest cronies.

It seems extremely ironic to me that those abuses are so well documented—better documented than many war crimes perpetrated in the century that has just passed—yet no international tribunal has been set up at the UN. I know that the Government have been busy in relation to resolution 1284 and will continue to press for it to be accepted, but they should concentrate at the same time on trying to secure the establishment of an ad hoc tribunal. In a recent letter to Ambassador Holbrooke at the UN, Human Rights Watch pressed the Security Council to establish an international criminal tribunal like those that have already been set up for Rwanda and the former Yugoslavia.

Human Rights Watch noted that such a step was entirely warranted on the basis of the evidence that it had uncovered and would help to dispel any suggestion that addressing Iraq's humanitarian crisis implies leniency towards the Iraqi regime. An article in The Economist on 8 April said:

> Sanctions remain the world's only leverage over a ruthless and bellicose tyrant. Yet almost ten years into the embargo they have not budged him.

That point was also made by the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford.

Perhaps America and Britain need to rethink a policy that has so embittered and impoverished the people of Iraq. I can never understand why the UN annual report on human rights in Iraq does not receive more publicity when it documents some of the most awful human rights abuses ever. In his latest report to the UN, Max van der Stoel, human rights rapporteur on Iraq since 1992, said:

> the gravity of human rights abuses in Iraq has few comparisons in the world since the end of the second world war.

He regrets that since saying that in 1992 he has had no cause to change his view, and concludes that the regime has effectively eliminated the civil rights to life, liberty and physical integrity; eliminated freedoms of thought, expression, association and assembly; flouted rights to political participation; banned all political parties except the Ba'ath party; and failed to use all available resources to ensure the enjoyment of their economic, social and cultural rights by the Iraqi people. He says that the political and legal order in Iraq is not compatible with respect for human rights and entails systematic violations throughout the country, affecting almost the entire population.

I shall list some of the abuses that have taken place in the past year. The special rapporteur has a list of 21 people from Basra who in late March 1999 were arrested, executed by firing squad and buried in a mass grave near the town of Zubair. Their so-called crime was demonstrating. In addition, the houses of their families were demolished and their relatives detained. That was under the direct supervision of Ali Hassan Al-Majid, commonly known outside Iraq as "Chemical Ali", the man who ordered the destruction of Halabja by chemical and biological weapons.

Other lists contained the names of 56 prisoners who were executed en masse in the Abu Ghraib prison in Baghdad in April 1999 and of 26 prisoners executed en masse on 10 August 1999. Their so-called crime was inflicting damage on the state. Since 1997 2,500 prisoners have been executed without trial as part of Iraq's prison cleansing campaign.

The special rapporteur has lists of hundreds arrested and detained without trial. For example, 70 people in Kerbal were arrested and taken to detention centres in Baghdad and prisons in Al-Amara. Those arrests were ordered by Saddam's son Qusay to intimidate the population of the southern marshes by taking hostages. Eight Shi'ite clerics have been sentenced to death. Two Shi'ite religious scholars have been murdered in what the special rapporteur feels may have been an organised attack by the Iraqi Government.

The Iraqis in exile do not make enough of these facts. When I went to northern Iraq I met thousands of people camping out in what had been the headquarters of the Iraqi secret police. They had been deported. They were given 24 hours to get out of their homes and clear off to northern Iraq. That internal deportation, to relocate and Arabise the Kurds, continues. Kurdish property and land have been seized and Arab settlements have been built in Kurdish areas.

Iraq has the highest number of disappearances in the world. The human rights working group has stated that there are more than 16,000 outstanding cases of disappearances, including those of more than 600 Kuwaitis. The special rapporteur has reports of the Iraqi army destroying houses and villages. In late March 1999, armoured division 6 destroyed the residential areas of some of the tribes and bulldozed 56 homes of political opponents in Basra.

Since the beginning of last year, the special rapporteur has received regular reports that the Government of Iraq has been destroying the houses of opponents with bulldozers in broad daylight. Recently, 52 houses were demolished in Basra. There is a list of names of hundreds of people treated in that way. We know their addresses and the action that was taken against their families. We know of arrests, executions and expulsions.

I am reminded of a visit to the then Iraqi ambassador in London in about 1977 or 1978, when I was not a politician but part of a group from Wales. There were many Iraqi and Kurdish students in Wales then. We came with a list of missing women and children. I did not understand then why all the Iraqis decided to stay at the top of the road. After all, they had made the journey from Wales with us. However, they said, "No, no, we are not coming anywhere near there." At the Iraqi embassy we were given tea, smiles and greetings. Then I passed to the ambassador a list of the missing women and children. He did not even look at it. He just pushed it aside, got up and shouted "Out! Out!" Then I understood why the Iraqis and Kurds had stayed at the top of the street. That was the first of many visits to the Iraqi embassy. I cannot say that my treatment was any better on subsequent occasions. In fact, I think it got progressively worse.

Over the years, among the organisations that have given evidence—I have chaired an Iraqi opposition group, too, since 1984—has been the Iraqi Communist party, which was badly treated by the regime. Its members went to see the UN special rapporteur in Geneva with more lists—the lists are always reliable—showing what has happened this year. A group of 58 prisoners who had been held in solitary confinement at the Abu Ghraib prison were executed on 9 March. Among those victims, 14 had been sentenced to death for political offences ranging from being affiliated to opposition parties to participating in opposition activities. The rest were sentenced for criminal offences. The bodies of the latter were handed to the families; the bodies of the political prisoners were removed using vehicles that belonged to special security, which is headed by Saddam's son Qusay. They were buried at night and the relatives do not know where.

[Ann Clwyd]

I could go on: 21 political prisoners were executed on 3 February; 43 were executed on 12 February; and 101 were executed later in the year. I understand that 73 citizens are now being held in solitary confinement at the Abu Ghraib prison in cells that are usually used for people who are sentenced to death. They have been there since 1991. Those who went to see the UN special rapporteur proposed activating UN resolution 688, which deals with human rights in Iraq. Like so many other UN resolutions, however, it has not been honoured by the regime. The regime's officials, headed by Saddam Hussein, should face trial before an international tribunal.

One sanction that would make it impossible for Saddam Hussein or other members of the regime to travel is indictment. Other war criminals who have been chased around the globe have eventually been caught. If the members of the regime are indicted, they are less likely to move outside the country. I have had many dealings with Ambassador David Scheffer, whose remit includes war crimes committed throughout the world. He believes that Saddam Hussein and his henchmen are still viewed by some Governments as the legitimate leaders of a country that is under siege by the international community. In reality, they are thugs who are terrorising what was once, and could be again, a great nation.

We, the United States and many other countries have said that that group of Iraqi criminals should be stripped of their power and, if possible, brought to justice. They should not benefit from contracts, trade or initiatives that would bestow any legitimacy on their regime in Baghdad. They should be isolated, cut off and brought before the gates of justice.

The organisation that I chair has named 12 members of the regime, including Saddam Hussein, his two sons Qusay and Uday, his cousin Hassan Al-Majid—the infamous "Chemical Ali"—and a small number of associates who share responsibility for the crimes. From time to time, we hear that a member of the regime may be travelling in Europe. Last year, Ezzat Ibrahim Al-Douri, vice-chairman of the revolutionary command council, visited Vienna last summer for medical attention. The United States, other nations and the organisation that I chair approached the Austrian authorities to try to have him detained there. Unfortunately, the Austrian official who tried to get him arrested did not have sufficient material. It is necessary to get witness statements, videos if possible, signed orders and a variety of admissible evidence for an indictment.

In our organisation, we have had to build up such information from scratch. We began with empty box files. Despite all the evidence that is held in the United States and the United Kingdom, we have had to piece it together ourselves. If the rest of the world, and the Government, are serious about indictment, they should give more assistance to those who are trying to bring it about.

I want to mention nine major criminal episodes under Saddam Hussein's rule in Iraq. In the 1980s, crimes against humanity and possible genocide occurred in the Anfal campaign against the Kurds, including the use of poison gas in Halabja in 1988, which killed an estimated 5,000 people in a single attack. Also in the 1980s, crimes against humanity and war crimes were committed involving the use of poison gas against Iran. There were other war crimes against Iran and the Iranian people. In 1990 and 1991, there were crimes against humanity and war crimes against Kuwait, its people and its environment, during the illegal invasion and occupation, and in the same year there were war crimes against coalition forces during the Gulf war. During the 1990s there were possible crimes against humanity and war crimes with respect to illegal human experimentation. Since the 1980s, possible crimes against humanity have related to killings in Iraq, mainly of political opponents. Since 1991, crimes against humanity and possibly genocide have been committed against the Iraqi Kurds in the north and against the people of the southern Iraqi marshes. Possible crimes against humanity and war crimes have been committed in killing Iranian prisoners of war.

Among the documents held by the Americans are 5.5 million pages of captured Iraqi documents taken out of northern Iraq by Human Rights Watch and the United States Government. An archive of more than 4 million pages of Iraqi documents was captured, and videos were shot by US cameramen during the Gulf war. Classified Iraqi archives are held. No one can doubt the Iraqi regime's continuing assaults on its own civilians. Anyone who calls for the unilateral lifting of sanctions without underlying agreements is being irresponsible.

I hear that some countries now talk about trade with Iraq and sending trade delegations. I hear of a recent agreement with Turkey. There must not be a memory lapse about the war crimes of Saddam Hussein and his inner circle. That man and his regime have for years brutally and systematically committed war crimes and crimes against humanity. They are committing them now and will continue to do so until the international community finally says no.

The Security Council could, I believe, set up an ad hoc tribunal. I have heard Ambassador Scheffer mention the use of an interim arrangement in the setting up of war crimes tribunals in the past. That was done in the cases of former Yugoslavia and Rwanda, when a commission of experts was set up to investigate the facts. However, he believes that that is unnecessary in this case. The facts are well known, and an ad-hoc tribunal could be set up now.

Last year, when the Select Committee went to the United Nations and we spoke to the Secretary-General, I asked him specifically what the UN would do if some of those war criminals were indicted. He said, "I suppose we would set up an ad hoc tribunal." Indict hopes soon to put that to the test. We have copies of 176 CD-ROMs, which the US has made available to us. Our researchers have been going through that information and collecting the kind of evidence that is needed to bring about an indictment. There is no shortage of information.

It is important to place on the record one of the most brutal crimes of Saddam Hussein's regime—the Anfal campaign against the Kurds. I have been to that part of the world several times, and that campaign never came home to me in all its brutality until I crossed the border from Iran into Iraq at night during Saddam Hussein's attack on the Kurds. They were fleeing across the mountains to Iran and elsewhere, wherever they could cross a border, in the most pitiful state. We could hear the bombardment going on. As we drove into northern Iraq, we saw that every few miles there were masses of rubble. I realised that those were some of the 3,000 villages that had just been bulldozed by Saddam Hussein, and had once been people's homes. Those people had been transported to the desert area of Iraq. That was when I recognised the sheer awfulness of the Anfal campaign.

"Chemical Ali", who was in the late 1980s the man responsible for implementing the policy against the Kurds, said in a speech to security commanders in January 1989:

> I'll certainly look after the Kurds. I'll do it by burying them with bulldozers. That's how I'll do it.

He was true to his word. The policy was simple and direct.

Orders for the treatment of people who were rounded up were explicit, as in the case of the shepherds whom I mentioned earlier. An order of June 1987, again from Ali Hassan Al-Majid, stated:

> The armed forces must kill any human being or animal present within these areas. They are totally prohibited.

That order was repeated often, because apparently some units in the field were not as active in implementing the policy as the high command wished. Another command stated:

> The core command shall carry out random bombardments using artillery, helicopters and aircraft at all times in order to kill the largest number of persons present in those prohibited areas. All persons captured in those villages shall be detained, and those between the ages of 15 and 70 must be executed after any useful information has been obtained from them.

Another cold-blooded edict stated:

> The 1st Army Corps issued an order as requested by comrade Ali Hassan Al-Majid to execute the wounded civilians after the party organisation confirmed their hostility towards the authorities.

The best known incident was the attack on Halabja, where 5,000 civilians died from the effects of mustard and nerve gases. I went to see some of them in hospital in London about a month later. They had the most horrifying burns, and some could not speak. The devastating effects of Halabja are felt to this day, including abnormal rates of birth defects, cancers and infertility.

The Foreign Secretary and the Minister have spelt out their intentions many times, and I agree with them. I have always supported the view that they have taken. After all, what alternative do we have when there is no agreement that weapons production—which I am certain is still going on in that country—can be inspected? Do we just cross our fingers as Saddam Hussein smuggles in a new stock of weapons, and wish the Kurds, the Shias and the Iranians—and anyone else whom he plans to attack—the best of luck? The answer to that must be no.

If we are responsible human beings, as I hope, we must realise that Saddam Hussein's is an awful regime. Unless it is brought to book—for example, through resolution 1284 or through the indictment of Iraqi war criminals—it will continue to persecute its own people and make their lives a misery, and continue to be a threat to neighbouring countries and, perhaps, countries further afield. We must say to him that there is no hiding place in the world for war criminals any more, as the spokesperson for the Attorney General said at Question Time this afternoon. We must say that it is the responsibility of every country, under international law, to prosecute Iraqi war criminals wherever they might be. That must be the message to any future dictators and perpetrators of atrocities such as the holocaust and the many other terrible things that have happened to us over the past century.

3.32 pm

Mr. Tony Worthington (Clydebank and Milngavie): I want to take the emphasis away from Iraq and to look at sanctions more generally. I shall look particularly at the question of what are called smart sanctions, or financial sanctions.

There are many imperfections in the kind of sanctions that have generally been imposed, and the advantages of smart sanctions are listed in paragraph 65 of our report. It points out that smarter sanctions ought, among other things, to hurt the regime more than the general population; that they avoid the humanitarian costs of comprehensive trade embargoes; and that they make it more difficult for the target regime to rally domestic and foreign support against the sanctions. There is an attractiveness about smart sanctions. I went into this investigation thinking that it would be interesting to hear about them. I wondered what they were and how they operated.

I must say that I emerged from working on the report deeply disillusioned about smart sanctions, because I did not find much smartness going on. The report refers to that in strong terms in paragraph 78, which says:

> We consider it totally unacceptable that there is no individual or organisation within the United Nations with overall responsibility for targeting financial sanctions, for example against those who continue to enrich themselves while their people suffer.

It is impossible to have smart sanctions when the United Nations does not have a brain. It does not have a brain because no one there is responsible for gathering information. No person or organisation within the United Nations is responsible for the imposition of smart sanctions. We must address that. The Foreign Office's response to the report does not deal adequately with that point.

If hon. Members want to know how dumb the United Nations is in this respect, they should read the evidence of Ambassador Fowler on the resources that he has and the information that he receives as chair of the Angola sanctions committee. He said that he received whatever information any nation deigned to give him, which was not much.

I can illustrate the point about smart sanctions by referring to the issue of diamonds. It is fair to say that, if we were serious about preventing conflict in Africa, we would have done something about diamond mining and smuggling a long time ago. The Angola crisis has been going on for 25 years, and it is calculated that, in the 1990s, Savimbi gathered in $3.7 billion from the diamond trade. The Congo and, for the past 10 years, Sierra Leone have also been affected.

I received some information from De Beers, which controls about 65 per cent. of the world's diamonds. The figure has gone down in recent years because of the collapse of the Soviet Union, but we are still talking about a big player. Everyone who considers the situations in Angola, Sierra Leone and the Congo comes to the conclusion that diamonds are fuelling the wars. In a press release, De Beers Canada said that it had long ago ceased buying diamonds in Angola from the informal sector of the economy.

The document also says:

The intake of diamonds being purchased by De Beers and its associated companies and being sold into the market through the Sight system does not include any diamonds which come from any area in Africa controlled by forces rebelling against the legitimate and internationally recognised government of the relevant country.

De Beers is saying that its hands are clean.

De Beers also wrote to me about something that I said in a previous debate. In evidence to Congress, the corporation said that, for a variety of reasons, it had been appalled by the link that has been made between diamonds and the funding of weapons purchases by rebel armies in Africa.

In the letter that I received, it said:

Moreover, as part of its (well publicised) programme to deny rebel movements in Africa access to the world's diamond markets, De Beers has closed down all its outside buying operations in Africa and instructed its offices in Antwerp and Tel Aviv not to buy any African-sourced diamonds. That is why it is able to ensure that all the diamonds it sells onto the market are conflict-free.

That is an enormous statement, and it conflicts with what has been said by others who have carried out research into the matter.

Ms Glenda Jackson (Hampstead and Highgate): Does the hon. Gentleman not find it surprising that world diamond prices have remained fairly stable? If there were a quantity of diamonds available outside the official channels, the price of diamonds would have plummeted.

Mr. Worthington: One of the major reasons for the existence of De Beers is to protect world diamond prices. We ought to be able to use it to help to clear up diamond smuggling, as it is easier to control operations with such a huge organisation.

A report by an organisation called Partnership Africa-Canada, entitled "The Heart of the Matter: Sierra Leone, Diamonds and Human Security", says:

De Beers says that it does not purchase Sierra Leonean diamonds. Through its companies and buying offices in West Africa, however, and in its attempts to mop up supplies everywhere in the world, it is virtually inconceivable that the company is not—in one way or another—purchasing diamonds that have been smuggled out of Sierra Leone.

There are important questions to be asked. Although the Government of Sierra Leone recorded exports of only 8,500 carats in 1998, the Diamond High Council in Belgium recorded imports from Sierra Leone of 770,000 carats. In Liberia, where little diamond mining takes place, the annual diamond mining capacity is between 100,000 and 150,000 carats, but Liberian imports to Belgium of more than 31 million carats have been recorded between 1994 and 1998. In other words, although the capacity of the Liberian diamond industry was said to be about 100,000 carats, Belgium was allegedly importing 6 million carats a year during that period. That is a highly significant accusation.

The Canadian report states:

De Beers is part of the problem. In its efforts to control as much of the international diamond market as possible, it is no doubt purchasing diamonds from a wide variety of dubious sources, either wittingly or unwittingly.

That is also a considerable accusation. Global Witness, a London-based organisation with which the Foreign Office occasionally deals, has stated:

Governments and the trade must finally accept it is their responsibility to ensure that diamonds are not involved in the funding of conflict, and take action accordingly.

Global Witness is a well-accredited organisation, and I see the Minister nodding in agreement. It continues:

If any of these diamond funded conflicts in Africa are to have a chance of peaceful conclusion and if the threat to the international market is to be negated, then the international community, through the G8, G77, UN, SADC and EU must act swiftly and decisively to prohibit the sale and marketing of these "blood diamonds".

Conflicts have continued in Angola for 25 years, and in Sierra Leone for 10 years. Diamonds are relatively simple to control compared with offshore financial trading activities. They pose problems, in the sense that they are small and very valuable, but they are subject to powerful controls. The diamond market in Belgium, which controls 75 per cent. of the world's diamonds, is secretive, and it is because it has been designed to be so that hon. Members probably know little about it.

The world community cannot cope with this problem. Like everyone else, Ambassador Fowler accepts that diamonds are at the root of it, but as far as I can tell, his team consists of not much more than one other person and a dog—and I am not even sure about the dog. He has no information-gathering mechanisms, no power, and is unable to understand the situation in Angola, whether in respect of diamonds or of anything else. We asked him about the problem of small arms in Angola, and he replied, "Small arms? Huge, 50-tonne tanks are being smuggled in and I can't stop them."

We must get serious about this problem. If sanctions are to be imposed, it is no use giving in to the "something must be done" syndrome. Where sanctions have been imposed, there have been terrible consequences for innocent people in almost every case. We have allowed black markets to be set up, and often strengthened the villains whom we are trying to bring down. The Minister and the Foreign Office know that I am right. The United Nations is not equipped, in terms of information gathering or singleness of purpose, to impose smart or other sanctions. That matter must be addressed soon.

I am not criticising the Minister. I recently received a parliamentary answer saying that representatives from the Foreign Office have met the diamond people in Belgium. That is a welcome step forward. However, we must go much further. We have the most active Africa Minister that I can remember, but he and the Government must get to grips with smart sanctions, especially in relation to diamonds.

3.45 pm

Ms Glenda Jackson (Hampstead and Highgate): I congratulate the International Development Committee on an immensely detailed and thought-provoking report on sanctions. I must admit that, on first reading it, I was somewhat startled, because my perception was that the Committee was arguing forcefully—because of the evidence that had been so tellingly presented to it—that sanctions can create even more humanitarian havoc for the people of the countries on which they are imposed.

I clearly remember, after the apartheid regime in South Africa had finally been dispatched, buying my first bottle of South African wine, and shaking all the way from the shelf, through the checkout, to the exit. For my entire life, it had seemed that anything that had anything to do with South Africa was not to be touched—and was certainly not touched by me. I have always believed in the power of sanctions and have participated in them in so far as it is possible for an individual consumer so to do. I was therefore relieved that paragraph 3 of the Government response to the Committee's report stated:

> The Government believes that the case for sanctions remains compelling.

The paragraph concludes:

> Our sanctions policy will remain under constant review in the light of these and other international consultations and of feedback received from UK civil society.

Having said that, I strongly agree with many aspects of the Committee's report. I could not agree more with the argument in favour of infinitely smarter sanctions that was so forcefully presented by my hon. Friend the Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington)—in terms not only of their implementation, but of those on whom they are imposed and of the information that is provided to us, as consumers, about regimes that warrant their imposition.

The Committee concentrated mainly on the sanctions imposed on Iraq, but it also took evidence on Burma, and I should like to raise the strong case for the introduction of investment and financial sanctions against that country. I shall not take up hon. Members' time by detailing the evidence that is already in the Committee's report, as I am sure that everyone in the Chamber is aware of the appalling nature of the illegal and brutal regime that claims to govern the people of Burma. My argument is supported by those who are working for the introduction of sanctions against Burma and by Aung San Suu Kyi, the only democratic leader of Burma and the only person, in my view, who has any right to speak for that country and its people. She argues forcefully for the introduction of such sanctions against her country.

The situation for the people of Burma is appalling, and it is getting worse every year. The comparative tables for countries around Burma reveal that, in terms of infant mortality, mortality of children under the age of five and maternal mortality, Burma is by the far the worst country in that part of the world. As we know, millions of men, women and children are in forced labour there. Indeed, on 17 June 1999 the International Labour Organisation—an agency of the United Nations, as I am sure all hon. Members are aware—passed an unprecedented resolution that virtually expelled Burma from its ranks. The resolution was overwhelmingly adopted at the ILO annual assembly in Geneva. That came as the result of an inquiry by the ILO's commission, which accused Burma's ruling military of the widespread and systematic use of forced labour. The commission charges that > any person who violates the prohibition of recourse to forced labour under the (ILO) Convention is guilty of an international crime that is also, if committed in a widespread or systematic manner, a crime against humanity.

I do not believe that anyone in the Chamber would argue with that assessment.

The commission has gathered evidence of threats to the life and security and the extrajudicial punishment of those who are unwilling, slow or unable to comply with the demand for forced labour. Such punishments or reprisals range from money demands to physical abuse, beatings, torture, rape and murder. The commission also has evidence that forced labour in Burma is widely performed by women, children and elderly persons, as well as persons unfit to work.

More than 1.5 million people have been internally displaced in Burma. There are more than 1,500 political prisoners. Thousands upon thousands of refugees have had to flee their country. The standard of living for people in Burma, which is naturally rich, is falling year on year as the economy deteriorates. In the main, that is because its so-called Government are interested only in increasing the size of the army, continually expanding their military and buying more weapons. The country has no enemies outside its borders. It is under no threat from anyone. The only threat that the illegal regime can discern is from the people of Burma itself.

The hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells) argued, with regard to Saddam Hussein, that, far from removing the illegal regime, sanctions have assisted in the maintenance of his criminal activities. If one turned that argument on its head, one could say that the non-introduction of sanctions would remove such regimes. That is certainly not the case as far as Burma is concerned. The situation for the people of Burma could not be worse. The majority of the economy is based on rice and the majority of rice farmers must sell their rice to the army and to the Government for far less than it would raise on the open market. Such minimal sums as are spent on what we in this country would regard as a caring social infrastructure must be spent on lauding the regime.

I would argue for the introduction of some form of economic sanctions and for active, energetic proselytising among our indigenous companies and those of our European partners that would regard investment in Burma as profitable. We should argue that any company in the European Union already in Burma should disinvest and not consider future investment there. The United States has already introduced such a system.

To go back to a point that my hon. Friend the Member for Clydebank and Milngavie made, there are difficulties in achieving agreement, not only on obtaining information, but on unity of action in the international community. I congratulate the Government on the work that they have already undertaken in the UK and the EU on attempting to freeze Burmese assets.

I agree with the Chairman of the Committee about the difficulties of introducing a cohesive programme of economic sanctions. They should not only work, but target the leaders of regimes. He said that it would require close co-ordination between every arm of Government, but our Government pride themselves on being joined up, so that should not present a problem. I would argue that the present Government in Burma are criminals; if they were called a mafia, no one would hesitate to consider introducing an international regime to freeze or take away the criminal assets of the perpetrators.

It would not be impossible to introduce such sanctions. They would have a beneficial effect on the people of Burma by shortening the life of that illegal regime. History shows that all such repressive regimes are eventually overturned. We pray that it will happen peacefully, but time is a factor. We, as consumers, are quite prepared not to buy products from companies that we believe are investing in illegal regimes whose practices are regarded as unethical and which we believe will damage not only human beings, but the environment. We have reached a point in the world's history when Governments should be able to harness the energy and commitment of people around the world to play their part as consumers to help to reduce the power of regimes such as that in Burma.

I congratulate the Government on what they and our European partners have done. I urge them to continue to work strongly together. They should tell the UK's financial and business community what they regard as the wrong kind of investment. They should proselytise in the international community, saying that the regime has placed the most appalling burdens on a people who are innately gentle and peace-loving. The regime has destroyed the economy of one of the richest countries in that part of the world, and it continues to stop, harass and imprison its people. It will not allow the only truly democratically elected leader of that country, Aung San Suu Kyi, to play her proper part in taking her people out of the darkness in which they are now enveloped and into the light.

We are talking about a regime that sends small children along jungle paths to ensure that, if land mines have been laid, only the children die and not the soldiers. That is one example of its brutality and its total lack of appreciation of what is essential to achieve civilised relations in the international community.

I thank the Select Committee for its hard work; its report is immensely detailed. I acknowledge that sanctions must be infinitely smarter, but I still hold to the belief that they have a major role to play in ensuring a peaceful change, so that those regimes that are unacceptable to those who believe in democracy, human rights and justice can be removed and overturned.

3.59 pm

Barbara Follett (Stevenage): I welcome the debate. The subject is long overdue for an airing. As other hon. Members and my Select Committee colleagues have covered so much ground so eloquently, I shall confine my remarks to something of which I have personal experience.

Between the early 1960s and the late 1970s I lived under a sanctions regime in South Africa. The Select Committee set itself the task of assessing the impact of sanctions on target regimes and examining proposals to reduce their unintended harm. I should like to consider those two aims in the light of my experience in South Africa. Sanctions are as old as democracy itself. The first recorded incident of sanctions led to the Peloponnesian war in 432 BC, when I believe that Athens imposed sanctions on a neighbouring state, which then called in Sparta. The imposition of sanctions often ends in war. We saw that in the case of sanctions by the United States against Japan in 1938, which some people say led to Pearl harbour. Sanctions have also been imposed against Britain. In 1807, President Jefferson imposed an embargo on trade with European countries because of our actions against United States merchant ships.

Sanctions have been applied to many countries, with some success or no success, but on the whole with qualified success. Most people would say that, even if sanctions are not successful in bringing down a regime, they may change some conditions and make things better for some people. The only case of sanctions that people such as economic historians and economists agree was a success was in relation to South Africa. The sanctions introduced there eventually produced the fall of apartheid, but I should like to talk about the effect of those sanctions.

There is no doubt that, as in the case of Iraq, and as the Select Committee report stresses, the sanctions imposed on South Africa, especially initially, had a disproportionate effect on the poor, just as they are having in Iraq. Sanctions on Iraq have been in place for nine years. They were in place in South Africa for many more years than that, and the apartheid regime was in place for 44 years in total. To be effective, sanctions must be multilateral, and nothing illustrates that better than the case of South Africa. In the early '60s, I was a student at university in South Africa. The apartheid regime had been in place since 1948 and was really beginning to bite. We were forbidden to go to university with members of other races, except under special qualifying conditions. The Group Areas Act was in place. Infant mortality among the black races was 50 per cent. Half of African children born in South Africa in the 1960s died before they reached their first birthday. The infant mortality rate among the whites, who then comprised 4 million of the population compared with 26 million blacks, was lower than the World Health Organisation's best—a statistic of about 19 in 1,000.

In the 1960s, South Africa was suffering under the apartheid regime. The Organisation of African Unity imposed the first trade embargo on South Africa. It was not effective because South Africa's economy was not especially involved with other African economies, and the few border states with which it was involved, such as Zambia, Botswana and Swaziland, were too enmeshed in the South African economy to withdraw effectively.

Sanctions continued until about 1977. In 1961, South Africa withdrew from the Commonwealth because it faced United Nations Security Council resolutions and embargoes by other Commonwealth countries. In the early 1960s, South Africa either withdrew or was expelled from a variety of regional and international organisations such as the Food and Agriculture Organisation, UNESCO and various others. In 1963, the Security Council introduced limited military sanctions and the situation in South Africa grew worse. By 1976, the first strike by school children took place.

Black children were told that, instead of being taught in English—still not their mother tongue—they would be taught in Afrikaans, so they revolted.

That situation created a great deal of publicity about apartheid South Africa. There had already been a substantial amount of publicity, in which my hon. Friend the Minister of State had played his part. However, the real change came in the late 1970s. Until then, I saw almost no difference in South Africa as a result of sanctions, other than that the South African economy became more self-sufficient. There were petrol restrictions, which meant that the number of deaths on South African roads—astronomically high to this day—was reduced.

Overall, the difference for the whites was not great, but the sanctions had an effect on the blacks, who were the oppressed. That is because sanctions were not targeted. However, from the early 1970s, people in South Africa, including me, were calling for targeted sanctions on South Africa's financial institutions—on gold. Nobody heard and nobody did anything, because people did not have the psychological will to impose targeted sanctions. That is a second strong prerequisite. One can have the physical ability to impose sanctions, but one must also have the psychological will.

People in Britain debated sanctions, and I saw and heard those debates. I remember listening to a debate just after I had visited a township where the homes of about 100 people had been flattened by bulldozers. At the time, I wondered how anyone could say that sanctions were wrong. Sanctions were vital, but they needed to be better sanctions. That is what the report should be about.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) said, currently sanctions are not smart. I doubt that they ever will be smart, but they are definitely better than entering into armed conflict. We must ensure that they are imposed effectively and to a time scale. Had sanctions been imposed on South Africa's financial institutions by the United States earlier than 1985, we might have seen some change sooner. That was when the US imposed selective sanctions on computers and computer software used in security operations, on nuclear technology and on financial assistance to United States firms that hoped to invest in South Africa. Those sanctions began to hit the oppressor rather than the oppressed because the Pretoria regime was tied in to western credit facilities and western banking.

When the European Union imposed similar sanctions, the measures really began to bite. Actions by my hon. Friend the Minister of State on the sporting and cultural front had an effect on the psychological ability of people to impose sanctions, which is why my hon. Friend the Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Ms Jackson) found it so difficult to buy South African wine and why so many people boycotted a certain brand of chocolate and milk for many years. To this day, I sometimes feel guilty about eating that particular brand of chocolate, but I remember the difference that those sanctions made. That is why I appeal to my hon. Friend the Minister of State to do everything that he can to ensure that the UN's imposition of sanctions on Iraq is strengthened.

As I have already said, sanctions must be multilateral to be effective, and they must be targeted, as they were in South Africa. We began to target effectively in 1985, but it took until 1992 for the South African economy to reach such a parlous state that apartheid started to be dismantled. How many lives could we have saved, how much suffering could we have stopped, how many generations of people could we have prevented from being tainted in the way that people will be tainted in South Africa by the effects of those 44 years of apartheid, had we had the ability and the psychological will to impose those sanctions, and, most importantly, had we targeted the oppressor and not the oppressed? For far too many people, sanctions are window dressing. People ask politicians, "What are you doing about it?" Politicians hate being asked that question, although they are asked it all the time. The need to do something about a situation is fuelled by the CNN effect—being able to see what is happening in a country. We can say that we are imposing sanctions, but we are not imposing the right sanctions. I hope that the debate will lead to the pursuit of the right sanctions at the right time by the right people, aimed at the oppressor, not the oppressed.

4.10 pm

Ms Tess Kingham (Gloucester): As we have heard from several hon. Members, Angola features prominently in the Select Committee's report on sanctions. It became clear to us during the course of the inquiry that the international sanctions imposed on UNITA in Angola, in an attempt to pressure it into adhering to agreed peace accords, have unconditionally failed the people and the Government of that country, despite the fact that the Angolan Government have done all that the international community has required it to do during its long battle with UNITA.

The background to the situation in Angola makes clear both the need for sanctions and the way in which the sanctions have not been effective. Following Angola's independence in 1975, UNITA unleashed a campaign of terrorism against the Angolan people. Backed by apartheid South Africa and the United States, the campaign's hallmarks were brutal massacres, hostage taking and bomb planting—in short, the whole terrorist repertoire—along with the illegal sale of ivory, which resulted in the slaughter of more than 100,000 elephants.

The countryside was terrorised by many massacres. They included a massacre on 8 February 1986 in Camabatela, Kwanza Norte, in which 107 people were hacked to death with machetes, including the Methodist pastor and four of his children. In 1994, during the occupation of Huambo, UNITA murdered 2,500 people. Many bodies were found down wells. In September 1995, there was a massacre of displaced persons in Celepi centre, where 105 people were slaughtered. The dead included women and children.

There is no doubt that UNITA has devastated Angola. The Minister of State who is here today spoke at the Action for Southern Africa conference last November. I hope that it is in order for me to quote him. He said of Angola:

> I am haunted by my visit there in September 1995. Limbless starving people begging everywhere. Gaunt ghost cities like Huambo, its streets lined with stark concrete edifices, every house office or shop gutted. Thirty-five years of endless war fuelled by arms and ammunition from Europe. Hopelessness and despair etched on the faces of the people, nearly two million of them displaced.

That was the handiwork of Jonas Savimbi, a creation of the west and the leader of UNITA. Despite their military advances against UNITA, the Angolan Government were committed to co-operating with the international community and initiated a lengthy diplomatic process. On the demand of the international community, the Angolan Government held multi-party elections in 1992 with United Nations monitoring. UNITA fared badly. Savimbi rejected the election results and returned to war. He took 75 per cent. of the country; the UN called it the worst war in the world. In 1994, the Lusaka protocol failed and UNITA did not disarm. Under considerable pressure from the west, the Angolan Government made more major concessions, with UNITA representatives being offered high office. Sadly, that was not to be the stepping stone to peace and reconciliation for which everybody had hoped. Rather, Savimbi and UNITA used the breathing space to rebuild militarily and to re-arm. Re-arming took place under the noses of MONUA, the UN observer mission in Angola. Since 1992, the death toll and destruction inflicted by UNITA has hit record heights.

The international community via the UN targeted UNITA with sanctions. The financial sanctions in place since 1998 and the arms embargo sound good in theory. The intent is sound—to strangle UNITA's supply lines and to deprive Savimbi of resources to continue the war. However, the Select Committee discovered that, in reality, the sanctions have been totally ineffective, as the UN has had pathetically few resources to monitor them and no teeth with which to enforce them. The Committee concluded that

The failure to enforce effectively the sanctions regime against UNITA is a scandal that must be urgently addressed by the international community.

Despite the international ban on diamond sales from UNITA areas, UNITA diamonds regularly find their way on to European diamond markets, as my hon. Friend the Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) noted, and, despite the arms embargo, UNITA has found access to large-scale military equipment, as the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells) pointed out.

In his evidence to the Select Committee, Ambassador Fowler, the chairman of the UN sanctions committee on Angola, said:

Savimbi has earned between US$3 and US$4 billion from diamond marketing over the past eight years. That buys an awful lot of military equipment.

Savimbi is reported to be receiving between five and seven flights an evening, carrying vehicles, guns and even tanks. Ambassador Fowler said:

His part of Angola is landlocked. It's not easy to get 50 tonne tanks into that part of Angola—yet he does that. We might usefully concentrate on how he does that.

No sanctions regime could realistically be expected to stop the sale of UNITA diamonds or to stop arms getting into UNITA's hands, particularly with the amount of small arms floating around Africa as a result of past conflicts. However, one would expect that, once the international community had committed itself to sanctions, it would do all in its power to ensure the resources and political will to enforce them. The blatant and gargantuan flouting of sanctions against UNITA makes a mockery of the process.

The Select Committee discovered during its inquiry how little is dedicated to monitoring sanctions within the UN. The UN has no information-gathering capacity of its own. We were told that the Angolan sanctions committee relied on information passed on to it by member states, non-governmental organisations and journalists. Even when information is received, it is unlikely to be followed up, given the derisory resourcing of the sanctions committee. The summary of the meeting of the chairmen of the Security Council sanctions committees in April 1999 noted that some committees were practically non-operational.

Administrative capacity is so low that it would be laughable if the consequences were not so serious. In evidence to the Committee, Ambassador Fowler said:

I have about one third of a person in a UN Secretariat who helps me arrange meetings. My own expenses are paid by the Canadian Government.

That was a shock to the Committee. Once the big, dramatic gesture is made by the international community, we assume that sanctions will be set up, that the UN wheels will go into motion, that resources will be provided, including offices and staff, and that the intelligence gathering networks will swing into action. However, as was said earlier, it is rather like one man and his dog—or perhaps one woman and a dog.

That member states should take the funding of sanctions so lightly is an insult to the millions who have perished directly or indirectly as a result of the Angolan war. It is also an insult to the Angolan Government, who have followed UN advice at each stage in the hope for peace. Until peace comes to Angola, its people will never benefit from development. The infrastructure is shot to pieces, the health and education systems are decimated and extreme poverty is the norm. Angola must sit alongside Rwanda as a country that has been totally let down by the United Nations and its member states.

Despite the odds stacked against him, Ambassador Fowler has done a remarkable job. Many were impressed when he gave evidence to the Committee. He has established two expert panels to investigate the flow of diamond money and weapons to Savimbi. I am pleased to say that the UK Government have taken a leading role in the funding of that operation. I was also delighted yesterday to hear the Foreign Office announce a new initiative on the global certification of diamonds. I hope that the Government will support the campaign to indict Jonas Savimbi as a war criminal. The Select Committee heard that it may spur UN member states to enforce sanctions against UNITA more vigorously if Savimbi is known to be a wanted war criminal.

Due to the work of Ambassador Fowler, there is hope that sanctions against UNITA may be made more effective and may contribute towards the end of the war and the future development of Angola. It is imperative that the overall resourcing, status and effectiveness of the UN sanctions committee is reviewed. The Select Committee recommends establishing a properly staffed and financed UN sanctions unit to receive and coordinate information on financial sanctions and to press Governments to implement them. That is the least that many of those countries should demand from the international community. I hope that the Government will press for that urgently. Smart UN sanctions, properly applied and enforced, could be a useful tool in resolving conflicts. At present, however, member states seem content with making diplomatic gestures—what my hon. Friend the Member for Stevenage (Barbara Follett) called window dressing—rather than making sanctions work. The casualties of that apathy are the people of countries such as Angola.

In the autumn, world leaders will gather for the UN millennium General Assembly. I hope that they will use that opportunity to reaffirm their commitment to meeting the development assistance committee's targets to halve world poverty by 2015. I hope, too, that the opportunity will be grasped to consider some of the more fundamental structural and resourcing changes that are needed to make the UN an effective body in the new millennium. The role of sanctions committees could be raised at that summit, and I hope that the Government will use every opportunity to do so.

Angola celebrates its 25th anniversary of independence later this year. It can never truly reap the benefits of independence while its people suffer poverty and under-development. If sanctions against UNITA work, and Savimbi is destroyed, the people of Angola would have a silver jubilee to celebrate. I hope that the Government, with their renewed commitment to Angola will contribute to making that happen.

Ms Oona King (Bethnal Green and Bow): The debate has seen an inherent tension, almost a contradiction, between two inescapable facts—first, that Saddam Hussein is ultimately responsible for the suffering of the Iraqi people, and, secondly, that the comprehensive economic sanctions imposed by the international community have caused the serious deterioration of the humanitarian and developmental situation in Iraq.

My thoughts at the beginning of the inquiry were informed largely by the former view. After all, we must remember that Saddam Hussein is willing to commit genocide at the drop of a hat. When the Iraqi football team lost a match, he had the footballers taken off the plane and tortured—the English football team might be relieved that we do not employ the same tactics. Saddam Hussein is also intent on manufacturing weapons of mass destruction. There is incontrovertible evidence that that is the case, and the international community and the Government have a responsibility to take action.

As the Select Committee found, however, although sanctions are a low-cost alternative to war, they are all too often as damaging in humanitarian and developmental terms as armed conflict. My hon. Friend the Member for Cynon Valley (Ann Clwyd) gave a devastating critique of Saddam's regime. She listed in detail the grotesque human rights abuses committed by Hussein. He, his army and his death squads have been responsible for the deaths of tens of thousands of innocent people—20,000, 30,000, 50,000, even 100,000, who knows?

However, as the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells) pointed out, UNICEF estimates that sanctions have caused the death of 500,000 children. That is another contradiction. As it might be controversial, I shall quote the report. It states:

> UNICEF estimated that, if the substantial reductions in child mortality achieved throughout Iraq in the 1980s had continued into the 1990s, there would have been half a million fewer deaths under five in the country as a whole in the eight year period from 1991 to 1998.

Whether or not those figures are exact, two facts remain—first, that sanctions have failed to dislodge Saddam Hussein, and, secondly, that sanctions have hurt the ordinary people of Iraq, particularly children, and that those people have been hurt more than the ruling elite. That is why the Committee concluded that

> If sanctions are to be retained as a credible instrument of foreign policy, they must increasingly seek to target the assets of specific groups or individuals responsible for breaches of international law...The Committee recommends that the United Kingdom argue and gather support for the establishment of a properly staffed and financed sanctions unit within the United Nations to receive and coordinate information on the enforcement of financial sanctions.

I hope that the Minister will respond to that point.

Everybody knows that ordinary Iraqis are suffering. British people know that. One of my constituents, Andrea Needham, travelled to Iraq in 1998 carrying medicines to a children's hospital. Andrea and I have disagreed. I took a view fundamentally different from hers, and more or less suggested that the suffering of the people of Iraqi people must be laid at the door of Saddam Hussein. None the less, I agreed with her comments when she wrote to me and said:

> even if you believe that the responsibility for the suffering in Iraq lies with Saddam Hussein, the UN Security Council remains accountable to human rights principles regardless of the conduct of the Iraqi government. Intransigence by a government does not give the Security Council the right to punish that country's citizens. Human rights are based on the inherent dignity and worth of every human being, and are owed directly to individuals. They are not forfeited because of a government's alleged misconduct, especially when—as in the case of Iraq—citizens have no voice in the decisions of the government.

Many of my colleagues have argued convincingly that, although we need a sanctions regime in Iraq to deal with the behaviour of Saddam Hussein, we must change the policy that we have at the moment. I will not rehearse those arguments because we have heard them in full. A sanction that is not applied currently but which should be applied is that of the International Criminal Court. We have touched on that subject, but it is important to recognise that individual criminal liability already exists.

We must consider the UK record. We have had no prosecutions under the Geneva conventions, or under the United Nations convention against torture. We have had only one prosecution under the post-war treaties, and that was under the War Crimes Act 1991 and specifically concerned crimes in Belarus during the second world war. However, if we wanted to take responsibility on certain matters, we could. We could follow the Swiss example, for instance. The Swiss have indicted war criminals living in Switzerland. We have war criminals in Britain. We are talking in general about sanctions, but if we allow the culture of impunity to continue, we will do nothing in the long term to discourage criminals such as Saddam Hussein.

[Ms Oona King]

There have been criticisms regarding delays affecting humanitarian goods going to Iraq. Richardson Supply Company Ltd., in my constituency, was requested by the World Food Programme to supply computers for its project in Iraq. The managing director, Justin McArdle, explained:

> We received an order for...computers and software...Accompanying the order were United Nations Security Council Authorisation letters acknowledging notification of the intention...We subsequently sent copies of the purchase order and the UN letters of authorisation to the DTI Sanctions Unit on 3rd April 1998 to support our request for an export licence...We finally received the export licence...on 9th July 1998...The World Food Programme have indicated to us that they are considering abandoning the United Kingdom as a source for computer products because of the inexplicable delay which they have experienced in receiving this order...An element of common sense would have allowed these humanitarian supplies to be despatched with the minimum of delay—the World Food Programme is a United Nations agency.

The problem is that there has been a significant absence of common sense in the sanctions debate. That point was brought back to me most clearly to me when I visited Burundi, where regional sanctions had been imposed. The United Kingdom Government were not involved with the imposition of those regional sanctions, but we had imposed our own form of sanctions to the extent that we were involved in providing humanitarian assistance but not developmental assistance.

When I talk about a lack of common sense, I am referring, for example, to young children being taken to the feeding centre funded by our Government, leaving when they reached a certain body weight to return to their village, only to return within a month or two because the Government have stopped our programmes to provide clean water—that was termed development assistance, not humanitarian assistance—they have fallen sick; our money again pays to get them up to a certain weight. That does no one any good, nor does it help us to achieve our aims.

The British Government have been strident in their efforts to seek out abusers of human rights, and to adopt an ethical foreign policy, for which we have received little thanks, I might add. I support the Foreign Office fully when it says that it is better to try to take an ethical approach than not to make the effort in the first place.

The British Government should consider seriously how to improve the targeting of sanctions, which has been argued for cogently today. For example, the current sanctions regime against Iraq is not working. It is not achieving our goals and it is harming the lives of ordinary Iraqis. I hope that the Minister will be able to take the Committee's inquiry into account. It was a long inquiry, and at its outset I was entirely in agreement with those who argued that we must maintain the present sanctions regime, and that the problems were entirely Saddam Hussein's fault. That last point is, of course, true. If he wanted to divert resources towards feeding his people, he could. However, he does not want to. The Select Committee report states:

4.33 pm

Mr. Nigel Jones (Cheltenham): This has been a very good debate so far, and I congratulate the Select Committee, of which I have fairly recently become a member, on producing such a readable and detailed report. It addresses some very serious issues. I should also like to thank the Minister for the useful Government response.

I want to comment mainly on the sections of the report that concern Iraq. I want also to thank the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Ann Clwyd) for taking me back a decade or more to the time when I worked in Iraq for five months and was able to experience Saddam Hussein's regime at first hand. I can confirm many of the points that she made. For example, the stories about deserters being rounded up and shot, and their families being called in and given the bodies while being charged for the bullets, were circulating when I was in Iraq in 1987 and 1988.

I should explain that I was in Iraq to put in a computer for the university, and agreed to go for a year. On the second day, a military wagon pulled up outside the university and a major got out. I was asked if I wanted to see the Ministry of Defence computers. I agreed—I do not know what would have happened if I had said no—and we went to six different computer sites, all of which had British equipment. There was an arms embargo at the time because of Iraq's war against Iran and I do not know how the equipment got through to the Iraqi Ministry of Defence. During the conflict over the invasion of Kuwait, I was able to identify on television some of the buildings being obliterated by allied bombers. I had been in some of those buildings.

The Saddam Hussein regime is very harsh and has no regard for human rights. A large notice on the board at work stated that under no circumstances should the Government be criticised in any way because it would lead to an automatic life sentence. Everyone in this country would have been locked up had that rule applied under the previous Government.

I was supposed to remain in Iraq for a year, but stayed for only five months, having got the job done super quick, and I can honestly say that that was the worst five months of my life. I have a firm line on sanctions, which is that we need to continue them, although we certainly need to make them smarter. It is 10 years since the tanks rolled across the border into Kuwait. Saddam Hussein is still in power, but most of the western leaders who opposed him are not. The right hon. Member for Huntingdon (Mr. Major) is still a Member of the House but is no longer Prime Minister and President Bush is no longer President of the United States. Saddam Hussein has become the albatross around the neck of the international community. He is a constant reminder of defiance in the face of, initially, overwhelming force and, later, unending economic and diplomatic pressure. He does not need to confront irritating elections, but he cannot slip into retirement. The only alternative for him and his cohorts in the Ba'ath party, other than remaining in power, is oblivion. That is a basic fact of Iraqi political life and the starting point for all his strategic consultations. Such is the bluntness of the tools available to the international community—the United Nations and allied powers—that Iraq's cheat and retreat strategy is remarkably successful in sustaining the Ba'ath party and transferring the blame for the suffering of its people on to the international community and particularly the USA.

Saddam has been successful in slowly defusing the alliance against him. Only Britain and the United States now stand prepared to oppose Iraq militarily. Other partners, both in Europe and the middle east, although concurring with the necessity to contain Iraq, are not prepared to sustain the united front that ejected Iraqi troops from Kuwait.

Russia is owed approximately $5 billion and is keen to see the Iraqi regime in a position to begin repayment. Ankara is also owed a considerable sum. There has been informed speculation that the interests of French oil companies have been instrumental in France's reticence to contribute to the maintenance of the no-fly zones and its stance in the Security Council. The computers that I saw in Iraq's Ministry of Defence 12 years ago were obtained with loans from the Export Credits Guarantee Department, which have not been repaid. The British taxpayer paid for the computers in Saddam Hussein's military installations.

Kofi Annan is worried that Saddam is winning the propaganda war and stated:

> the humanitarian situation in Iraq poses a serious moral dilemma for the Organisation. The United Nations has always been on the side of the vulnerable and the weak, and has always sought to relieve suffering, yet here we are accused of causing suffering to an entire population. We are in danger of losing the argument, or the propaganda war—if we haven't lost it already—about who is responsible for this situation in Iraq—President Saddam Hussein or the United Nations.

Clearly, it is President Saddam Hussein. The sanctions are necessary to stop him building up his arsenal. He has a huge number of weapons. I have a list that shows his potential for causing significant damage in the region. It says that with sufficient black market uranium or plutonium, Iraq could fabricate a nuclear weapon within one year. Iraq does not yet have that uranium or plutonium, but, if we lift sanctions, those items will be first on the shopping list. Iraq could produce weapons-grade fissile material within several years.

Iraq retains stockpiles of chemical weapon munitions, including special chemical-biological al-Hussein ballistic missile warheads. I was in Iraq when it proudly announced that it had made its own missile—the al-Hussein—which was a variation of an imported missile. Iraq has 2,000 aerial bombs, between 15,000 and 20,000 rockets and 15,000 artillery shells. It has biological weapons, which it has used. It has components for dozens of Scud B and al-Hussein missiles, as well as indigenously produced scud missile engines. It has cruise missile equivalents and Exocets—I wonder where they came from—and delivery systems that include approximately 300 fixed-wing aircraft. There is still a lot of stuff, and, if we lift the sanctions, Saddam will build up his arsenal and begin the development of nuclear weapons with which to threaten his neighbours and others.

We have heard that the sanctions are having a devastating effect on the people of Iraq. It is estimated that, as a result of the war and sanctions, Iraq's gross domestic product fell by nearly two thirds in 1991, because of an 85 per cent. decline in oil production. Per capita income fell from $3,416 a year to $1,500 in 1991, and has since decreased to less than $1,036. In 1995, it was estimated to be as low as $450. Most of the Iraqi people are being asked to live on about $4 a day. Meanwhile, average shop prices for essential commodities stand at 850 times the level in July 1990. When I visited Iraq, I saw how the shelves in supermarkets would be stacked with just one product. One week, it was corn oil, so everyone bought that; the following week, the corn oil was gone, but there were toilet rolls—that was a good week. Even then, during the Iran-Iraq war, there was little in the shops. Prices have since gone up, and the people face shortages. The Government's response tells us that > this means a potential $10 billion a year is available for the humanitarian programme.

> Iraq's oil revenues are back to—if not above—their peak historical level of around $15 billion per annum, seen only briefly in 1980—

We must get the message to the people of Iraq that it is Saddam Hussein who is preventing $10 billion of humanitarian assistance from coming into the country.

The hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) said that we should get away from the "something must be done" syndrome and identify what can be done. There are two strategies. One is to increase international pressure, and the other is to sweeten the current sanctions. The key is to co-opt Russia. Russia's President Putin is vital to putting pressure on Saddam, whether through a visit or a Russo-Iraqi conference. That might break the deadlock, and our Government should try to persuade President Putin to play that important role. Iraq owes Russia £5 billion for equipment purchased, including weapons and fighter aircraft, so it is in the president's interest to get Iraq back into the international community.

We need to ease the pain that sanctions against Iraq are indirectly inflicting on neighbouring countries, particularly Jordan, Turkey and Russia. That should be considered to prevent unilateral moves to break the UN embargo. Various countries, particularly Turkey, are breaking the sanctions. On a visit to Bahrain a couple of years ago, I boarded HMS Cumberland, which was on sanctions duty. Every night, it left the Shatt al-Arab waterway to try to stop Saddam Hussein's oil tankers from disappearing into the night with illegal shipments of oil. That sanctions duty continues to be fulfilled by other vessels.

We must continue to repair relations with Iran. Notwithstanding legitimate human rights concerns and Iran's continuing support of terrorism, the balance of power in the middle east requires that Iraq be particularly sensitive to Iranian diplomacy. A non-rogue Iran would boost the position of the majority Shi'ite population and undermine the Ba'athist regime.

Peace in the middle east is also very important. I visited Israel just two weeks ago, and met President Weizman, who is retiring shortly. I also met Shimon Peres, who said that peace in the middle east must be sorted out between Israel, Syria and the other countries, before one of them develops nuclear weapons. He did not mention Iraq, but I think that he had Iraq in mind. Most countries in the middle east have accepted that Israel has a right to exist, but I wish that something could be done about the Palestinian settlements. I visited one settlement, and the conditions were pretty squalid. The peace issue must be resolved, so that Saddam Hussein will know that he is taking on not just Israel but other countries in the region.

We also need to win the propaganda war. Were Saddam to comply with the current Security Council resolution, sanctions could be lifted in 120 days. There should be a 120-days campaign in Jordan and the Gulf states, so that people in the region can start to put pressure on Saddam.

We must also reform the United Nations. The inspection regimes are too western oriented, and there should be more Arabs on the inspection bodies to help ensure Iraqi compliance. That would sweeten the implementation of UN security resolution 1284, and might encourage Saddam to realise that there is another purpose to it. Otherwise, we are engaged in mere containment. If containment were not damaging the population of Iraq, we could live with it, but, as the figures have shown, the number of deaths, particularly among children, is increasing. We must persuade the United Nations to review the sanctions and to make them smarter, and to move in the direction that I have outlined.

4.50 pm

Mr. Richard Spring (West Suffolk): I wholeheartedly welcome the debate and praise the Select Committee, under the distinguished chairmanship of my hon. Friend the Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells), on its report.

The report has raised a number of important issues about the effectiveness of sanctions and their impact on the populations affected by them. We have heard some excellent speeches this afternoon on matters ranging from what happened in South Africa in the past to the current situation in Angola, Burma, Sierra Leone and, most pertinently, in Iraq. The speeches have been comprehensive and worthwhile. On a personal note, I am delighted to see the hon. Member for Cheltenham (Mr. Jones) in his place.

The key question is how best sanctions can be targeted against countries and particularly against individual leaders without harming civilian members of the population. That is dealt with comprehensively in the Committee's report. We now look to the Government to take on board the Committee's conclusions, so that innocent civilian populations do not bear the brunt of sanctions and that the ruling elite of the country that is subject to the sanctions is effectively punished. The Committee's discussion of smart sanctions is a positive way forward and should be looked at carefully.

I was pleased to see from the Government's response that they share the Committee's belief that the most careful consideration must be given to the humanitarian impact of sanctions. I share that belief. The Committee suggested that sanctions, if not properly implemented, may have an unforeseen humanitarian impact on a country's population. The Committee concluded that, based on clear evidence, the impact of sanctions may fall disproportionately on certain vulnerable groups in society such as women, children, those with disabilities, and refugee groups.

The UN Security Council has invoked chapter VII of the UN charter in 15 cases to date with sanctions having been lifted in four of those cases and suspended in one. The Committee looked at such cases in detail and it has highlighted a vacuum in international relations between military intervention on one hand and diplomacy on the other. If that vacuum can be filled through effective and targeted use of sanctions, it will mean not only that innocent populations suffer less, but also that the world community will have greater confidence in the use of sanctions.

The report details two strands in the concept of smarter sanctions: to improve their efficacy by targeting those in power and those who support them, and to reduce their humanitarian impact on civilian populations. That is to be welcomed. The Committee concludes that some sanctions implemented in the past may in fact have had a greater impact on the innocent population than on the leadership of that country. That is important. In evidence to the Select Committee, the Government seem to have accepted that, in their review of sanctions policy, there is a need to move away from the so-called blunderbuss approach, which hits the whole population with sanctions rather than targets the regime specifically. We support that stance.

One form of smarter sanctions that the Committee explored was so-called private sanctions targeted specifically on individuals of the ruling elite rather than on the population as a whole. The Committee's report at paragraph 64 states:

> Witnesses have suggested that targeted financial sanctions might offer significant potential to exert pressure on the political elite of a target country, for example, by freezing their assets. However, during the discussions at Interlaken 2, the chairman, Ambassador Rolf Jeker stated in his report that it was > indicated that much of the conceptual, technical and practical elements required to bring targeted financial sanctions into effect are available and could be effected whenever the Security Council decides to impose targeted financial sanctions.

I agree with the ambassador's conclusions at the end of the Interlaken seminar that:

> if you shoot at a big target, your weapon does not need to be very accurate—it can be a scatter gun like the comprehensive sanctions applied in the past. If the target is small, the weapon must be very accurate.

Indeed, even smarter sanctions targeted against individuals in the ruling elite of a sanctioned country need careful and considered implementation if the weapon of private sanctions is not to fire like a scattergun.

However, the Committee was right to note in its report that the potential of private financial sanctions remains untested. We must therefore proceed with caution. The UN has rarely mandated the use of financial sanctions against individual members of a transgressor state.

States are free to impose whatever sanctions they wish, so long as they do not conflict with other obligations. Switzerland is often singled out as an example, because it is not a member of the United Nations and is therefore not subject to UN Security Council resolutions. However, it voluntarily introduces its own legislation to track UN legislation. That is necessary to ensure that, when sanctions are implemented, they have the full backing of all those who will enforce them. That will be all the more necessary in future, as some of the concepts of smarter sanctions detailed in the Committee's report remain, as yet, untested.

Some have said that unilateral economic sanctions sometimes prove counterproductive, because they undermine a target country's emerging middle classes, not its political leaders. Many countries, such as Chile, South Korea, Taiwan and Thailand, have seen that the development of a large, financially secure middle class is necessary before authoritarian Governments can give way to democracy.

The report states that withdrawal of development assistance can sometimes have a greater impact than traditional sanctions. The Government seem unsure of their policy on that subject, and I hope that the Minister of State will provide some clarification. For example, the Government refused to stop Government-to-Government aid to Zimbabwe, but seriously cut aid to Ethiopia, although both countries were undergoing a period of considerable instability and tension. Will the Minister of State clarify the criteria that the Government use when deciding to suspend Government-to-Government aid? Does he agree that, instead of withdrawing aid altogether, more aid should be provided through non-governmental organisations?

The Committee was right to address the enforcement of sanctions, especially with regard to arms embargoes. Arms embargoes are becoming widely used by the Security Council, so we must ensure that, where sanctions are imposed, they are effectively implemented. The Committee underlined the need to tighten controls on arms embargoes. What do the Government plan to do in response to that?

Sanctions are effective only if they are properly monitored. I share the Committee's concerns that the quality of reporting to sanctions committees remains low. The report rightly concludes that the United Kingdom must take a lead by putting in place a system that can target and monitor sanctions effectively. The current approach is somewhat casual. That is not helped by the Government's failure to allow NGOs formally to input evidence on the review of sanctions. Surely, NGO reports are vital. What do the Government intend to do to ensure that NGOs are formally consulted on Government approaches and attitudes to sanctions?

The failure of the Security Council's sanctions committees in effecting sanctions against sanctioned countries must be addressed to end the passive nature of monitoring and enforcement. The principle of smart sanctions used as a tool against oppressive regimes will be redundant unless there is effective supervision of their execution against sanctioned countries. The use of sanctions against President Mugabe stopped the Land Rover project and implemented arms embargoes. Under what circumstances will they be lifted, and do the Government have any plans to do so?

We must recognise where the blame for suffering in countries such as Iraq really lies. We were all moved by hon. Members' speeches on Iraq. Its people face an horrific situation. Last Friday, The Independent carried a report from Hans Blix, chairman of the new UN commission for inspecting arms in Iraq, in which he warned that Baghdad might block his inspections because of its "fury" over sanctions. Indeed, a former UN weapons inspector, Carl Ritter, has called for economic sanctions against Iraq to be lifted.

Saddam Hussein has chosen not to use the oil for food arrangements to provide adequate health care and social services for his citizens. He has instead chosen to purchase weapons. The hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Ann Clwyd) movingly pointed out the comment made by Jeremy Carver, the partner and head of international law at Clifford Chance, that

> It is not the imposition or maintenance of international sanctions, but the policies of the Iraqi Government which are the primary cause of this suffering.

I absolutely believe that to be true.

The use of smart sanctions outlined in the report, if properly targeted against the ruling elites of sanctioned countries, can help to ensure that in future the guilty will ultimately be punished and that the innocent populations of those countries do not suffer as they have so often. That is a worthy objective. The Committee's findings in this excellent report on the future of sanctions are indeed to be supported.

5 pm

The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (Mr. Peter Hain): I agree with the hon. Member for West Suffolk (Mr. Spring) that the International Development Committee's report on sanctions provides a valuable and thought-provoking contribution to the debate, which the Government are taking very seriously. Having considered it, we are seeking to modify and improve our approach.

I must, however, disagree with the Committee's Chairman, the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells), who said that sanctions had never been effective in any case in which they had been applied. His fellow Committee member, my hon. Friend the Member for Stevenage (Barbara Follett), refuted that statement by speaking from her own experience of the conclusive effect of sanctions on bringing down apartheid. I also agree with her that, if those sanctions had been more rigorously applied earlier and had been better targeted, apartheid might have been brought down even earlier.

Sanctions are the only coercive measure available to us, other than the use of force, to respond to threats to international peace and security as provided for under the United Nations charter. Over the past decade, the UN Security Council and the European Union have made increasing use of sanctions. When Britain sees a pressing need for sanctions to exert pressure on a rogue regime, but a Security Council resolution is not achievable, we shall press for European Union action, as was the case most recently over Burma.

I agree with all the arguments put forward by my hon. Friend the Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Ms Jackson) on the atrocious denial of human rights and democracy in Burma. In response to the severe and systematic violation of human rights and continuing repression in that country, the United Kingdom persuaded its partners in Europe to adopt, on 16 April, a common position strengthening the existing sanctions against Burma by the addition of an asset freeze targeted at key figures in the leadership and military and a ban on the export of equipment that might be used for internal repression. I think that that answers many of the points that my hon. Friend raised.

[Mr. Peter Hain]

With experience, we have become better able to design sanctions regimes to have the maximum impact on leadership elites and/or their military capability while minimising their impact on ordinary people. Britain has played a leading role in shaping the emerging international consensus in favour of smarter sanctions, to which the Committee has rightly directed its attention, and about which my hon. Friends the Members for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) and for Stevenage, among others, spoke.

At the request of the Department for International Development, the Overseas Development Institute hosted an international symposium in December 1998 on smarter sanctions. Since then, we have played an active part in seminars sponsored by the Swiss Government on developing targeted financial sanctions, and by the German Government on arms embargoes and travel sanctions. In the United Nations Security Council, we check the fine print of draft sanctions resolutions—as we are doing at present in relation to Sierra Leone—to ensure that the findings of those seminars are fully taken into account.

We strongly supported the recent establishment of a Security Council working group to develop recommendations on improving the effectiveness of UN sanctions. The answer to the question raised by the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford on that issue is yes, the working group has already been established and all members of the Security Council belong to it. The secretariat is providing administrative support, and Britain is devoting resources to ensure that the working group develops practical recommendations that will improve the effectiveness of United Nations sanctions.

We shall feed into that group the conclusions of the recent Foreign Office and Department for International Development mission to the United Nations, which examined ways to strengthen the UN secretariat's capacity to support the Security Council and the sanctions committee in respect of sanctions. I agree with my hon. Friend the Member for Clydebank and Milngavie and others—

Mr. Worthington: My constituency is difficult to pronounce. Milngavie is pronounced "mullguy".

Madam Deputy Speaker (Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody): The hon. Gentleman has borne it very well—we had already noticed.

Mr. Hain: I represent one of the Welsh constituencies, some of which hon. Members have even more difficulty pronouncing, so I plead guilty.

The Committee invited the Government to make a statement on our sanctions policy, the core of which can be summarised simply. Sanctions are most effective when they are multilateral, as my hon. Friend the Member for Stevenage noted. They are not intended to be punitive, and they should be imposed to achieve specified objectives. The criteria for lifting sanctions should be made clear from the outset, and they should not be lifted until the target has complied with the criteria. As far as is possible, sanctions should be targeted to hit leadership elites and impact minimally on ordinary people. They should be tailored to circumstances, and there should be effective implementation, enforcement and monitoring arrangements. Humanitarian exemptions and the mechanisms for their effective implementation should be built into sanctions regimes, as appropriate, from the outset.

That is the ideal for which we will strive. Multilateral sanctions are, of necessity, the result of a negotiation process. We are doing our utmost to enhance existing procedures for implementing sanctions, often in the face of considerable opposition from member states in the United Nations. As far as I know, Britain is the only country in the world that has established a dedicated sanctions unit that co-ordinates all aspects of Government sanctions policy and administration. We have ensured that the lessons learned from one sanctions regime are taken into account when designing others.

The Committee noted the potential of financial sanctions, as a form of smarter sanctions, to target leadership elites. The UK currently implements UN financial sanctions in relation to the Taliban, Angola's UNITA rebel army and Iraq. We also implement EU sanctions in relation to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and Burma. In answer to the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford, British banks and building societies hold more than $850 million in frozen funds that were identified as belonging to the targets of UN or EU sanctions.

We take our international obligation to implement financial sanctions seriously, and go to considerable lengths to ensure that they are implemented effectively. The Bank of England, which acts as an agent for the Treasury in the administration of financial sanctions, has a dedicated unit—the sanctions emergency unit—that works solely on that task. We want financial sanctions to become a more effective tool for putting pressure on international pariahs, such as UNITA's Jonas Savimbi.

Barbara Follett: With regard to Angola, will my hon. Friend do all that he can to ensure that other countries take their obligations as seriously as Britain does? For example, Burkina Faso, Liberia, Zambia and Rwanda are supplying the UNITA regime, as are business men such as Mr. Victor Bout, whose planes are transporting supplies to UNITA in Angola.

Mr. Hain: My hon. Friend is absolutely right. Victor Bout is the main sanctions-buster in respect of Angola and Sierra Leone. Together with our agencies, the Government are taking what action we can to try to ensure that that activity stops. She is also right to say that he and others use light planes to transport supplies from Kigali airport, Burkina Faso, Monrovia and other places to airstrips in Angola that are controlled by UNITA. It is imperative that the Governments of all the countries to which she referred take the maximum possible action to stop the flights. After all, they are African countries, and a fellow African state is being destroyed and its people devastated by the continuing civil war.

Effective enforcement depends on agencies proactively seeking information on targets and sharing it with members of the international community. To that end, British sanctions experts liaise regularly with experts in other countries. International meetings at which sanctions-related issues are discussed are held regularly, and information is exchanged between the United Kingdom and other United Nations and European Union member states.

The hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford made a strong case on Iraq, but it was brilliantly answered by my hon. Friend the Member for Cynon Valley (Ann Clwyd) with the most detailed and devastating indictment of Saddam Hussein's murderous activity and repression of his people. We have made a serious difference to the lives of the Iraqi people. United Nations resolution 1284, which we drove through the Security Council in seven to eight months of painstaking negotiation, could create a totally new situation in Iraq and is beginning to do so. We should urge Iraq to comply with that resolution, rather than continue to identify the problems associated with the past regime, which we have sought to reform with the new resolution.

The new resolution provides for the early suspension of sanctions: it was designed to do so. Britain took the lead in achieving that. As my hon. Friend the Member for Cynon Valley said, there is a simple answer to those who want the sanctions on Iraq lifted or suspended—they should back resolution 1284. That is what I say to the Chairman of the Committee. Even though Baghdad has not accepted it, the resolution has already raised the ceiling on Iraqi oil exports. An estimated $10 billion will be available for the humanitarian programme this year. That is a huge amount, and it will make a real difference to the people of Iraq.

My hon. Friend the Member for Bethnal Green and Bow (Ms King) quoted UNICEF statistics. Other UNICEF statistics show that child mortality rates in northern Iraq—where Saddam Hussein's writ does not run, but where exactly the same sanctions apply—are lower than they were before sanctions were applied. We ought to recognise that comparison with northern Iraq.

If the Iraqi people continue to suffer, it will be clearer than ever that it is Saddam Hussein who is denying his people food and medicine. He wants to play on our emotions with their undoubted suffering in the hope of weakening our resolve, while he rebuilds weapons of mass destruction with which to threaten the region. The hon. Member for Cheltenham (Mr. Jones) expertly described that scenario.

We continue to refine and streamline procedures at the United Nations to ensure that more humanitarian contracts are approved and approved more quickly. On our initiative, the sanctions committee has agreed lists of foodstuffs, medical, agricultural and educational goods and spare parts for the oil industry that no longer need to be referred to the committee, only notified to the United Nations secretariat. Already, contracts worth almost $1 billion have been processed through that accelerated procedure. That makes a real difference.

European Union sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia were put in place because Milosevic was responsible for the most brutal campaign of terror in Kosovo. He continues to wage a campaign of repression against his own people. We shall continue to target sanctions as closely as possible on that regime and its supporters and we shall monitor the situation for any adverse humanitarian impact.

The plight of the Angolan people was eloquently described by my hon. Friend the Member for Gloucester (Ms Kingham)—perhaps no more eloquently than when she quoted me. The United Kingdom has put extra resources and diplomatic energy into turning the spotlight on violations of UN sanctions against UNITA.

On a personal note, when I became Minister of State 11 months ago, I was amazed at how little active energy was put into using the enormous intelligence in sanctions-busting to put pressure on Jonas Savimbi's UNITA group. We are now beginning to do that, and we are calling on others to do the same. We are particularly alert to suggestions of sanction busting by UK nationals or from UK territory. We shall immediately inform the appropriate authorities of such reports. The sanctions in place include arms and fuel embargoes, a targeted asset freeze, the closure of UNITA's overseas offices, a travel ban on senior UNITA officials, restrictions on the sale of mining equipment and a ban on the import of uncertificated Angolan diamonds. All those measures have been carefully calculated to put pressure on UNITA and undermine its ability to continue fighting without harming ordinary Angolans. In that sense, they are a good example of smarter sanctions.

Last year, the Security Council established an expert panel to investigate reports of sanctions violations and to make recommendations on how to improve the implementation of sanctions. I accept many of the points that my hon. Friend the Member for Clydebank and Milngavie made about it being a somewhat toothless operation. Nevertheless, by UN standards it is and has been an effective body. As the members of the Committee have said, Ambassador Fowler deserves considerable praise for the way in which he drove it through against many obstacles. We strongly supported the panel's efforts and contributed $200,000 to fund its work.

In resolution 1295 of 18 April, the Security Council formally welcomed the panel's report, which contained valuable information on sanctions busting. In response to the panel's recommendation, the council requested the Secretary-General to establish a monitoring mechanism, which I shall describe. Five experts will collect additional relevant information and investigate allegations. We hope that a UK national will be appointed. We shall give the monitors every support in that important task. I look to the new monitoring mechanism to take forward the pioneering work of the expert panel. It is essential that international sanctions should be made more effective.

I respond next to the well expressed points made by my hon. Friends the Members for Bethnal Green and Bow and for Clydebank and Milngavie. Enforcement of UN sanctions is the responsibility of United Nations member states, not the UN itself. The United States of America, Russia and other countries would strongly resist giving the UN greater investigative powers. That is one of the problems with which we are grappling, and we need to deal with that as best we can.

[Mr. Hain]

On the question of diamonds, my hon. Friend the Member for Clydebank and Milngavie mentioned Liberia. I agree that the revolutionary united front would not be able to carry out its war of mutilation against the people of Sierra Leone were it not for the diamonds that it smuggles across the border to Liberia. Indeed, they do not need to be smuggled; one can simply walk across the border. Liberia must account for its role in fuelling that bloody war. A United Nations Security Council resolution to enforce diamond sanctions on Sierra Leone will, I hope, be agreed shortly—perhaps in days—mainly as a result of British pressure. I think that Liberia will have to be included in the scope of the measure as well.

I have given special priority to the enforcement of sanctions against traders in blood diamonds from Angola, Sierra Leone and the Congo. The Government continue to play a leading role in international efforts to tackle the problem. We want to ensure that when people buy a diamond from a jeweller's shop they will know when they put it on the finger of their loved one that they are not pledging a diamond that has cut off the finger of a child in Sierra Leone or Angola. That message must go out to people buying diamonds in jewellery shops across the world.

Yesterday, I hosted a ground-breaking meeting of leading diamond importing and marketing countries to discuss the way forward: never before had representatives of Belgium, India, Israel, the United States and the international diamond industry, with Canadians and Russians also attending, gathered to discuss the problem. I called on importing and marketing states to continue to intensify their efforts to deny blood diamonds access to their markets, stressing the urgency of denying UNITA, the RUF in Sierra Leone and groups in the Democratic Republic of Congo the means to wage the vicious wars in which so many innocent lives are being lost. I also emphasised the need to improve the transparency of the international diamond trade to maintain consumer confidence and to protect the legitimate trade on which so many livelihoods depend. Clean diamond producers in countries such as Botswana, Namibia and South Africa must be protected. It is in their interests and those of the whole industry to block the trade in blood diamonds.

Yesterday's meeting agreed several specific steps that could be taken straight away to help. They included, most importantly, working with others to explore the feasibility of a global certification scheme for rough diamonds. I strongly support that proposal, and hope that other Governments, especially in southern Africa, will join us in pressing for it. We will encourage diamond banks, insurance companies and shipping companies with links to the diamond industry to require customers to sign a declaration that they will not trade in conflict diamonds. The trade bodies of Antwerp and Tel Aviv have already, I am glad to say, agreed to suspend or to expel members found trading in conflict diamonds. We will call on those trade bodies and others internationally and nationally to encourage their members to make it clear that no diamonds are feeding conflicts in any of their diamond parcels.

The meeting also agreed important steps for sharing expertise to help to combat illegal trafficking. They included offers of training, including technical assistance, to diamond authorities in producer countries and co-operation between national customs authorities and the industry to identify practical measures to improve the availability of diamond identification expertise.

We also want to ensure that hard currency is involved in diamond trades. Sanctions busters such as Victor Bout fly into UNITA territory with a plane full of arms and take off with bags of diamonds not paid for in hard currency. We want the international diamond regime to insist on proper transactions being properly accounted for and receipted and made in hard currency or being conducted using properly certificated financial exchange, without which diamonds would not be allowed to enter the international trading loop. That would take us a big step forward. We want to help to crack down on the illicit diamond trade and to restore consumer confidence in the legitimate diamond industry.

I will respond to a few of the points made by the hon. Member for West Suffolk. He compared Ethiopia with Zimbabwe. There was a war in Ethiopia—it is still going on to some extent—and we could not increase our aid in items that could have been diverted easily into maintaining that war, although we continued to supply food aid because of the famine. Zimbabwe's situation was different. We have imposed an arms embargo on Zimbabwe and have restricted aid to a minimal level to deal with severe problems, such as AIDS and anti-poverty measures.

I do not think that the hon. Gentleman would want us to cut aid to tackle the crisis of AIDS in Zimbabwe, where one in four citizens are infected. We will not increase aid to Zimbabwe by an extra £36 million—we have promised that we could do so to deal with problem of land reform—unless its policies change. The President of Zimbabwe has imposed a sort of negative sanctions regime on himself by adopting policies that do not allow countries such as Britain to provide the support that we want to provide. We agree that NGOs play a vital role in the provision of development aid and assistance. The Secretary of State for International Development has a clear policy on that. We consult NGOs on sanctions policy, as well as on wider policies. Indeed, there has never been a more open-door policy towards NGOs than the one pursued by the present Government.

Controls on arms are now stricter than they have been under any previous British Government, and certainly are much stricter than they were under the previous Government, which exported hundreds of millions of arms to the Suharto regime in Indonesia to crack down on the people of East Timor. The Scott committee reported on the scandal of arms to Iraq. We now have a more accountable, open and transparent arms export regime. We do not export arms where they could be used for internal repression or external aggression. That might not be perfect, and we are always looking for improvements, but it is a better regime than has ever existed before. In addition, we have pledged to introduce legislation to curb the trafficking and brokering of arms, which continues despite our tightened policy. I am grateful to the Committee for its hard work on the report, which we take very seriously, and to hon. Members who have contributed to an excellent debate this afternoon.

Ann Clwyd: As we have three minutes left, may I use the time to put a question to the Minister?

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. I take it that the hon. Lady has the leave of the Chamber.

Ann Clwyd: Before my hon. Friend leaves the Chamber, I should like to press him on one question that he did not answer. In addition to pressing for the acceptance of resolution 1284, will the United Kingdom make some attempt to secure the official establishment of an ad hoc tribunal on Iraqi war crimes by the United Nations? That is very important, especially as war crimes tribunals have been set up for so many other countries. So much evidence is available that I can see no reason why the UN should not take that action.

Mr. Hain rose—

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. I take it that the Minister has the permission of the Chamber to speak again.

Mr. Hain: I agree that Saddam Hussein is a war criminal: no one could dispute that. The issue is how such a tribunal could be created, but I am extremely sympathetic to the idea. As my hon. Friend will know, I have spoken on platforms for Indict, the campaign which she chairs and which the Foreign Office and I strongly support. The problem that she has identified is not easy to solve, but we will certainly bear in mind the points that she has argued so forcefully and do what we can.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at twenty-nine minutes past Five o'clock.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Football Banning Orders

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Solicitor-General what guidance has been issued to Crown prosecutors about securing international football banning orders in respect of persons convicted of violence associated with football matches. [126869]

The Solicitor-General: Detailed internal guidance on the Football (Offences and Disorder) Act 1999, which widened the circumstances in which the courts can prevent those convicted of football-related offences from attending matches abroad, was issued to all Crown Prosecutors on 14 September 1999. This guidance stressed the importance of the legislation in relation to the Euro 2000 tournament, and advised prosecutors that the courts should be reminded of their duty to impose international football banning orders, whenever appropriate.

Further guidance was circulated on 16 June 2000 informing all Crown Prosecutors of two statutory instruments which now allow criminal offences committed by English and Welsh football supporters in Belgium and the Netherlands to be used as the subject of international football banning orders imposed in our domestic courts.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

GM Crops

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the dates on which the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment has met to discuss the contamination by GMOs of rape seed. [123833]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 25 May 2000]: Advanta were unable to give sufficient information at the meeting with officials on 17 April for ACRE to be consulted at that stage. Advanta were initially unable to state for certain what type of GMs were found, the level of GM presence (and how reliable the information was) or which seed batches were involved.

When this information was available the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment were consulted through correspondence with the DETR on 10 May. This is normal procedure for seeking their views on issues outside their normal meeting schedule. The advice was clear on 17 May, prior to the Government's announcement, and ratified at their meeting on 25 May.

ACRE's advice is that there is no risk to human health or the environment.

Local Authority Grants

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the percentage changes in grants to local authorities, including revenue support grant, in each of the last three years, broken down by (a) London boroughs, (b) Metropolitan councils, (c) counties, (d) unitary authorities and (e) shire districts. [124989]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The table sets out the percentage change in the amounts of grants made by my Department to local authorities in each of the last three financial years. It has not been possible to provide the requested breakdown by local authority class, because information is not held in that form for all the grants concerned. In addition, local government reorganisation during this period means that any data provided on a local authority class basis would not be comparable year on year.

Single Regeneration Budget

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the value of grants made through the single regeneration budget in (a) Kensington and Chelsea and (b) Westminster boroughs for (i) 1999–98, (ii) 1998–99 and (iii) 1999–2000; what is his estimate for 2000–01. [125420]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The following grants were paid in respect of single regeneration budget schemes in the boroughs of Kensington and Chelsea and Westminster:

	Kensington and Chelsea	Westminster
1997–98	435,718	9,000,000
1998–99	1,411,816	5,900,000
1999–2000	1,522,352	2,843,933
2000–01 (estimate)	1,376,500	5,894,267

Low Bridges

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many strikes have been recorded on low bridges (a) over and (b) supporting railway lines from 1998–99 to 1999–2000. [125589]

Mr. Hill: The numbers of bridge strike incidents over and under railway lines are as follows:

Year	Overbridge	Underbridge	Total
1998–99	96	1,332	1,428
1999–2000	104	1,533	1,637

Note:
The figures for 1999–2000 are provisional.

Asthma

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he plans to take to make schools safer for children with asthma. [125390]

Mr. Hill: The policies we are pursuing generally to improve air quality are set out in the Air Quality Strategy for England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland that we published in January. The Strategy sets objectives for driving down levels of the most common air pollutants. This is an important step in protecting health, particularly of those most vulnerable to air pollution, such as children with asthma.

My Department set up the School Travel Advisory Group in 1998 with colleagues in DfEE and DH, to advise on work to reduce car use, improve air quality and develop safer journeys to school.

In addition in October 1999 colleagues in DH and DfEE launched a National Healthy School Standard as part of the Government's Healthy Schools Programme. Many activities related to this programme will help make the school environment safer for children with asthma.

Diabetic Drivers

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research has recently been undertaken by his Department on the relationship between driving and diabetes; and if he will make the research available to the public. [125709]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 12 June 2000]: No research has recently been undertaken by the Department. Projects will be initiated during this financial year. The specifications for the projects are currently being developed and they will address issues raised by The House of Commons Science and Technology Committee report on Diabetes and Driving. Tendering for this work is expected to take place in the early autumn.

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what funding he is making available for research into the relationship between driving and diabetes. [125710]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 12 June 2000]: The House of Commons Science and Technology Committee, in its report on Diabetes and Driving, recommended that the scope and depth of the fitness to drive research programme be enhanced and adequately funded. Provision has been made for £160,000 to cover the cost of the research projects on diabetes and driving which are being set up during this financial year.

Land Rover Rail Link

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will indicate (a) when a public inquiry is likely to be set up into Land Rover's proposed rail link to the West Coast main line and (b) the likely venue of such an inquiry; and if he will make a statement. [125869]

Mr. Hill: On 10 February the Secretary of State announced his decision to hold a public inquiry into the application under the Transport and Works Act 1992 by Rover Group Ltd. for an Order to authorise a rail link from Land Rover's Solihull factory to the West Coast Main Line. At that time, Rover Group Ltd. owned the Land Rover business.

Following the disclosure in March that BMW intended to dispose of the Rover Group and to sell the Land Rover business in a separate transaction, the application has been held in abeyance pending the outcome of the proposed sale. I understand that BMW and Ford have now signed an agreement for the sale of the Land Rover business.

Once the completion of the disposal has been confirmed, it will be for the new owners of Land Rover to decide whether they wish to proceed with the proposed rail link. If they do, we will need to consider with them whether the Order applied for by the Rover Group can properly be taken forward, or whether that application should be withdrawn and a new one submitted. I shall keep the hon. Member informed of progress.

Flaxmill Project, Shrewsbury

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received about the delayed funding from Advantage West Midlands for the Flaxmill project in Shrewsbury; and if he will make a statement. [125942]

Ms Beverley Hughes: As my hon. Friend will no doubt be aware, there have been several representations in connection with the funding package from Advantage West Midland (AWM). I refer him to my response of 13 June 2000, Official Report, column 548W, which states that the project has received an approval for a grant from AWM towards restoration of the building, to be given when funds are available.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to visit the Flaxmill project in Shrewsbury to view progress in saving the building; and if he will make a statement. [125944]

Ms Beverley Hughes: I currently have no plans to visit the Flaxmill project.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the significance of the Flaxmill building in Shrewsbury to the United Kingdom's national heritage. [125941]

Ms Beverley Hughes: I understand that the former Ditherington Flax Mill and attached former malt kiln were designated Grade 1 listed buildings on 10 January 1953. The cast iron framed building dates from 1797. The mill also includes several Grade II buildings at risk. All buildings appear on the English Heritage register as Grade A—buildings at risk of further rapid deterioration or loss of fabric with no solution agreed.

Section 28

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with (a) Childline, (b) the NSPCC and (c) Barnardo's about the repeal of section 28 of the Local Government Act 1988; and if he will make a statement. [126166]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The Government have had no discussions with Childline, the NSPCC or Barnardo's about the repeal of section 28. I understand that the organisations do not hold official positions on the repeal.

M60 (Denton to Middleton)

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects the M60 from Denton to Middleton to be open for public use; and if he expects it to be opened as a whole or in sections. [126094]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 15 June 2000]: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Peter Nutt, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Nutt to Mr. Andrew Bennett, dated 19 June 2000:

I have been asked by the Transport Minister, Keith Hill, to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the completion of the M60 between Denton and Middleton.

We expect to open both sections at the same time later this summer.

I shall write to you again when I have a firm date.

Byker Heat Station

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 6 June 2000, Official Report, columns 195–96W, what assessment he has made of the possible occurrence of potential health risk to small children using the bridleway and allotments listed as having received toxic ash from the Byker Heat Station. [126006]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 15 June 2000]: Following discussions involving senior officials of the City Council and the Environment Agency, and having received advice from the Food Standards Agency, the Director of Public Health for the Newcastle and North Tyneside Health Authority and the Head of Public Health and Environment Protection for Newcastle City Council jointly issued precautionary advice on 6 April 2000 which included the recommendation that children aged two and under should not play in the named allotments to avoid contact with the ash.

This precautionary advice is expected to remain in force until further investigations have been undertaken to enable proper assessment as to whether or not there has been any exposure to the dioxins and heavy metals, and therefore a potential risk to health. This will include further testing on eggs, soil and vegetables.

London Underground

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 8 June 2000, Official Report, column 311W, concerning EU legislation relating to direct expenditure by London Underground, for what reason his answer did not list the legislation concerned. [126205]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 15 June 2000]: The arrangements are, in principle, subject to a wide range of treaty provisions including, notably, Title V (Transport) and Title VI (Common rules on competition, taxation and approximation of laws). Specific legislation which may be relevant includes the state aid rules, the EC Merger Regulation and the Utilities Directive. Ultimately, it would, of course, be for the European Court of Justice to rule on the applicability of treaty provisions and associated legislation.

Road Closures

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will amend the road traffic regulations so that a formal road closure order is not required by the police to close roads for carnivals and parades organised by charities. [126204]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 15 June 2000]: Local authorities have powers under section 21 of the Town Police Clauses Act 1847 to close roads for the purposes of local carnivals and fairs. Additional powers in the Road Traffic Regulation (Special Events) Act 1994 enable authorities to make orders to close roads for any sporting event, social event or entertainment which is held on a road. The police's powers to close roads are to enable them to deal promptly and safely with emergencies and public order matters.

It is a matter for the local authority to decide whether to support a request to close a road for a carnival or parade organised by a charity and, if so, whether use of their powers under the 1847 Act or 1994 Act would be appropriate.

We have no plans to amend the requirement on local authorities to make orders before they close roads. There are no Regulations governing the procedures local authorities must follow under these Acts. It is therefore entirely for the local authority to decide, in the light of the likely impact of the event on the community, the procedures to follow, including the level of publicity and notices in the press.

We have no information on the numbers of parades and carnivals held every year on the road and consequently cannot estimate the cost to charities if local authorities charge, as they can do, for orders under the 1994 Act.

Home Ownership

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to promote home ownership. [126405]

Mr. Raynsford: Our policy on home ownership is set out in the Housing Green Paper "Quality and Choice: a Decent Home for All", launched by my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister on 4 April.

Single Currency

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate the costs of switching from the pound to the euro for his Department. [126401]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Should the UK decide to join the euro, the cost of a changeover would depend on the detailed approach taken to a changeover.

Dioxin

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for East Worthing and Shoreham (Mr. Loughton) of 24 May 2000, Official Report, column 539W, on dioxin, if he will list the research programmes which assess and monitor the levels of dioxins in the environment which have been sponsored by his Department, stating in each case the level of sponsorship, for each of the last five years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [126262]

Mr. Meacher: Since 1995 DETR has sponsored the following research programmes to assess and monitor the levels of dioxins in the environment. Many are co-sponsored with other Departments and/or Agencies and include a range of organic contaminants in addition to dioxins. A year by year breakdown of costs is not readily available for all the projects but the overall contribution by DETR is indicated in brackets:

Monitoring of hazardous air pollutants programme (HAPs) (around £250,000 per year);

Compilation of EU dioxin exposure and health data (in kind support through HAPs programme);

National air emissions inventory includes dioxins among many other pollutants (around £250,000 per year);

Organics in sewage sludge (£123,000 over three years);

Modelling of Persistent Organic Pollutants on a national and global scale (£160,000 over two years);

Modelling human exposure to dioxins and PCBs: projection of future UK exposures (£30,000).

Further programmes to begin this year include:

Chemical contaminants in human milk: a pilot study towards establishing an archive of samples from the UK (around £80,000);

UK soil and herbage pollutant survey (around £100,000)

The results of these and additional programmes sponsored by other Government Departments and Agencies will feed into a UK position paper on dioxins and PCBs which is currently being drafted by DETR. The paper will estimate the effectiveness of abatement measures already taken to reduce emissions of dioxins and assess what further action is required.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the percentage of waste produced by his Department which was (a) re-used and (b) recycled during the last year for which figures are available. [126635]

Ms Beverley Hughes: My Department is at present compiling and validating the figures for the annual greening operations report—published in November. The percentage of total office waste separated (and collected) for recycling in our headquarters buildings over each of the past two years was 37 per cent. and 46 per cent.

Sir Paul Beresford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his Department's policy on the proximity principle relating to planning applications and permissions for new waste incinerators. [126466]

Ms Beverley Hughes: PPG10 "Planning and Waste Management" advises that waste management decisions should in part be based on the proximity principle. It should therefore be taken into account by waste planning authorities alongside other issues in deciding planning applications for all waste management facilities.

Brownfield Development

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his policy on land value taxation and brownfield development. [126105]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The Government are considering the potential role which fiscal instruments could play in helping to regenerate our towns and cities and protect our countryside. Our forthcoming Urban White Paper will take forward the Government's programme for achieving an urban renaissance and our response to Lord Rogers's Urban Task Force.

The Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions has no plans to make a statement. Final decisions on taxation are a matter for the Chancellor.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many local authority private finance initiative schemes (a) are in progress, (b) have been completed and (c) are currently awaiting approval by region, what is the (i) average cost per scheme and (ii) overall cost of approved schemes to date; how many of each type of scheme (1) have been approved, (2) are awaiting approval and (3) have been turned down; and what type of scheme has been approved in each region. [126106]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The information is as follows:

(a) 126 local authority PFI schemes have been endorsed by the inter-departmental Project Review Group. This means that they have been awarded central government financial support and that the local authorities concerned can proceed with the procurement for their schemes.

(b) 38 schemes have reached contract signature and of these, 23 are in operation.

(c) About 35 schemes are currently awaiting approval. The breakdown of these schemes by region is:

Region	Number
Eastern	3
East Midlands	3
London	4
North East	3
North West	7
South East	6
South West	1
West Midlands	5
Yorkshire and The Humber	3

(i) The average cost per scheme of all the schemes endorsed so far is approximately £20 million. However, the schemes vary greatly in size, scope and type of service provided and the costs of individual schemes range from less than £1 million to more than £100 million.

(ii) The overall cost of all the endorsed schemes is approximately £2.5 billion.

(1) The breakdown of endorsed schemes by type of scheme is:

Scheme	Number
Depot and Vehicle Services	2
Fire Service	6
Housing	13
Information Communication and Technology	6
Leisure	2
Magistrates Courts	6
Police schemes	14
Property rationalisation and libraries	10
Residential homes and other social services	11
Schools	43
Transport and street lighting	6
Waste Management	7
Total	126

(2) How many of each type of scheme are awaiting approval:

Scheme	Number
Housing	2
Information Communication and Technology	2
Leisure	6
Schools	7
Transport and street lighting	7
Waste management	3
Cross-agency	8
Total	35

(3) All schemes which are selected for assessment need to satisfy various criteria. There are a number of stages in the approval process and schemes may be turned down at any of these stages. Records are not kept of the number of schemes that are turned down.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many local authorities have initiated PFI schemes; and if he will make a statement. [126107]

Ms Beverley Hughes: 86 local authorities, including fire, police and waste authorities and one passenger transport executive, have initiated PFI schemes that have been endorsed by the inter-departmental Project Review Group. The total number of endorsed local authority PFI schemes is 126. It should be noted that these figures exclude PFI schemes that are financially free standing or which do not require central government revenue support.

Motor Vehicle Traffic

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the estimated annual percentage change in motor vehicle traffic was in (a) Great Britain and (b) each region for each year since 1984. [126108]

Mr. Hill: Regional estimates of traffic are not available for the years requested. The annual percentage changes for all GB roads for each year from 1984 to 1998 are shown in the table.

Road traffic in Great Britain

Year	Percentage change
1983	—
1984	5.2
1985	2.2
1986	5.1
1987	7.7
1988	7.2
1989	8.3
1990	1.0
1993	0.0
1994	2.5
1995	2.0
1996	2.7
1997	2.3
1998	1.5

Regional Development Agencies

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment

he has made of the effectiveness of (a) the north-east regional development agency and (b) other regional development agencies; and if he will make a statement. [126497]

Ms Beverley Hughes: My Department has commissioned consultants to undertake an evaluation of the strategies and action plans produced by all eight RDAs, including One North East. Research is also being carried out by consultants into partnership working by RDAs in the development and production of their strategies. It is the aim that both pieces of research will be published and that the findings will contribute to a report on the RDA's performance in their first year of operation.

The 2000–01 research programme of my Department's Local and Regional Government Research Unit also includes provision for a long-term evaluation of the operation and effectiveness of RDAs.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the relationship between the north-east regional development agency and local regeneration partnerships; and if he will make a statement. [126498]

Ms Beverley Hughes: One North East sees the four sub-regional partnerships in the north east as having a key role in delivery of the Regional Economic Strategy, and is giving high priority to developing and supporting those sub-regional partnerships.

My Department has employed consultants to undertake research on partnership working by RDAs in the development and production of their regional economic strategies. This will examine the extent and form of partnership working by all the RDAs, including One North East, with sub-regional and local partnerships, including those with a regeneration remit. We hope to publish this research in the autumn.

The 2000–01 research programme of my Department's Local and Regional Government Research Unit includes proposals to undertake a review of the nature and form of governance relationships at the regional and sub-regional level, including partnership working with, and ownership by, local and regional stakeholders and the wider community.

Cabinet Governance

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of Cabinet governance in (a) Teeside area and (b) local authorities across the country; and if he will make a statement. [126493]

Ms Beverley Hughes: We have made no general assessment of initiatives individual councils are currently pursuing. These initiatives are being carried out under the existing legislative framework which is not designed for cabinet governance. The Local Government Bill [Lords] provides a framework tailor made for executive arrangements, including cabinet governance and directly elected mayors. There is considerable international experience of the benefits that these forms of governance can bring, particularly of the benefits directly elected mayors can bring for their local communities.

Central Railway

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if representatives of Central Railway attended his recent Rail Summit. [126533]

Mr. Hill: No.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 8 June 2000, Official Report, column 315W, on Central Railway, if officials of his Department have met representatives of Central Railway within the last two months; and if he will make a statement. [126564]

Mr. Hill: Officials from the Government Office for the South East and the Highways Agency held discussions earlier this month with representatives of Central Railway about its proposed rail project.

Central Railway also took part in a seminar in May hosted by the Government Office for the West Midlands as part of its transport Multi-Modal Study.

New Deal for Communities

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much has been spent on New Deal for Communities; and what projects qualify for funding under New Deal for Communities. [126545]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The New Deal for Communities (NDC) fosters the intensive regeneration of some of our poorest neighbourhoods, supporting projects that tackle such problems as poor job prospects, high levels of crime, educational underachievement, and poor health. To get funding, community based partnerships in eligible areas must first develop a long-term strategy for delivering sustainable change. Since November 1999, 16 pathfinder partnerships have received offers of long-term support and made a start on implementing their strategies. As at April 2000, spending under the NDC had reached £4.9 million.

Treaty of Nice

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the matters currently decided by the Department of (a) the Environment, Transport and the Regions, (b) of Health and (c) for Education and Employment which would be decided by the EU if the present Draft Treaty of Nice is agreed. [126578]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The current Intergovernmental Conference, which will lead to the Treaty of Nice in December, is about reforming the European institutions in preparation for enlargement. It is not envisaged that this will entail any transferring of competence.

Social Housing

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has for schemes enabling tenants of social housing to convert their rents to mortgages. [126793]

Mr. Raynsford: There is already such a scheme called "Rent to Mortgage". It was introduced by the previous administration in 1993 and was publicised at a cost of £414,000. Yet to date there have only been 51 sales. Because of this lack of demand there are no plans to extend or expand such schemes.

Shimizu v. Westminster City Council

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he proposes to take following the House of Lords judgment in the case of Shimizu (UK) Ltd. v. Westminster City Council in 1997. [126967]

Mr. Raynsford: My Department and the Department for Culture, Media and Sport have today jointly issued a consultation paper inviting views on whether any further action should be taken by Government following the House of Lords ruling in this case. The paper proposes that an application for planning permission should in future be required for certain works of partial demolition within conservation areas, such as the demolition of boundary walls and fences.

The proposals issued today are designed to address problems that have been identified as arising as a direct result of the Shimizu judgment. They are separate from, and do not prejudge, the broader review of heritage policy which my hon. Friend the Minister for the Arts announced in November 1999.

Comments are requested by 14 August 2000. Copies of the consultation paper have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Millennium Experience

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment his Department has made of the advantages and disadvantages of changing the planned end date of the Millennium Experience exhibition at the Dome. [125931]

Mr. Chris Smith: There are no plans to close the Millennium Experience before 31 December 2000.

Live Theatre

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what estimate he has made of the total public subsidy that will be paid to live theatre in England, and its total audience, in each of the last five years. [126322]

Mr. Alan Howarth: I have asked the Arts Council of England, as the national body responsible for supporting live theatre, to provide this information. When it is available, I will write to my hon. Friend, and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Royal Exchange Theatre, Manchester

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what recent representations he has received from the Royal Exchange Theatre, Manchester, about its funding. [126868]

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend has received no recent representations from the Royal Exchange Theatre, Manchester, about its funding.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Contractors

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what measures Her Majesty's Government proposes to ensure that those British contractors who have been debarred by the World Bank from future funding on grounds of fraud and corruption in the procurement of goods and services are restricted in access to UK bilateral aid funds, ECGD credits and funds from other multilateral development banks. [125781]

Clare Short: We welcome the action by the World Bank to investigate cases of alleged corruption. We have asked the Bank to make available to national authorities the information on which they have taken a decision to debar firms from procurement. We understand that the Bank is in discussion with other multilateral development agencies about corruption cases. It is up to the Board of each agency to reach its own conclusions based on the evidence, but we would support a robust line against corruption within their programmes. There are no procedures to limit access to ECGD facilities by any company debarred by the World Bank from receiving funds, but ECGD are looking at how to tighten up their anti-corruption procedures.

We will consider information on the World Bank's and others' lists of debarred contractors, along with other commercial data, about any company or individual bidding for DFID work, before awarding a contract.

Brazil

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will give details of the Brazilian Government's land reform initiatives supported by her Department since 1997. [126019]

Clare Short: We have not supported any Brazilian Government land reform initiatives since 1997. Our current Country Strategy Paper for Brazil (published December 1998) states our aim to pursue specific opportunities to support the Brazilian Government's land reform programme in order to assist the needs of the poorest. However, despite discussions with INCRA, the National Land Resettlement Agency, we have not yet been able to identify a suitable entry point into this highly politically sensitive and difficult area.

Uganda

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what proportion of her Department's bilateral country programme aid for Uganda is spent by the Government of Uganda. [126454]

Clare Short: Our programme of bilateral assistance to Uganda is set at £57 million in the current financial year. Of this we anticipate that £38 million will be disbursed as budget support, flowing directly through the Government of Uganda consolidated fund. Over the next two financial years the programme is expected to increase to £60 million and £70 million respectively. Of these amounts, £42 million and £53 million respectively will be channelled through the Government of Uganda's budget. Thus the proportion flowing through the budget will rise from 67 per cent. in 2000–01 to 76 per cent. in 2002–03.

Opinion Polls

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what has been the total cost of opinion polls conducted by her Department since 1 May 1997. [126447]

Clare Short: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 7 June 2000, Official Report, column 267W.

Good Governance Programmes

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the need for programmes to promote good governance in (a) Ghana, (b) Rwanda, (c) Nigeria, (d) Uganda and (e) China; and what assessment she has made of the extent of Government corruption in each case. [126652]

Clare Short: The promotion of good governance is an objective of our published country strategies for Ghana, Rwanda, Uganda and China. The country strategy papers also explain the means by which we propose to address this. In Ghana, Uganda and Nigeria we are working with the World bank and other international development agencies on corruption assignments.

We are also working with the World bank and other international development agencies to ensure that governance issues are properly reflected in poverty reduction strategies being prepared for decision on debt relief and for World bank and IMF lending.

Bosnia-Herzegovina

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is the gap between aid provided and aid needs in 2000 for refugee return in Bosnia-Herzegovina. [126641]

Clare Short: The UNHCR's consolidated appeal for Bosnia-Herzegovina (BH) for 2000 is for $38 million to support 130,000 vulnerable displaced persons and refugees. $352,000 has so far been earmarked by donors for the appeal. We understand that UNHCR will transfer non-earmarked funds to the appeal. We do not have information on bilateral commitments separate from the UNHCR appeal. Our own bilateral commitment for 2000 is £800,000, bringing our total commitment to £1.6 million.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the extent of Government corruption in Sierra Leone. [126651]

Clare Short: We have made no specific assessment of the extent of corruption in Sierra Leone, but the Government there recognise the seriousness of the problem and requested help to deal with it. In response, we have helped the Government of Sierra Leone draft new anti-corruption legislation, and plan to help them set up the resultant Anti-Corruption Commission, which is due to become operational later in the year. We expect our support to continue over the next two to three years.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Gary Graham

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will meet the British parliamentarians and lawyers concerned with the case of Gary Graham to discuss the international obligations that apply to the planned execution in Texas of Gary Graham. [125983]

Mr. Battle: We have written to the hon. Member for Gainsborough (Mr. Leigh), who has made representations on behalf of a number of hon. Members, inviting him to arrange an appointment to discuss the case of Gary Graham.

Iran

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last made representations to the Government of Iran concerning the conduct of the trial of 13 Jews accused of spying for Israel. [126441]

Mr. Hain: This Government and our EU colleagues have raised with the Iranians at every appropriate opportunity our concerns about the trial on espionage charges in Shiraz of 13 Jews and eight Moslems. Iran is aware of the importance that we and our EU partners attach to this issue.

Most recently the Director for Middle East and North Africa at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office raised the issue with the Iranian Ambassador on 1 June and the EU Presidency in Tehran presented demarches on behalf of all EU partners to the Iranian authorities on 29 April and 23 May.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent assessment he has made of the situation of members of the Jewish community in Shiraz who are undergoing the legal process in Iran; what recent representations he has made to the Iranian Government concerning this case; and if he will make a statement. [126522]

Mr. Hain: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mrs. Ellman) today, Official Report, column 16W.

In addition, it has been reported that all the defendants have now appeared before the court and that defence statements have been lodged. We understand that two legal questions need to be resolved, following which, according to Iranian law, verdicts should be pronounced within one week.

Cuba

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what legal assistance was given via the British Consular staff in Cuba to Ms Rachel McGee, prior to her trial there in September 1999. [126767]

Mr. Hain: Our consular staff are not legally trained and are not able to offer legal advice. We are able to provide lists of English speaking local lawyers.

In Ms McGee's case our consular staff in Cuba provided to both Ms McGee and her family the details of the only law firm that is allowed to represent foreign nationals in Cuba. They also offered to facilitate payment for private legal services prior to her trial in September 1999.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of progress made in establishing a Truth and Reconciliation Commission and National Human Rights Commission in Sierra Leone as envisaged by the Lomé Peace Agreement. [126616]

Mr. Hain: Prior to the attacks mounted by the Revolutionary United Front in May, some limited progress had been made in the establishment of both Commissions. Britain has supported the efforts of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights to prepare for the establishment of an effective Truth and Reconciliation Commission.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will list his officials who took part in observer missions during the negotiations in Lomé between the Government of Sierra Leone and the Revolutionary United Front; [126609]

(2) what role was played by the British Chargé d'Affaires in Lomé, at the Lomé peace negotiations. [126623]

Mr. Hain: Britain has no diplomatic representation in Lomé. A senior official from London, and a visiting official from the British High Commission in Accra accredited to Togo, observed these negotiations.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) which officials from his Department received representations from the Justice Minister of Sierra Leone during the Lomé talks; [126622]

(2) what representations were made by the Sierra Leone Justice Minister to his Department regarding the progress of the Lomé peace negotiations from April to July 1999. [126621]

Mr. Hain: The Minister of Justice led the Government of Sierra Leone delegation at the Lomé peace negotiations. UK observers remained in close touch with the Minister of Justice throughout the negotiations.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the role played by his Department during the Lomé negotiations on Sierra Leone. [126615]

Mr. Hain: Britain was among those present as observers during the negotiations in Lomé between the Government of Sierra Leone and the Revolutionary United Front.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he received from the UN Commissioner on Human Rights, on Sierra Leone, following her visit there in June 1999. [126624]

Mr. Hain: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary and the then Minister of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Central (Mr. Lloyd), met the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights in London on 15 July 1999.

Discussion centred on the High Commissioner's impressions of the prospects for lasting peace and long-term reconciliation in Sierra Leone following her visit, and on the importance of international support to sustain the peace process and to rebuild the country.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what role he envisages for the Revolutionary United Front in implementing of the Lomé Peace Agreement. [126617]

Mr. Hain: The leader of the Revolutionary United Front (RUF), Foday Sankoh, is now in detention. It is our view that he must remain so until he is brought to justice. Nor, after the attacks by the RUF on United Nations peacekeepers and the RUF's clear violation of the Lomé Peace Agreement, can there be any role for members of the RUF in the present Government of Sierra Leone.

For those RUF combatants willing genuinely to disarm and to commit themselves to peace, a revised Disarmament, Demobilisation and Reintegration programme must quickly be established to help them, and other combatants, move back into civilian life and to help train them for civilian employment.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the future of the Lomé agreement. [126614]

Mr. Hain: The provisions of the Lomé Peace Agreement include: a permanent cessation of hostilities; disarmament, demobilisation and reintegration of all former combatants; creation of effective and democratically accountable Sierra Leone armed forces to protect the country in the future; democratic elections; and an international peacekeeping force to supervise the process.

All these elements remain essential for any lasting peace in Sierra Leone.

At the same time, we have made clear that, in the light of recent events, there can be no place for RUF Ministers in the present government; and that the Revolutionary United Front leader, Foday Sankoh, must face justice.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what assessment he has made of the possibility of bringing Foday Sankoh to justice; [126629]

(2) what assessment he has made of the proposals to establish an international war crimes tribunal for Sierra Leone. [126613]

Mr. Hain: We welcome the Government of Sierra Leone's determination to bring to justice those responsible for the horrific atrocities in Sierra Leone. There are various judicial processes by which this could be achieved. We are discussing the options with the Government of Sierra Leone and the United Nations and have offered UK assistance.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what representations were made by his Department to (a) President Kabbah and (b) the Revolutionary United Front regarding granting of an amnesty to all the RUF members suspected of committing crimes in Sierra Leone prior to 7 July 1999; [126608]

(2) what factors influenced the decision of the parties to the Lomé peace accord to accept the inclusion of a general amnesty for members of the RUF. [126618]

Mr. Hain: This was one of the many difficult choices made by the Government of Sierra Leone in the interest of securing a negotiated solution to a brutal eight year conflict.

The Government of Sierra Leone recognised that the conflict could not be solved by military means alone, not least because it had little capacity to fight the Revolutionary United Front rebels. We are now leading international efforts to help create effective, accountable armed forces, so that the Government of Sierra Leone can restore law and order throughout Sierra Leone.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent reports he has received of illegal arms shipments to Sierra Leone. [126620]

Mr. Hain: I am sure that the right hon. Gentleman will understand that the reports that the Government have received are sensitive in nature. It would be inappropriate for me to comment other than to reassure the right hon. Gentleman that appropriate action is being taken wherever possible.

We will be passing as much information on alleged violations as possible to the UN Sanctions Committee.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what research his Department has undertaken on ways of preventing British weapons from falling into the hands of child soldiers. [126625]

Mr. Hain: We rigorously assess all arms export license applications against UK and EU criteria. These include the need to consider the risk that exported arms might be diverted to undesirable end-users, such as child soldiers. Similar considerations apply to exports of arms by the Government. The FCO and our posts overseas consult a wide range of contacts—both official and non-governmental—in order to inform the decision making process and thus reduce the risk of exports from the UK being diverted to undesirable end-users.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations were made to him by the Sierra Leone Government after 1 May on the deteriorating situation in Sierra Leone. [126619]

Mr. Hain: We have remained in close and regular touch with the Government of Sierra Leone throughout.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate his Department has made of the number of children fighting in (a) the Sierra Leone army, (b) militias supporting the Sierra Leone Government and (c) factions fighting against the Sierra Leone army. [126639]

Mr. Hain: We are totally opposed to the use of child soldiers wherever they may be employed. During my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary's visit to Sierra Leone on 8 June, President Kabbah reaffirmed his assurances that children would not be used by the Sierra Leone armed forces. The leaders of the two main factions loyal to President Kabbah gave similar assurances to the Foreign Secretary.

Thousands of children have been forcibly recruited by the Revolutionary United Front (RUF) during the conflict in Sierra Leone, and forced to fight. Several thousand children are believed to remain in RUF hands.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many times he has met President Kabbah of Sierra Leone since January 1999; where the meetings took place; and what was discussed. [126611]

Mr. Hain: Since January 1999, my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has met President Kabbah on six occasions: in Abuja, in London, in New York, in Durban, in Cairo, and, most recently, in Freetown.

Discussion at these meetings centred on the prevailing situation in Sierra Leone, and on Britain's efforts to help the Government of Sierra Leone build lasting peace and stability.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what factors underlay the decision to introduce a twin-track strategy on Sierra Leone; and when this strategy was introduced. [126612]

Mr. Hain: The international community and the region have long pursued a military/diplomatic twin track policy for achieving lasting peace in Sierra Leone. The ECOWAS Summit of 1998 endorsed the recommendations of ECOWAS Ministers of Foreign Affairs to combine the strengthening of the Economic Community of West African States Monitoring Group (ECOMOG) with efforts at dialogue.

European ABM System

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received from (a) his European counterparts, (b) the US Government and (c) the Russian Government regarding the Russian proposal for creating a pan-European ABM system. [126606]

Mr. Vaz: The Russian Defence Minister, Igor Sergeyev, presented Russia's proposal in outline to NATO Defence Ministers in the NATO/Russia Permanent Joint Council on 9 June.

On the basis of that presentation, NATO Permanent Representatives have had an initial discussion of the Russian proposal. Officials have also separately had preliminary bilateral discussions about the proposal with a number of NATO Allies, including the United States.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what commitments the Government entered into for providing financial support for land reform in Zimbabwe at the time of granting independence; what obligations remain for providing such funding; what further requests have been received from the Government of Zimbabwe; and if he will make a statement. [120086]

Clare Short: I have been asked to reply.

I am informed that at the Lancaster House Constitutional Conference in October 1979, the UK Government undertook to assist with land resettlement alongside other donors—noting that scale of assistance required was beyond the scope of any individual donor. No specific figure was pledged. £20 million was offered through the 1981 Land Resettlement Grant; though this grant closed in 1996 with £3 million unused by the Zimbabwe Government. A further £27 million was provided during the 1980s as budgetary support to help the Zimbabwe Government meet their share of resettlement costs.

Since taking office in May 1997, we made it very clear that we were willing to support land reform and resettlement in Zimbabwe, because Zimbabwe needs land reform to reduce poverty. We are willing to fund schemes which are focused on helping the poor. We also made it clear that we will only support a programme that is fair, transparent, cost effective, within the rule of law, and which will genuinely benefit the poor. Because these principles are not being fulfilled we cannot support the Zimbabwean Government's Land Reform and Resettlement Programme.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Retail Fuels Market

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the size of the road transportation retail fuels market in Northern Ireland for (a) diesel and (b) petrol in (i) 1998 and (ii) 1999. [122934]

Mrs. Liddell: I have been asked to reply.

Retail sales of petrol in Northern Ireland were 401,000 tonnes in 1998 and 329,000 tonnes in 1999. Retail sales of diesel were 122,000 tonnes in 1998 and 95,000 tonnes in 1999. The data are based on deliveries made into the Northern Ireland market.

Departmental Vehicles

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) cars and (b) commercial vehicles operated by his Department were manufactured (i) in the UK, (ii) in the EU and (iii) elsewhere. [122256]

Mr. Mandelson: The information requested is set out in the table.

	Cars	Commercial vehicles	Total
UK	2	1	3
EU	10	1	11
Elsewhere	1	—	1

Green Transport

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the key buildings for which his Department (a) submitted and (b) did not submit green transport plans by March. [122617]

Mr. George Howarth: (a) Green transport plans have been submitted for:

County Hall, Ballymena
Rathkeltair House, Downpatrick

(b) The following is a list of those key buildings for which green transport plans have not been submitted; the process has been affected by the creation of new Departments as a result of devolution and the subsequent movement of staff. However, for many of these buildings plans are currently being developed.

Responsibility for this subject has been devolved to the Northern Ireland Assembly and is therefore no longer a matter for the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Opinion Research

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will place copies of the results of all market and opinion research carried out by his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies since May 1997 in the Library. [123812]

Mr. Mandelson: Copies of all published items relating to market and opinion research since May 1997 will be placed in the Library.

Departmental Responsibilities

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what statistics relating to the responsibilities of his Department are collated by parliamentary constituency, indicating the dates covered in each case. [123836]

Mr. Mandelson: A comprehensive list of all statistics that can be collected by parliamentary constituency is not held centrally by Northern Ireland Departments, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Firearms Certificates

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many appeals were made to the Chief Constable on the removal of firearms certificates under the Firearms (N.I.) Order 1981 in each year from 1995 to date. [126656]

Mr. Ingram: Appeals against decisions by the Chief Constable to revoke firearm certificates or to refuse to renew them are made to the Secretary of State under Article 55 of the 1981 Order. The following table sets out the number of such appeals since 1995:

Year	Revocation	Refusal to renew	Total
1995	47	7	54
1996	35	5	40
1997	75	25	100
1998	50	23	73
1999	34	10	44
2000[1]	21	6	27

Informants

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the use of informants by RUC officers is governed by Home Office guidelines. [126235]

Mr. Ingram: The Royal Ulster Constabulary is subject to the five Codes of Practice on Covert Law Enforcement Techniques issued by the Association of Police Officers and Her Majesty's Custom and Excise. These are public documents.

Union Flag

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on which Government buildings the Union Flag was flown on 2 June; and how many of these buildings are under (a) his direct control and (b) the control of the Northern Ireland Assembly. [125544]

Mr. Mandelson: The responsibility for flying the Union Flag rests with the department which has the main occupancy of each building and where that building has a flagpole. The Union Flag was flown on 2 June at Hillsborough Castle, Maghaberry, the Prison Service College, Maze and Magilligan. It was not practical to fly the flag at the YOC on that date due to defective equipment which has since been replaced. Following restoration of the political institutions on 30 May, the provision of details concerning the flying of flags on other public buildings on 2 June is the responsibility of the Northern Ireland Assembly.

Young Offenders

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for how long the convictions of young offenders are held on record; and what is the period after which applicants are not required to declare past offences when applying for public sector employment. [125743]

Mr. Ingram: All records of convictions are held in accordance with the terms of the publication "Weeding Rules for Criminal Records", a copy of which is available in the Library. The period for which young offenders' convictions are retained depends on the age of the person when he was convicted and the seriousness of the offence(s).

A conviction where a person has been sentenced to more than 2½ years imprisonment, or the equivalent, can never become spent. There are employments where spent convictions must be disclosed and professions in which spent convictions may be taken into account in assessing a person's suitability for admission. These are set out in the Rehabilitation of Offenders (Northern Ireland) Order 1978 and the Rehabilitation of Offenders (Exceptions) Order (Northern Ireland) 1979, both of which are also available in the Library.

I am also placing in the Library of the House copies of the booklet "Your Way to a Fresh Start", which explains the operation of the legislation.

DEFENCE

Shipbuilding

Mr. Bradshaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Govan (Mr. Sarwar) of 25 May 2000, Official Report, column 612W, on shipbuilding, what progress has been made on placing the contract for the survey vessels. [127003]

Mr. Hoon: I am pleased to be able to announce that the prime contract for the procurement of two new specialist warships, known as Multi-Role Hydrographic and Oceanographic Survey Vessels, has today been awarded to Vosper Thornycroft (UK) Ltd. The contract includes the provision of 25 years contractor support for the vessels and is worth some £130 million in total over the life of the ships.

Following a competition run by Vosper Thornycroft, the sub-contract to build the ships has been awarded to Appledore Shipbuilders in Devon. The ships, which are due to enter service in 2002 and 2003, will be named HMS Echo and HMS Enterprise.

These important new warships demonstrate our commitment to the modern force structure that emerged from the Strategic Defence Review. They will be equipped with the latest survey systems, and provide a significantly enhanced surveying capability and much improved sea-keeping capability over the vessels which they will replace, which are old and increasingly costly to maintain. They will be part of the Fleet's front-line in a variety of world-wide operational roles, as well as undertaking specialist surveying tasks necessary to the long-term effectiveness of the Royal Navy.
Construction of the new ships will sustain some 500 jobs directly in the shipyard and some 300 in other suppliers, mainly in the local area.

Type 45 Destroyers

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the planned date by which the Principal Anti Air Missile System will be available to install in the first Type 45 destroyer; and if he will make a statement. [124994]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency. I have asked him to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Robert Walmsley to Mr. Paul Keetch, dated 19 June 2000:

I am writing in response to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence with regard to installation of the Principal Anti Air Missile System (PAAMS) in the first Type 45 Destroyer. This falls within my area of responsibility as Chief of Defence Procurement and Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency.

It is planned that the various elements of the PAAMS system (including radars, the vertical launch and below deck equipment) will be installed in the first Type 45 Destroyer by early 2006. This date provides the time required for PAAMS integration, setting to work and trials to support the in-service date for the first-of-class ship of 2007.

Collaborative Procurement Programmes

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on United Kingdom participation in the United States' Future Combat System programme; [125319]

(2) if he will make a statement on the future of the TRACER-FSCS programme. [125318]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency. I have asked him to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Robert Walmsley to Mr. Robert Key, dated 19 June 2000:

I am replying to your questions to the Secretary of State for Defence on the collaborative TRACER/FSCS and the US FCS programmes. These matters fall within my area of responsibility as Chief of Defence Procurement and Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency.

On the future of the TRACER/FSCS collaborative programme, I can confirm that the United Kingdom requirement for a replacement armoured reconnaissance vehicle to form part of the UK's overall battlefield reconnaissance and surveillance capability remains extant. The current phase of the programme is of 42 months duration and is scheduled for completion in July 02. The programme is proceeding to schedule and both participating Governments are pleased with progress to date. In parallel, studies are being conducted to examine the potential use of unmanned air vehicles. The outcome of these studies will be used to inform the UK decision on the optimum mix of platforms, technology and sensors and the role that TRACER would play in the Army's future battlefield information gathering system. Any decision to proceed to the next project phase will be the subject of future national approvals.

A feature of defence procurement is the need to accommodate new, sophisticated systems within the resources expected to be available. Competing demands on available resources inevitably lead to priorities being kept under review. The current budgetary review process in the US, which could have implications for the TRACER programme, is being closely monitored. We are in regular contact with the US DoD on this and their FCS programme. It would be premature at this stage to speculate on the prospect of UK involvement in the FCS programme.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Sittingbourne and Sheppey (Mr. Wyatt) of 5 June 2000, Official Report, column 17W, on Porton Down, if he will make a statement on (a) the species of animals involved in, (b) the number of and (c) the types of, experiments performed by the Chemical and Biological Defence Sector for the US Department of Defense. [125675]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 12 June 2000]: The work being undertaken by the Chemical and Biological Defence Sector, Porton Down, as referred to in my answer provided on 5 June, is being conducted through a contractor for the US Department of Defense. The aim of the work is to produce a fully licensed vaccine against a potential biological warfare agent. Such a vaccine would also be potentially useful in countries where the disease is naturally present. The study at Porton Down involves evaluating the ability of the prospective vaccine to prevent disease and to investigate safety aspects of possible use.

Details of the study are commercially sensitive and I am withholding this information under Exemption 13 of the Code of Practice of Access to Government Information.

Depleted Uranium

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many depleted uranium shells have been fired at hard targets in the Solway Firth from DERA's Kirkcudbright ranges; and what quantity of depleted uranium was used in each of the last five years; [125717]

(2) if he will estimate the amount of depleted uranium particulate dust that has been released as a result of test firings of depleted uranium shells from DERA's Kirkcudbright ranges on hard targets in the Solway Firth in the last five years. [125718]

Mr. Spellar: Although the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA) conducts the depleted uranium (DU) firings at Kirkcudbright, ownership of the range, since 1 April 1997, has rested with the Army.

There have been no deliberate firings of DU at hard targets at Kirkcudbright and, therefore, in the normal course of events there is no release of particulate dust. However, there have been three occasions in the last five years when shells have misfired and hit either the ground or the target gantry. A small amount of DU dust will have entered the atmosphere as a result of these events. Remedial action has been taken in each case and the contamination removed to the satisfaction of the regulatory bodies, the Scottish Environmental Protection Agency(SEPA) and Dumfries and Galloway Council. Air samplers which have been running since 1997 have not detected any particulate DU in the atmosphere above background levels.

A total number of DU shells fired at the range in each of the past five years is as follows:

1996: 147
1997: 749
1998: 134
1999: 111

E-mail

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when (a) the private offices of Ministers in his Department and (b) officials in the Main Building will be accessible by e-mail via the internet. [125809]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 13 June 2000]: Internet e-mail access has been available to Ministers Outer Offices and senior MOD officials since 22 March 1999 via a dedicated MOD Main Building network. This provides web browsing and e-mail for both the Cabinet Office sponsored Government Secure Intranet (GSI), and the internet from a single account at any of the dedicated network workstations. Currently, this network has 104 accounts. This is an interim solution while the Department works to connect its main headquarters IT system, CHOtS, to the GSI and the internet, allowing e-mail only access to the internet for unclassified material.

Work is also in hand to provide web browsing of the internet, using separate workstations on a dedicated RESTRICTED only version of CHOtS, CSV8 Open. CSV8 Open will initially not be able to provide access to the GSI, but work is in progress to establish this link by 4th Qtr 2000.

The provision of the standard CHOtS and CSV8 Open solutions are both subject to the successful completion of pilot testing, currently being undertaken within MOD.

In addition to these initiatives, internet access, where needed and backed by an approved business case, has been provided by stand-alone PCs purchased through an MOD catalogue. These stand-alone internet PCs will either be replaced by the CHOtS initiatives mentioned above or will become part of a fully managed network—the Decant Migration Network (DMN)—which will support CHOtS Open. It is intended that the DMN will be provided when staff move out of Main Building into the decant buildings during its redevelopment.

RAF Neatishead

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when the defence housing at RAF Neatishead was disposed of; and how many dwellings were disposed of; [125567]

(2) when the defence housing at RAF Neatishead was last renovated prior to disposal; and what the cost was of the renovations; [125568]

(3) how much was received by his Department in total and by unit for each house disposed of at RAF Neatishead. [125569]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 13 June 2000]: There are no married quarters sited at RAF Neatishead. Personnel serving at that unit are housed in Service Family Accommodation (SFA) at either nearby Coltishall or Norwich, which has 644 properties available to accommodate families serving at RAF Coltishall, RAF Neatishead and other Service establishments in the area.

The majority of the Married Quarters Estate (some 57,000 properties or 95 per cent. of the total married quarter estate) in England and Wales was sold to Annington Homes in November 1996 on a 999 year lease. The Ministry of Defence retained the freehold. The properties were sold as a package with the receipt of some £1.6 billion going direct to the Exchequer rather than the Ministry of Defence; properties were not individually priced, so no unit cost is available.

Prior to 1996, SFA was managed by the three Services individually, and the costs of maintaining them was included in the wider provision for maintenance of Defence Establishments as a whole. It is not possible therefore to separate the costs incurred in maintaining SFA serving RAF Neatishead prior to the leasehold sale to Annington Homes.

Clothing and Textiles

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what development work is currently being carried out by the Defence Clothing and Textile Agency on new glove designs for the armed forces. [126212]

Mr. Spellar: Development work is being carried out by the Research and Technology Group of DCTA, on four different Glove Designs, as follows:

NBC Protective Outer Glove Mk5

A new glove is being developed to replace the current black rubber NBC Glove Mk2. The new design will give similar protection from chemical warfare agents, but will be thinner and less restrictive in fine handling tasks. Made from synthetic elastomers, it will also be flame-retardant and capable of being coloured. The Mk5 handwear is expected to enter service in 2003.

Gloves, Gauntlet (Household Cavalry Mounted Regiment)

One new Gauntlet being developed to replace two Gauntlets at present in service. It will be a combined pattern of the present gloves, and will rationalise the present materials employed.

Gloves, Combat Mk11

The present in-service glove is a complicated construction, made up of many components. It is difficult to make and is believed to be over specified for the use to which it is put. Trials of new designs, materials and constructions are underway, together with trials of several other gloves for comparative purposes.

Male and Female Parade Dress Gloves

At present, there are least 12 to 14 types of parade gloves in Black, Brown and White. It is hoped these can be reduced to two basic styles in Black, Brown and White by rationalising patterns, materials and fastening systems.

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) which companies, and from which countries, submitted bids for the contract for the Mark II Combat glove; [126216]

(2) for what reasons Feuchter was awarded the contract to supply the Mark II Combat glove; [126209]

(3) what is the value of the contract to supply the armed forces with the Mark II Combat glove; how many pairs have been ordered; and from which companies; [126215]

(4) what visits personnel from his Department made to foreign factories and manufacturing outlets during the process of awarding contracts for the Mark II Combat glove; [126213]

(5) what representations he has received about the quality and fit of the Mark II Combat glove. [126211]

Mr. Spellar: The current DCTA contract awarded to Feuchter for the supply of the Mark II Combat glove was placed in November 1998 (reference: STIA/1279) following competitive tender action. Complaint bids were received for the subject contracts from the following companies:

Feuchter Gmbh and Co KG, Bavaria, Germany
Burfield and Co (Gloves) Ltd., Martock, Somerset, UK
Vaughan Tapscott Gloves, Torrington, Devon, UK
Southcombe Brothers Ltd., Stock-Sub-Hamdon, Somerset, UK

DCTA's Quality of Product Support branch have made several visits to the companies tendering for the contracts for Mark II Combat gloves. During the period May 1997 to April 1999, a total of three visits were made to Zova, the sub-contractor used by Feuchter. One of these visits was specifically to scrutinise manufacturing processes for the Combat gloves. Records exist of visits to two other firms involved in the tendering process for these contracts: three visits have been made to Burfield and Co (Gloves) Ltd. since 1997, and two have been made to Southcombe Ltd.

The contract was split between the two lowest tenders: Feuchter Gmbh and Co KG for the quantity of 163,877 pairs, and Burfield and Co (Gloves) Ltd., for the quantity of 41,800 pairs. While Burfield submitted the cheapest priced offer, their tender had stated that they did not have the capacity to produce the full DCTA requirement in the timescale required. They were, however, given the contract for the maximum quantity which their tender had specified, which was the 41,800 pairs. As Feuchter had submitted the next lowest tender, and had stated that they had the capacity to meet DCTA's requirement, they were awarded the contract for the remainder of the requirement.

The total value of current contracts for the Mark II Combat gloves is £5,198,384. The breakdown of values and quantities is as follows:

Feuchter Gmbh and Co KG
Total value: £4,108,804
Quantity: 171,977 pairs
(Contract ST1A 1279)

Burfields and Co
Total value: £1,089,580
Quantity: 48,300 pairs

Both contracts included an option for supply of a further 7,500 pairs of Mark II Combat gloves (total 15,000 pairs) for delivery in Financial Year 2000–01 and therefore is a further option in the contracts for Financial Year 2001–02.

Although reports were received by DCTA of a little tightness of fit being experienced in the early stages of production of the Mark II Combat gloves, no items necessitated rejection or return to place of manufacture. The reporting of defective items is facilitated by Defect Reports, which are raised by users of products in the three Armed Services. There are no records of any Defect Reports having been received for the Mark II Combat glove.

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what assessment his Department makes of the past record and experience of clothing and textile manufacturers in competition for clothing contracts; and if he will make a statement; [126210]

(2) what account his Department takes of security of supply considerations when deciding to acquire clothing and textiles from foreign suppliers. [126214]

Mr. Spellar: DCTA have confirmed that full account is taken of Clothing and Textile manufacturers' past records and experience in terms of delivery, quality performance and price competitiveness, both at the time firms are considered for award of an Invitation to Tender and when considering competitive bids received.

As part of the procurement strategy for any clothing item, the overall risk assessment comprises many elements. The risks are managed as a series of processes, one of which includes a review of past performance of potential suppliers. All potential suppliers are subjected to the same consideration of providing evidence of operating an accredited quality system. This is usually satisfied through ISO 9000 registration. This risk reduction mechanism is used throughout the Ministry of Defence as part of the approved NACNOC policy.

In addition, in light of the Government's recent announcement of a 12 point plan for the UK Textile and Clothing Industry, I will be reviewing our current procurement policies.

Gulf War Syndrome

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of recent evidence from the USA on the correlation between chemical cocktails and Gulf War Syndrome. [126043]

Mr. Spellar: I will assume my hon. Friend is referring to the research undertaken by Dr. Abou-Donia of Duke University, North Carolina, which was mentioned in a recent BBC radio programme. Dr. Abou-Donia examined the interaction of Pyridostigmine Bromide (PB), (the active ingredient of Nerve Agent Pre-treatment Sets tablets) with permethrin and DEET (N-Diethyl-m-toluamide), two non-organophasphate pesticides used during the 1990–91 Gulf Conflict. Dr. Abou-Donia published his findings in an article entitled, "Neurotoxicity Resulting from Coexposure to Pyridostigmine Bromide, DEET and Permethrin: Implications of Gulf War Chemical Exposures" in the Journal of Toxicology and Environmental Health in April 1996. The research had a number of significant limitations: the doses administered to the animal subjects were in quantities and in a manner very different from that which Service personnel may have experienced; there were no data to support the suggestion that PB inhibits the metabolism of DEET and permethrin; the dosage route and schedule of administration of chemicals were different to those Service personnel may have experienced; and the toxicities experienced by animals were acute in nature whereas many veterans' health concerns have emerged months, or more, after their service in the Gulf.

A further study addressing the interaction of PB and DEET entitled "Acute effects of an Insect Repellent, N, N-Diethal-m-toluamide, on Cholinesterase Inhibition Induced by Pryidostigmine Bromide in Rats" by Chaney et al from the University of Mississippi Medical Center was published on 1 June 2000. I will write to my hon. Friend once my Department has reached a considered view of this work and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Defence Electronic Commerce Service

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will announce the placement of a contract for the Defence Electronic Commerce Service IT system. [124797]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 7 June 2000]: I announced on 30 May that Cap Gemini Ernst & Young has been selected as the preferred supplier of the Defence Electronic Commerce Service to the MOD. Subject to a successful conclusion to negotiations, we hope to place a contract under PPP arrangements, and commence delivery of the service, in early July.

Sea Harrier Aircraft

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what replacement air to surface ship strike capability he plans to procure for Sea Harrier aircraft. [125082]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 8 June 2000]: There are no plans to procure a replacement air to surface ship strike capability for Sea Harrier aircraft.

UAVs

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the Army's original inventory was of Phoenix UAVs; what the current inventory is; and what plans he has to procure (a) further Phoenix UAVs and (b) next generation UAV systems for the armed forces. [125704]

Mr. Spellar: Nine complete Pheonix systems with 198 Air Vehicle Taxis (ACTs) and 198 Air Vehicle Pods (AVPs) were originally purchased for the Army. Currently the Army has nine systems, 177 AVTs and 182 AVPs. There is currently no plan to procure further Pheonix AVTs or AVPs. We propose to let contracts in the near future to examine possible solutions for delivering the future tactical UAV capability.

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the purchase cost is of each of the Army's Phoenix UAVs; how many Phoenix UAVs were lost in operations during the Kosovo campaign; when the Phoenix UAVs entered into (a) trials and (b) operational service with the Army; and how many Phoenix UAVs have been lost since they have been in operational service. [125703]

Mr. Spellar: The contract for Phoenix UAVs was awarded in 1985 on a firm price basis. The cost of the individual UAVs was £164,000 plus VAT, exclusive of design and development costs.

Ten Phoenix UAVs were lost or destroyed during operations in support of the Kosovo campaign in 1999. A further three UAVs have since been lost during operations in Kosovo in 2000.

Phoenix UAVs entered into trials with the Army in the early nineties. These were completed in July 1997. Phoenix was formally accepted into service in December 1998.

Over 200 missions have been flown in the 18 months since Phoenix entered service. During this period a total of 16 Phoenix UAVs have been lost or destroyed (13 during operations and three in training).

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of (a) Phoenix UAVs used by UK forces and (b) UAVs utilised by other NATO nations during the Kosovo campaign. [125705]

Mr. Spellar: Operational reports have indicated that Phoenix is effective as a general reconnaissance and surveillance system. Its real-time imagery capability proved of considerable benefit in a wide variety of tasks including campaign analysis and safe surveillance over and beyond suspected mined areas. Detailed assessment of the system is continuing.

The utility and effectiveness of the Phoenix system in 1999 was recognised by the headquarters of KFOR, who asked for the system to return to theatre, which it did in May this year.

It would not be appropriate for us to comment on the effectiveness of equipment used by our Allies.

Sierra Leone (Malaria)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he was first informed that armed forces personnel contracted malaria in Sierra Leone; and if he will make a statement. [126057]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 15 June 2000]: I was first informed on 26 May that Service personnel deployed to Sierra Leone had contracted malaria. At that time, there were seven confirmed cases among personnel who had deployed there.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many troops deployed to Sierra Leone returning to the UK have so far been diagnosed as having signs of malaria; and if he will make a statement. [125190]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 9 June 2000]: As of 12 June, 27 cases of malaria had been confirmed among the 4,500 personnel who had been deployed to Sierra Leone; a further three unconfirmed cases had been admitted to hospital for investigation. No anti-malaria tablet guarantees 100 per cent. protection: mefloquine, the preferred anti-malaria drug for the Sierra Leone region, is estimated to afford only 90–95 per cent. protection against malaria. In West Africa, where rates of transmission for malaria are far higher than in any other region, some cases of malaria are to be expected. Therefore the number of cases confirmed are within the medically expected numbers.

Former Personnel (Private Sector Employment)

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the conditions that apply to senior officials from his Department applying to join private sector companies. [126021]

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his policy is on former personnel of the Defence Procurement Agency and Defence Clothing and Textile Agency joining commercial organisations with which they had dealings as civil servants. [126208]

Dr. Moonie: Under the Cabinet Office rules on the acceptance of outside appointments by Crown servants, all Ministry of Defence non-industrial civilian staff and officers in the Armed Forces are required, within two years of leaving the Department, to apply for permission before taking up employment with an organisation connected with their official duties or with a foreign government or foreign publicly-owned organisation. In addition, senior officials are required under these rules to apply for permission to take up any paid employment on leaving the Department.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) senior Ministry of Defence officials and (b) officials from his Department's procurement organisation have joined private sector companies in the last five years. [126020]

Dr. Moonie: Under the Cabinet Office rules on the acceptance of outside appointments by Crown servants, all Ministry of Defence non-industrial civilian staff and officers in the Armed Forces are required, within two years of leaving the Department, to apply for permission before taking up employment with an organisation connected with their official duties. The rules only require senior officials whose applications are approved by the Prime Minister to confirm that they have taken up a new appointment on leaving the Ministry of Defence. Records of applications form such officials are only readily available from 1 January 1998, which show that 14 have notified Ministry of Defence that they have taken up appointments in the private sector.

Northern Ireland

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 5 June 2000, Official Report, column 15W, concerning the mission statement of the Army in Northern Ireland, what his definition is of the normality to be restored; and on how many occasions the mission objective has been reviewed since the Belfast Agreement. [126221]

Mr. Hoon: Normality, in the context of the Army's mission statement, is the ability of the RUC to carry out their duties without support from the armed forces.

There has been no requirement to review the mission statement since the Belfast Agreement. However, the level of support provided to the RUC to fulfil that mission is regularly reviewed and has reduced substantially since the Belfast Agreement.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the use of informants by military intelligence officers operating in Northern Ireland is governed by Home Office guidelines. [126222]

Mr. Spellar: I am withholding this information under Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

BAe 146

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the airworthiness directives his Department has issued relating to BAe 146 aircraft operated by No. 32 (The Royal) Squadron of the RAF about (a) engine icing and (b) the ingestion of fumes from the engines into the cabin. [125987]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 14 June 2000]: RAF BAe 146 flight crew, including those of 32 (The Royal) Squadron, adhere strictly to the limitations imposed by the manufacturer on flight above 26,000 feet in known or forecast icing conditions. They are also fully aware of the advice offered by BAe Systems on action to take in the event of ingestion of engine fumes into the cabin. There have been no reported problems of either kind on RAF BAe 146 aircraft.

Service Personnel (Medical History)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made with the project to issue every serviceman and women with an ID tag which will record on the chip current medical history including inoculations and current medication. [126052]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 15 June 2000]: The possible development of an ID tag or card to store medical information electronically is being considered in the context of plans to provide the Defence Medical Services with a comprehensive and integrated information system.

Service Accommodation

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from the Army Families Federation regarding the quality of housing available to service families. [126508]

Dr. Moonie: The Chair of the Army Families Federation wrote to the Secretary of State for Defence at the beginning of November 1999 on the importance of investment in housing. The Chairs of the Service family associations raised this with my hon. Friend the Minister for the Armed Forces in the Families Forum of the Service Families Task Force on 15 November 1999. My hon. Friend reiterated the MOD's commitment to the upgrade programme for Service family accommodation, recognising its importance to Service families. The issue was also raised at the Army Families Federation Conference on 26 May 2000 where my hon. Friend said that around 60 per cent. of Service Families Quarters were categorised as Standard 1 or close to it (this means that each property meets a series of strict criteria covering factors such as energy efficiency, double glazing and modern bathroom facilities); that approximately 2,400 properties had been upgraded or rebuilt during the financial year 1999–2000 (630 above target); that by the end of that year some £200 million had already been spent on Service family accommodation; and that a minimum of over £60 million would be invested in the programme in the current year.

Service Families (Anti-depressants)

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the quantities of anti-depressants prescribed to members of service families by MOD medical facilities in each of the last five years. [126510]

Dr. Moonie: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Bilateral Defence Relations (Czech Republic and Poland)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on joint working with (a) Poland and (b) the Czech Republic on military matters; and how many United Kingdom personnel are working in (i) Poland and (ii) the Czech Republic on training and related matters. [125379]

Mr. Spellar: The UK has developed strong bilateral defence relationships with the Czech Republic and Poland. We co-operate on a range of activities designed to support what they themselves are doing to achieve full integration with NATO. This includes provision of places for both nationalities at the Royal College of Defence Studies, as well as providing English language training and organising other staff exchanges and visits. Another example is the development of links between the Czech and British Army units assigned to the Allied Command Europe Rapid Reaction Corps.

We place great value on the practical co-operation we have enjoyed with the forces of the Czech Republic in operations in the Balkans. We are also proud of our involvement with the Poland-Ukraine Peacekeeping Battalion which has included joint exercising taking place successively in all three countries over the last few years.

The number of UK military personnel in either the Czech Republic or Poland at any given time is not held centrally.

Internet Access

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when all military personnel will have access to the internet in (a) Bosnia, (b) Cyprus, (c) Incirlik (Turkey), (d) Kuwait, (e) Saudi Arabia, (f) Sierra Leone, (g) the Falkland Islands, (h) Brunei, (i) Germany and (j) Gibraltar. [125785]

Mr. Spellar: Personnel in Cyprus, Brunei, Germany and Gibraltar have access to internet facilities via local service providers, as do the majority of personnel in the Falkland Islands. Personnel serving in Incirlik, Kuwait and Saudi Arabia also have access to e-mail and internet facilities via the US forces NIPRNET service.

Currently, internet access is available only for approximately 800 personnel deployed in the Banja Luka area of Bosnia. Full internet access is planned to be available to all personnel, except those serving in dispersed locations such as the hilltop sites (approximately 200 individuals), by the end of August 2000.

We have no plans to provide internet facilities for personnel serving in Sierra Leone.

Anglo-Irish Meeting

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the name and rank were of the person who arranged the meeting on 30 July 1974 in the Republic of Ireland, described in his answer of 19 July 1999, Official Report, column 424W; and what were the name, rank and unit of each person who accompanied Major Peter Maynard. [126223]

Mr. Spellar: I understand that this informal meeting was arranged and attended by a mutual acquaintance. I am withholding further details in accordance with exemptions 4, 12 and 14 of Part II of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Naval Procurement Contracts

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many naval procurement contacts for military vessels were made with Scottish yards in each of the last 10 years. [125573]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 14 June 2000]: In the last 10 years the following contracts for new RN or RFA vessels have been placed where the construction is being/has been undertaken in Scottish yards:

Vessel	Order date	Prime contractor	Ship yard location
Royal Naval Vessels
3 x Type 23 Frigates	January 1992	Yarrow Shipbuilders Ltd.	Scotstoun
Landing Platform Helicopter—HMS Ocean[1]	May 1993	Kvaerner Govan	Govan
3 x Type 23 Frigates	February 1996	Yarrow Shipbuilders Ltd.	Scotstoun
10 x Landing Craft Utilities Mk10	May 1998	BAe SEMA	Ailsa Troon
Royal Fleet Auxiliary Vessels
Auxiliary Oiler[2]	March 1997	Marconi Marine (VSEL) Ltd.	Govan

[1] The order for HMS Ocean was for the construction of the Hull, propulsion and Domestic systems and excluded the fitting of the weapon systems

RAF Feltwell

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 13 June 2000, Official Report, column 559W, on RAF Feltwell, how many visits, during each of the last five years, were made to RAF Feltwell by (a) hon. Members, (b) Members of the House of Lords, (c) members of the US House of Representatives, (d) members of the US Senate and (e) representatives of the US Government. [126601]

Mr. Spellar: The Ministry of Defence has no record of any visits by hon. Members or by Members of the House of Lords. The Ministry of Defence does not maintain records of visits by representatives of the US Government or members of the US House of Representatives or US Senate.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 13 June 2000, Official Report, column 559W, on RAF Feltwell, on how many days in each of the last 12 months RAF personnel visited RAF Feltwell; and what was the last date on which RAF personnel were stationed at RAF Feltwell. [126600]

Mr. Spellar: RAF Feltwell falls within the administrative responsibility of the RAF Commander Lakenheath who regularly visits the base in the course of his day to day duties. The last RAF personnel to be based at RAF Feltwell were members of the 204th Signals Unit, which disbanded on 17 March 1975.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 5 June 2000, Official Report, column 22W, on RAF Feltwell, what was the costs to the RAF of the administration of RAF Feltwell for each of the last five years. [126602]

Mr. Spellar: RAF Feltwell is administered as part of RAF Lakenheath and as such the cost of its administration cannot be separately quantified.

European Convention on Human Rights (Cyprus)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Kingston-upon-Hull North, of 9 June 2000, Official Report, column 388W, for what reason the European Convention on Human Rights is not extended to the sovereign base areas in Cyprus. [126291]

Mr. Spellar: The Sovereign Base Areas are retained solely for military purposes, and it has therefore been considered inappropriate to include them in the notifications of the extension of the European Convention on Human Rights.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Oilseed Rape

Mr. Brake: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what studies he has commissioned into the medical impact on the population of planting of oilseed rape; what controls are applied to planting of oilseed rape; and if he will make a statement. [125396]

Ms Quin: The most recent study funded by MAFF was conducted by the Medical Research Council Institute for Environment and Health (IEH), University of Leicester. This took stock of UK and foreign research and was held in conjunction with medical experts to review the epidemiological studies and consider what, if any, further research was needed.

The study concluded from the available evidence that sensitisation to oilseed rape pollen alone, in the absence of sensitisation to other pollens or other common allergens, appeared to be rare.

There are no legal restrictions on the growing of oilseed rape. Oilseed rape is widely grown in the UK and in other member states. It forms part of a cereals rotation and is a valuable crop in its own right.

GM Crops

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to rescind permission for planting and growing GM crops on farms contaminated with GM products through the planting of oilseed rape. [123764]

Ms Quin [holding answer 5 June 2000]: None. Farmers do not need permission to grow conventional crops and the GM rapeseed involved in the recent incident was planted inadvertently. The Government could act in relation to the growing of the affected rapeseed crops or others only if there were a risk to public health or the environment. The Government have been advised that this is not the case.

We have, however, explained carefully the position regarding potential marketing of the affected crop, and the arrangements we have secured in relation to entitlement to AAPS payments to farmers.

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what the outcome was of the visit to Canada by a departmental seeds expert to investigate the production of contaminated oilseed rape seeds by Advanta; and if he will make a statement. [126097]

Ms Quin [holding answer 19 June 2000]: We are considering the findings of the visit to Canada. Further investigations are being carried out by the Canadian Authorities.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the cost to the UK of its funding of the Common Agricultural Policy in 1999. [125982]

Ms Quin: The United Kingdom contributes to the EU budget as a whole, and not to any particular part. The budget for 1999 was set at euro 85.5 billion (around £59 billion), of which the CAP accounted for euro 40.5 billion (around £28 billion). The UK's contribution to the overall EU budget was 12.68 per cent., after the effect of the Fontainebleau abatement was taken into account.

Upper Mole Flood Plain

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reasons the Environment Agency has not provided copies of the Upper Mole Flood Plain Study and associated maps, known as the Babties report, to members of Reigate and Banstead Borough Council; and when these will be made available. [126058]

Mr. Morley: The Environment Agency issued maps of the "100 year" floodplain for the Upper Mole and main river tributaries to Reigate and Banstead Borough Council in April 1999. The Agency expects the associated final report from Babties to be delivered in about three weeks; a copy will be provided to the council. It will be available to residents with whom a further meeting is planned for 4 July.

Farm Incomes

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what changes took place in average farm incomes in real terms in each year from 1988 to 1999 in the deciles of the (a) largest and (b) smallest farms. [126000]

Ms Quin [holding answer 15 June 2000]: The information is available only for full-time farms. Average Net Farm Incomes, in real terms, of full-time farm businesses in England for the deciles are given in the table. Estimates for the years before 1990–91 are obtainable only at disproportionate cost. Farm income estimates for 1999–2000 will be available early in 2001.

Net farm incomes of full-time farm businesses in real terms (at 1999–2000 prices) England

Farm Subsidies

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of subsidies to farmers in each of the past five years was distributed to the deciles of (a) the largest and (b) the smallest farms. [126001]

Ms Quin [holding answer 15 June 2000]: The information is obtainable only at disproportionate cost.

Horticulture (North-west)

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of job losses in the horticultural industry in the north-west consequent upon the introduction of the climate change levy. [124595]

Ms Quin [holding answer 15 June 2000]: It is not possible to say with precision what the effect of the climate change levy on the horticulture industry in the north-west will be, as this will depend, among other things, on the extent to which horticultural businesses in the region make use of the various incentives offered under the levy to improve energy efficiency. Further, subject to State Aids clearance from the European Commission, a specific package to help the horticulture industry has been announced.

BSE

Mr. Drew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent discussions he has had with the United States (a) Department of Agriculture and (b) Food and Drugs Administration on comprehensive risk analysis relating to BSE. [123391]

Ms Quin [holding answer 23 May 2000]: None.

PRIME MINISTER

Serbia

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will hold discussions with the Government of Bulgaria about the lifting of sanctions against Serbia. [124405]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 14 June 2000]: The Government are in regular contact with the Bulgarian government on a wide range of issues. I have no immediate plans to hold talks with the Bulgarians specifically on this subject.

Daily Press Briefings

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister what his policy is in respect of attendance at daily press briefings by his official spokesman. [126802]

The Prime Minister: My Official Spokesman is responsible for ensuring the press are briefed regularly; either by him, or his press office team.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will place in the Library his correspondence with Pamela Dix of the Lockerbie relatives on the Lockerbie Trust. [126252]

The Prime Minister: I have not written to Pamela Dix.

Central Railway

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 8 June 2000, Official Report, column 355W, on Central Railway, when members of the Number Ten Policy Unit met representatives of Central Railway. [126540]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 8 June 2000, Official Report, column 355W.

Poverty

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the recent UNICEF report on Poverty in The United Kingdom. [126570]

The Prime Minister: This report shows that in the last 20 years child poverty has trebled in the UK. The data used in the report relate to 1995 and reflect the situation under the previous administration.

I have already made a commitment to eradicating child poverty within 20 years, and halving it within 10. The report confirms this government have made a very good start and that the measures we have already announced will lift around one million children out of poverty by 2002.

The report also highlights the importance of work for those who can as the best way of reducing child poverty. We are already tackling this through the New Deals, the Working Families Tax Credit and the minimum wage. Increases in the income-related benefits and Child Benefit will help those for whom work is not yet an option. By the end of this parliament we will be spending £7 billion extra on families with children.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Higher Education

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what the trend is in (a) numerical and (b) percentage terms of applications for higher education places from social classes L11, L6, L7, L3, L5 and L4; and what assessment he has made of which changes in Government policy are affecting the trends. [125181]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 9 June 2000]: The available information on full-time students is contained in the following table, and covers only those who apply to full-time and sandwich undergraduate courses through the Universities and Colleges Admissions Service (UCAS); data on the family background of applicants to part-time courses are not held centrally.

UK domiciled applicants to full-time and sandwich undergraduate courses in the UK

[1] Excluding applicants with unknown social class

This Government are committed to ensuring that everyone who is capable of benefiting from higher education will have the opportunity to do so. Widening participation on a sound basis requires policies across a broad front, from improving school performance through to funding formulae that target help on those students that need it most. This is a complex area and the results will not be immediate. We will of course continue to monitor applications in order to evaluate the longer term impact of our action.

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list for each institution of higher education in Great Britain the (a) total budget and (b) amount of budget deficit for each year since 1995 for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [126176]

Mr. Wicks: The income and expenditure of each higher education institution in Great Britain is set out in "Resources of Higher Education Institutions" published annually by the Higher Education Statistics Agency. Copies are in the Library of the House.

Commonwealth Students

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many commonwealth students are studying at universities in the UK for whom the UK has contributed towards the cost of college fees. [125766]

Mr. Wicks: The UK Government currently contribute towards the costs of college fees, and in some cases maintenance, for 2,037 commonwealth students at UK universities. There are five main Government schemes open to commonwealth students, as listed. The first three are exclusively for commonwealth students. In addition, there are a number of scholarship schemes operated by recognised charities from which commonwealth students may benefit.

	Number of commonwealth students 2000
Commonwealth Scholarship and Fellowship Plan (DFID/FCO)	843
DFID Shared Scholarship Scheme (DFID/Universities)	170
Montserrat Emergency Award Scheme (DfEE)	171
British Chevening Scholarships (FCO)	502
Overseas Research Students Awards Scheme (DfEE)	351

Disabled People

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what discussions he has had with local education authorities in the Greater London area to ensure that all possible assistance is given to enable disabled people to enter further and higher education; and if he will make a statement. [125765]

Mr. Wicks: Local education authorities are active in securing the transition of young people with special educational needs, including many disabled young people, from school to further and higher education. They must have regard to the Code of Practice on the Identification and Assessment of Special Educational Needs, which sets out a transition planning process to support this group of learners. A revised Code will come into effect in September 2001 which will set out strengthened arrangements. These arrangements will, in part, be informed by provisions in the Learning and Skills Bill, which should receive Royal Assent in July.

The Bill includes a range of provisions to improve the learning opportunities available for people with learning difficulties and disabilities, including their transition from school to other learning. In addition, the Government are committed to legislate as soon as Parliamentary time allows, in response to the Disability Rights Task Force's recommendations in respect of further and higher education, which featured in its report published in December 1999.

Over half of local education authorities in England, Wales and Scotland have responded to the recent consultation exercise on how those recommendations should translate into specific legal rights and duties. Those responses will help inform and refine the legislation.

Connexions Service

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what will be the role and responsibilities of (a) personal advisers, (b) learning mentors and (c) Connexions advisers in the Connexions Service; and to whom each will be contractually accountable. [125865]

Mr. Wicks: The document "Connexions: The best start in life for every young person" published in February this year contained information on the role and responsibilities of the personal adviser working within the Connexions Service. We have started work on developing the new profession for personal advisers and this week we aim to publish the consultation document, "Connexions Service: Professional Framework for Personal Advisers—proposals for consultation" asking for views on the profession. This document outlines proposals for a comprehensive training programme which aims to ensure that personal advisers have the appropriate skills and knowledge for the role and meet agreed standards for the profession.

Learning mentors work alongside teaching staff and are responsible for helping pupils to overcome barriers to learning both inside and outside the school. They are employed in schools covered by the Government's Excellence in Cities initiative and report to the headteacher or a member of the senior management team. Learning mentors are available to all secondary age pupils who need them and they devote the majority of their time to those individuals needing extra support in order to realise their full potential.

We will be asking for Connexions Partnership to include in their proposals information about which organisations will employ personal advisers. We expect some personal advisers will be employed directly by the Connexions Service, some will be seconded from partner organisations and some will be employed by organisations which hold a subcontract or franchise for the delivery of some Connexions services.

Education Action Zones

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans the Government have to announce a third bidding round for Education Action Zones; and if he will make a statement. [125960]

Ms Estelle Morris: We have no current plans for a third bidding round for Education Action Zones.

Pupils (Expenditure)

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list for (a) Great Britain and (b) each local education authority the real terms expenditure per pupil for (i) 1979, (ii) 1990 and (iii) each year since 1992 for which figures are available. [126177]

Ms Estelle Morris: The information requested is not readily available. I will write to the hon. Member when I am able to reply and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Leeds LEA

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the statutory functions that will remain with Leeds Local Education Authority under the new arrangements for education services announced on 14 June. [126823]

Ms Estelle Morris: The announcement on 14 June of a new joint venture company to deliver education services to schools in Leeds, set out the broad framework for the way forward. Detailed discussions will continue as to precisely which statutory functions will transfer to the new company to allow it effectively to discharge its responsibilities for service delivery and increasing attainment.

Computers for Teachers Scheme

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many applications he has received under the Computers for Teachers scheme from schools in Bury, North; and how many refund payments have been made within one month of the submission of the application; [124770]

(2) how many applications he has received under the Computers for Teachers scheme; how many refund payments have been made within one month of the application; how many refund payments are still pending; and what is the current average length of time for making refund payments. [124771]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 14 June 2000]: Data relating to the number of applications from constituency areas are not held centrally.

The Computers for Teachers scheme has been very popular and early indications are that over 27,000 computers have been purchased under the scheme from the authorised suppliers. The scale of the response has unfortunately meant that there have been delays in processing payments. The Department very much regrets these delays and has taken urgent action to put in place measures which will ensure that:

Any teacher who submitted a claim which was received in the Department before 12 May will either have their claim cleared for payment or have been contacted to resolve any issue related to their claim, by 23 June. It should be noted that "cleared for payment" means that the payment will have been entered into the BACS system and will then take between three and 10 days to clear into an individual's bank or building society account.

Any teacher whose claim was received in the Department between 13 and 31 May will have their claim cleared for payment or will be contacted by 30 June.

Any teacher whose claim was received in June will have their claim cleared for payment or will be contacted within the four week timescale originally anticipated.

Music Colleges

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if the (a) Royal Academy of Music, (b) Royal College of Music, (c) Trinity College of Music, (d) Royal Northern College of Music, (e) Birmingham Conservatoire, (f) Guildhall School of Music and Drama and (g) Leeds College of Music has its own concert hall. [126034]

Mr. Wicks: Trinity College of Music performs at a variety of venues including the South Bank Centre, and St. Johns, Smith Square, London but will have its own concert hall when it moves to the Old Naval College Greenwich. Leeds College of Music also performs at a number of venues.

All the other named institutions have their own concert halls.

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much capital investment the (a) Royal Academy of Music, (b) Royal College of Music, (c) Trinity College of Music, (d) Royal Northern College of Music, (e) Birmingham Conservatoire, (f) Guildhall School of Music and Drama and (g) Leeds College of Music has received in each of the last five years for which information is available. [126050]

Mr. Wicks: The funding for these institutions comes from a variety of sources both public and private. Information on the total amount of capital investment received by each of the specified institutions is not available centrally.

Further Education Funding Council

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will publish the Treasury rules on economic appraisal of projects as they apply to the Further Education Funding Council's capital programme. [126049]

Mr. Wicks: The Further Education Funding Council (FEFC) assesses applications for capital support for projects submitted by further education colleges against a range of criteria based on the Treasury's guide for Government departments. The Guide is called "Appraisal and Evaluation in Central Government Departments—A Treasury Guide" and is a published document available from the HMSO.

British Association for Early Childhood Education

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much grant his Department has paid to the British Association for Early Childhood Education in each of the last four years; and how much is being paid in the current year. [125974]

Ms Hodge [holding answer 15 June 2000]: The Department has provided the following financial support to the British Association for Early Childhood Education (BAECE) since 1996:

Early education grant

1996–97	44,180
1997–98	51,413
1998–99	51,300
1999–2000	59,112
2000–01	90,000
Total	296,005

Learning and Skills Council

Mr. Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to ensure that schools and colleges are represented on learning and skills councils. [126278]

Mr. Wicks: Appointments to the Learning and Skills Council and its local councils will be merit-based following open competition. We intend to appoint members who have understanding and experience of the wide variety of interests in post-16 education and training, including people with experience in a senior capacity in schools and further education.

Nursery Education

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many nursery schools have closed in each of the last three financial years in each local education authority; and how many closures of nursery schools are currently being proposed by local education authorities. [119491]

Ms Hodge [holding answer 17 April 2000]: The maintained nursery schools that have closed in the financial years 1997–98, 1998–99 and 1999–2000 are listed in the tables, copies of which have been placed in the Library. There are no proposals for nursery school closure currently under consideration as far as the Department is aware. All the nursery school closures were linked to the establishment of alternative nursery units at other schools except one where the nursery school was closed as there were surplus nursery places in the area.

The nursery schools that have closed over the three years represent 4.6 per cent. of the total number of nursery schools in England. Since 1997, four new nursery schools have been established. An extra 8,297 four-year-old places have been created since 1997.

HEALTH

Meat Hygiene Service

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps the Meat Hygiene Service takes to ensure that there are no conflicts of interest affecting the work of Official Veterinary Surgeons. [122046]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 15 May 2000]: I am advised by the Food Standards Agency that, all official veterinary surgeons (OVSs) working on behalf of the Meat Hygiene Service (MHS) are contractually obliged to avoid any conflicts of interest. Any allegations of potential conflicts will be fully investigated by the MHS and appropriate action taken.

In addition to this, all OVSs have to be Members of the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons and as such are bound by the stringent ethical obligations placed upon them by their professional Codes of Practice.

Vaccinations

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what childhood vaccinations have been withdrawn on safety grounds since childhood vaccinations were started. [122159]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 15 May 2000]: The childhood vaccination programme predates the modern licensing system for medicines. Comprehensive records are not available for this entire period.

In the last decade no vaccines have had their licences withdrawn owing to safety issues. However, in September 1992, following concerns of a possible association between the Measles, Mumps, Rubella vaccines which contained the Urabe mumps vaccine strain, and aseptic meningitis, all vaccines containing this strain were replaced in the vaccination programme. Vaccines containing this strain were recalled and no further vaccine has been supplied to the National Health Service.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence his Department has evaluated on a causal link between routine vaccination and brain-damage. [122911]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 19 May 2000]: The Medicines Control Agency and Committee on Safety of Medicines continuously monitor the safety, quality and efficacy of all medicines including vaccines. For vaccinations, the independent expert advisory committee, the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation also considers issues relating to vaccination policy, including safety and efficacy. The evidence evaluated includes data from spontaneous reports from the yellow card scheme, the published medical literature, pre- and post-marketing clinical trials and epidemiological studies.

Evidence does not support a causal association between any of the recommended childhood vaccines and long-term damage other than the risk of vaccine—associated paralytic polio which occurs in one out of approximately every million immunisations.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children have suffered brain damage following a routine vaccination in each year since 1990; and if he will break this figure down by the vaccine given in each case. [124763]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 7 June 2000]: Since 1990, there has been one case of brain damage and one case of mental handicap reported to the Medicines Control Agency/Committee on Safety of Medicines following vaccination in United Kingdom children aged 12 years or under.

The case of brain damage was reported in association with measles, mumps and rubella in 1996. The case of mental handicap was reported in 1995 following polio immunisation.

Spontaneous reports are of suspected adverse drug reactions: they do not necessarily mean that the drug is the cause of the reaction.

Ms Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the health authority areas in the UK where the MMR vaccine can be administered in single doses. [125804]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 13 June 2000]: Delivery of Measles, Mumps and Rubella as three separate vaccines has never been recommended in the UK. Single antigen measles and mumps vaccines are not licensed in the UK. The importation of unlicensed single antigen measles and mumps vaccines is restricted by Medicines Control Agency under the Medicines Act. As a result the Department is not aware of any health authority which either recommends or gives MMR as three separate vaccines.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the procedures for trials of new vaccines. [126256]

Yvette Cooper: Before new vaccines can be studied in human subjects in the United Kingdom, approval should be sought from the Medicines Control Agency by submitting relevant scientific data to the Agency for evaluation. Applicants are obliged to report any serious unexpected adverse reaction associated with the administration of the product.

Water Fluoridation

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the research projects funded by his Department since 1990 that have investigated the causes of mottling, opacities and dental fluorosis in children and young adults; [124641]

(2) when he last met representatives of the water companies in England and Wales; and what matters were discussed; [124621]

(3) what plans he has to restrict or control the ingestation of fluoride, mouth washes and dental floss by (a) adults and (b) children; [124640]

(4) what plans he has to amend sections 87 to 91 of the Water Industry Act 1991; and if he will make a statement; [124620]

(5) if he will commission research into the incidence of hip fractures in women aged 50 to 64 years in (a) fluoridated and (b) unfluoridated areas in England and Wales. [124622]

Yvette Cooper: The Department has commissioned the National Health Service Centre for Reviews and Dissemination, at the University of York, to conduct a systematic review of the evidence on the safety and efficacy of fluoride in drinking water. The review will cover studies on hip fractures, including studies undertaken in the United Kingdom. It is expected to report in July. We will review policy on fluoridation including any need for further research and advice on the use of topical fluoride in the light of the report's conclusions.

The Department has not funded any recent research projects into the causes of mottling, opacities and dental fluorosis in children and young adults, but the systematic review is covering these matters.

I met with the chief executive of Water UK on 24 May to discuss the progress of the review.

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has commissioned into the fluoridation of water and the intake of fluoride from sources other than water; and if he will make a statement. [124882]

Yvette Cooper: The fluoride concentration of drinking water, whether occurring naturally at levels up to the maximum permitted concentration of 1.5 milligrams per litre, or artificially supplemented to a concentration of 1 milligram per litre, principally affects dietary intake of fluoride through consumption of tapwater, and of domestically-prepared soft drinks, beverages and meals. The intake of fluoride from retail food is estimated from the UK Total Diet Study. The estimate from data gathered between 1978 and 1980 is included in Chapter 36 of Department of Health Report on Health and Social Subjects 41 "Dietary Reference Values for food energy and nutrients for the United Kingdom" (sixth impression and later revisions, 1994 onwards). Copies are available in the Library. The Food Standards Agency has recently completed a survey of fluoride levels in the 1997 Total Diet Study and will report the results in full once they have been assessed.

The Department has commissioned the National Health Service Centre for Reviews and Dissemination, at the University of York, to conduct a systematic review of the evidence on the safety and efficacy of fluoride in drinking water, which is expected to report in July.

Oral Cancer

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to reduce (a) the incidence of and (b) the mortality rate for oral cancer; and if he will make a statement. [124471]

Yvette Cooper: Some cases of oral cancer are linked to smoking, the chewing of tobacco and betel quid and heavy alcohol consumption.

The reduction of smoking is one of our top priorities and a number of measures are in place including up to £50 million new money for a major campaign to shift attitudes and change behaviour and up to £60 million new money for National Health Service smoking cessation services.

We are funding a number of voluntary organisations to produce ethnic minority health materials aimed at improving information on oral cancer including material on paan chewing with tobacco which is widespread among Bangladeshi communities.

We plan to publish a consultation paper later this year prior to the publication of a national strategy on alcohol misuse.

From October 2000, all patients suspected of having oral cancer should be given an outpatient appointment within 14 days of their general practitioner making an urgent referral. The National Institute of Clinical Excellence is expected to produce guidance for commissioners of head and neck cancer services in 2002.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many patients are waiting for admission to hospital, broken down by specialty and health authority area; and if he will make a statement; [124418]

(2) how many patients are waiting for admission to hospitals in each health authority in England for (a) child health treatment, (b) cancer treatment, (c) cardio-thoracic treatment, (d) treatment of the elderly, (e) general medical treatment, (f) general surgery and urology and (g) neurosurgery and neurology; and if he will make a statement. [124419]

Mr. Denham [holding answers 6 June and 7 June 2000]: All the available data are published on the Department of Health website at www.doh.nhsweb.nhs.uk/nhs/waitingtimes and in the Library in the quarterly publication entitled: "Hospital Waiting List Statistics: England (Responsible Population Based) Quarter Ended 31 March 2000". The latest data are for the end March 2000.

Hepatitis C (Norwich)

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to tackle the problems of the hepatitis C infection in Norwich among intravenous drug users; and if he will include hepatitis C infection in a general programme on blood-borne viruses. [124889]

Yvette Cooper: Norfolk health authority funds specific initiatives to prevent and control blood-borne viruses, including hepatitis C, among injecting drug misusers. These initiatives include needle exchange schemes; outreach services; an immunisation programme against hepatitis B; information and advice on preventing blood-borne virus transmission; testing for hepatitis B, hepatitis C and HIV; and training and guidance for health professionals.

We recognise that blood-borne viruses, in particular hepatitis C, are a public health issue in relation to injecting drug misusers. We are therefore commissioning research specifically about hepatitis C and injecting drug misusers, who currently form the largest source of new cases.

We have also asked the National Institute of Clinical Excellence (NICE) to consider the use of combination drug therapy (interferon alpha plus ribavirin) for the treatment of hepatitis C. NICE is also looking at evidence-based clinical guidelines for the management of patients with hepatitis C. NICE's recommendations, which are due this autumn, and the clinical guidelines will provide authoritative guidance to health care commissioners and clinicians.

Hereford Hospital

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received over the number of acute beds for the new Hereford hospital; and if he will make a statement. [125128]

Yvette Cooper: The British Medical Association Herefordshire Division held a meeting on 31 May at which I understand it was agreed they would write to me asking me to review the provision of hospital beds in Herefordshire.

The important issue for the health service in Herefordshire is the number of patients who need to be treated and the appropriateness of their care. In line with this the services and bed provision for Herefordshire have been reviewed, validated and agreed between the health authority, acute trust, and the community health council.

The agreed plan for Herefordshire has two key elements: consolidating split site acute services and investing in intermediate care in rural and city locations. Intermediate care investment includes provision of modern community hospitals at Ledbury and Kington, additional community health staff, fast response hospital-at-home teams and joint use of re-ablement beds with the local authority.

The report of our National Beds Inquiry, set up to review assumptions about the demand for inpatient care and the implications for hospital bed numbers, was published for consultation on 10 February 2000. Consultation will focus on how health services, and specifically hospital beds, should be developed over the next 10–20 years.

Abortion Clinics

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many complaints he has received against abortion clinics in the past year; which clinics were concerned in each case; and what the nature of each complaint was. [125408]

Yvette Cooper: The Department has only received one complaint in the last year and as this is currently being investigated it is inappropriate to comment further.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the fees that are paid to private abortion clinics for the receipt of fetal tissue by NHS organisations. [125407]

Yvette Cooper: No fees are paid to private abortion clinics. The "Code Of Practice On The Use Of Fetuses And Fetal Material In Research And Treatment" issued by the Department in July 1989 states there should be no monetary exchange for fetuses or fetal tissue.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what statutory provisions govern the disposal of the bodies and organs of induced-aborted babies. [125405]

Yvette Cooper: Before 24 weeks gestation, there are no specific legal requirements but we recommend that full account be taken of any personal wishes that have been expressed about disposal of foetal tissue. If appropriate the options available should be raised with parents especially where there is an identifiable body at later gestations. If no personal wishes have been expressed foetuses should be incinerated.

Terminations carried out after 24 weeks gestation (the legal age of viability) are registered as stillbirths and the law requires the body to be buried or cremated.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the abortion clinics which send fetal tissue to the fetal tissue banks at (a) the Medical Research Council based at Hammersmith Hospital, (b) the Institute of Child Health, London and (c) the University of Newcastle upon Tyne. [125406]

Yvette Cooper: The Marie Stopes Park View Clinic supplies foetal tissue to the Medical Research Council tissue bank based at Hammersmith Hospital. No abortion clinics supply foetal tissue to the other tissue banks listed.

Meningitis C

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of (a) the average cost to the NHS of treating someone with meningitis C, (b) the number of people who were treated in the last year for meningitis C by the NHS, (c) the annual cost of treatment for meningitis C by the NHS and (d) the cost of giving one vaccination for meningitis C, including (i) costs of publicising the availability of the vaccine and (ii) other costs for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [125035]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 9 June 2000]: The average cost per hospital admission for a patient with meningococcal Group C disease is estimated at £3,200. However, information on the full cost of National Health Service treatment, including post- and pre-hospital admission costs and the cost of caring for those patients with long term sequelae arising from meningococcal Group C disease, is not available.

In the year July 1998 to June 1999 there were an estimated 1,500 cases of meningococcal Group C disease in England and Wales; about 150 of these patients died.

The cost of meningococcal Group C vaccine is commercially confidential. However, at the end of the current meningococcal Group C immunisation programme we hope to be able to give an aggregate cost for the whole programme including vaccine purchase, distribution, implementation, information and publicity.

The new meningococcal Group C conjugate vaccine is already having a welcome effect on this deadly disease. Early reports show that the number of cases of meningococcal infection in those groups who have been immunised has been dramatically reduced, with a reduction on the expected number of cases of around 75 per cent. The United Kingdom is the first country in the world to benefit from this new vaccine, putting the UK in the forefront of tackling this devastating disease and signalling a great success for the NHS.

Influenza

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of (a) the average cost to the NHS of treating someone with influenza, (b) the number of people treated for influenza in the last year by the NHS, (c) the annual cost of influenza treatment by the NHS and (d) the cost of giving one vaccination for influenza, including (i) the costs of publicising the availability of the vaccine and (ii) other costs for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [125036]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 9 June 2000]: It is not possible to give an exact cost to the National Health Service of treating someone with influenza, as the information recorded relates solely to the cost of a hospital episode for respiratory illness, not just influenza. The latest data available, which are for 1997–98, average that cost at £1,900.

The number of admissions to NHS hospitals in England coded as influenza for the financial year 1998–99 was 2,281. This will not include all admissions due to influenza which may be categorised as, for example, respiratory illness.

There is no breakdown of costs to distinguish between flu and other respiratory illnesses and therefore cost of influenza on the NHS cannot accurately be identified.

General practitioners order their own vaccines direct from manufacturers. The cost of giving an influenza vaccination would vary from practice to practice. There are five vaccines to choose from varying in price from £3.99 to £5.70 for winter 1999–2000. On top of the vaccine price, under the personal administration scheme a GP will also receive 10.5 per cent. of the list price and around £1 for each vaccine given. Information on the costs of publicity for influenza vaccine across the NHS is not collected centrally.

Waiting Lists (Gloucestershire)

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many patients on NHS waiting lists in Gloucestershire have left them to be treated privately in each of the last five years for which figures are available; [125545]

(2) how many patients in Gloucestershire died while on NHS waiting lists in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [125538]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many patients in Gloucestershire were on NHS waiting lists in each month during the last five years for which figures are available; [125536]

(2) how many patients in Gloucestershire had been waiting for their operation for more than (a) six months and (b) one year in each month during the last five years for which figures are available. [125537]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is shown in the table. Gloucestershire Health Authority intend that by the end of 2000–01 no Gloucestershire resident will be waiting longer than nine months for treatment at local National Health Service trusts and no longer than 12 months at trusts elsewhere in the country.

NHS National Plan

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consultations prior to his recent consultation exercise he has had with (a) the Grimsby and Community Health Council and (b) the National Association of Community Health Councils concerning the future policies and operation of the National Health Service; and what part he expects them to play in his current consultation process. [125384]

Yvette Cooper: Community health councils have the statutory right to be consulted about major services changes planned for their districts. Since we took office, the North East Lincolnshire Community Health Council, which is based in Grimsby, has been consulted about two proposed trust mergers, a review of acute services in the district and the proposed closure of a hospital in a neighbouring district. In common with the rest of the population the Council has had the opportunity to provide comments on the National Health Service for consideration as we work towards our National Plan.

We are in regular contact with the National Association of Community Health Councils in England and Wales and there have been many opportunities for them to contribute to the development of policy for the National Health Service. They have submitted their views as part of the national consultation exercise.

St. George's Hospital, Tooting

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many ward beds are available at St. George's Hospital, Tooting. [125986]

Mr. Denham: Bed data for individual hospitals are not collected centrally. The data are collected annually at NHS trust level, rather than by individual hospitals or site. NHS trusts provide healthcare but may provide it at more than one site.

St. George's Hospital is part of the St. George's Hospital NHS Trust. The average daily number of available beds for the St. George's Hospital NHS Trust during the period 1998–99 was 1,037.

Primary Care Groups

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what formal channels of communication exist between primary care groups in the West Midlands and other primary care groups (a) locally, (b) regionally and (c) nationally. [125680]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 12 June 2000]: From the outset primary care groups (PCGs) have recognised the importance of working together both formally and informally.

The East Midlands is not recognised as a designated health region. However, in the West Midlands PCG chief officers and chairs, as well as board members, contribute to local working groups on clinical governance, health improvement, and commissioning as well as other functional areas. A local forum for chief executives and chairs of PCGs meet on a regular basis in Coventry.

In addition, PCG officers attend quarterly network meetings and PCG nurse board members hold bi-monthly network meetings across the West Midlands depending on availability of appropriate venues.

There are currently no formal channels of communication for PCGs at national level, but a number of networking developments have been well received. PCGs moving to primary care trust status this year have had the benefit of a national development network and I understand that PCGs in the West Midlands were part of the Northern network.

Many PCGs took up the opportunity to participate in the national primary care collaborative and one of the successful applicants from the West Midlands was Coventry East.

The National Health Service at all levels is making increasing use of e-mail and websites to facilitate communications.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice he has issued to primary care groups about local health information campaigns. [126102]

Mr. Denham: Primary care groups are expected to work with other local health and partner organisations to tackle local and national health priorities identified in the Health Improvement Programme. In doing so, they will need to play a full and appropriate role in local campaigns to inform and educate their local populations about health and health services.

Confidentiality

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the safeguards in place to protect the confidentiality of personal genetic and similar information. [125731]

Yvette Cooper: Personal genetic information held in confidence, as with other confidential information, is protected by law. Health professionals also have ethical duties imposed by their regulatory bodies and the majority of National Health Service staff have equivalent contractual obligations. The Human Genetics Commission has indicated that it will be examining the protection of genetic data as a priority in its work programme.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he gives to health trusts on the confidentiality of patient records under the Data Protection Act 1998. [126085]

Mr. Denham: Guidance on patient confidentiality, issued by the Department to trusts in March 1996, remains relevant and in force. Consideration will be given to whether amendments or additional guidance are needed. Department officials are discussing the implications of the new Act with the Data Protection Commissioner's office.

Air Ambulance Services

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the funding of air ambulance services. [125958]

Ms Stuart: The need for helicopter air ambulance services is a matter for local health economies as the case for supporting these from public funds has not been made. Professor Jon Nicholls' report "The costs and effectiveness of helicopter emergency ambulance services", commissioned by the Department of Health, did not show benefits to justify National Health Service investment. The position will be reviewed if any further evidence is presented. A copy of this report has already been placed in the Library.

Hospital Infections

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of death arising from hospital infection were recorded in 1999; and what estimate he has made of the number of deaths amongst patients discharged from hospital caused by infection acquired whilst in hospital in the same period. [126188]

Mr. Denham: There are no centrally held statistics on deaths caused by hospital acquired infections (HAIs). The role which any HAI might play in a patient's death is a matter for the clinical judgment of the doctor concerned.

Outpatient Appointments

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many outpatient appointments were (a) missed by patients and (b) cancelled by hospitals in the most recent year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement; [126090]

(2) what the annual cost was to the NHS of outpatients failing to keep appointments in the most recent year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [126089]

Mr. Denham: During 1999–2000, 1,454,000 patients failed to attend a first outpatient appointment following referral by their general practitioner. Data on the numbers of outpatient appointments cancelled by National Health Service trusts are not collected centrally.

The Department does not collect data on the cost of missed outpatient appointments, but the number of appointments missed suggests that the cost to the NHS is significant.

We are committed to improving the reliability and convenience of care for all patients. This is why we are investing £40 million this year to extend the national booked admissions programme. The programme allows patients to book hospital appointments or admission dates in advance at times that are convenient to them. Pre-booking in this way leads to demonstrable improvements in the numbers of hospital appointments missed by patients and the numbers of appointments cancelled by both the patient and the hospital.

Cervical Cancer Screening

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans he has to implement hydrolysised DNA assay testing for cervical cancer screening; and if he will make a statement; [125965]

(2) what advice he has received from the Advisory Committee on Cervical Cancer Screening on the effectiveness of hydrolysised DNA assay testing. [125966]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 14 June 2000]: The Advisory Committee on Cervical Screening (ACCS) discussed the hydrolysised DNA assay (HDA) test developed by Dr. Andrew Sincock of King's College, and funded by Quest Cancer Research, at its meeting on 26 May 2000. Three members of the committee agreed to view a demonstration of the test at King's College, with a view to reporting back to the committee when it next meets. The Chairman of the ACCS will shortly be writing to Quest to make the appropriate arrangements.

We welcome any new technology that would improve the effectiveness and efficiency of the cervical screening programme. However, before any technology is introduced we must be sure that it is safe and effective, and that quality standards can be maintained.

By establishing the National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE), we have taken responsibility for helping to clarify, both for patients and professionals, which technologies are clinically and cost effective. If a technology is likely to have a significant impact on patient care or National Health Service resources, Ministers may refer the technology to NICE after consultation with leading professionals.

NHS Census

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 12 June 2000, Official Report, column 468W, how many NHS census replies he has received to date (a) on tape and (b) by dictation over the telephone; [126184]

Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the cost to public funds of the recent NHS census, including printing, distribution, posting, processing and analysis and publication of the results. [126180]

Mr. Denham: I refer the hon. Members to the reply given to the hon. Members for Worthing, West (Mr. Bottomley) and for Gosport (Mr. Viggers) on 15 June 2000, Official Report, columns 671–72W.

Sexual Health

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whom the Government have consulted on the development of a sexual health strategy for young people. [126100]

Yvette Cooper: The Integrated Sexual Health/HIV Strategy will set a programme of action on sexual and reproductive health and HIV for England, for the whole population. A wide range of stakeholders have been involved in the development of the strategy, including a written consultation with health professionals working in the field, meetings with the Royal Colleges, professional organisations and other key players. There have also been specific consultations with young people, black and ethnic minority groups and gay men and lesbian women.

A draft strategy will be issued for consultation in the autumn.

Correspondence

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will send a substantive reply to the letter sent to him by the hon. Member for North Thanet on 18 May concerning Mrs. A. Richardson and Miss Carrie Richardson. [126328]

Mr. Hutton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply to his letter of 18 May as soon as possible.

NHS Dentistry

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the revenue to the NHS from charges for (a) NHS dental examinations and (b) NHS dental treatments for the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [126060]

Mr. Hutton: In 1999–2000 patient charge revenue in the General Dental Service in England for (a) dental examinations was about £75 million and for (b) all dental treatments (including examinations) was £432 million. Patient charges are paid direct to the dentist, with the gross fee payable to the dentist reduced accordingly.

Dental examinations and treatments for children are free. About a quarter of adults do not pay or pay a reduced amount for their National Health Service dental care.

Opticians

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the revenue to the NHS from charges for (a) examinations and (b) prescriptions by opticians for the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [126061]

Mr. Hutton: There are no charges for National Health Service sight tests or prescriptions for spectacles. People ineligible for free NHS sight tests pay for a private test. Where children under 16 and people on low incomes are prescribed glasses they are entitled to an optical voucher which they may use to pay for spectacles from a basic range or put towards a more expensive pair of their own choice.

Medical Training Costs

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the total cost (a) to his Department and (b) in total of training a medical student for one year for (i) pre-clinical training and (ii) clinical training; and if he will make a statement. [126063]

Mr. Denham: The Department meets the additional costs to hospitals and general practices of supporting the clinical training of medical students from the Service Increment for Teaching (SIFT) levy. In 2000–01 the average SIFT cost per student for each of the three years of clinical training is £46,157 in London and £37,202 outside London. In allocating funding to universities, the Higher Education Funding Council for England (HEFCE) assumes a total resource of £5,462 per year for each full-time equivalent student studying pre-clinical medicine and £12,290 per year for each full-time equivalent student studying clinical medicine. The HEFCE's assumptions on total resource include the statutory £1,050 full-time undergraduate fee which is usually paid by the student, but may be paid by the local education authority after means-testing.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many medical students entered NHS employment and what was the cost to his Department of training those students, in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [126062]

Mr. Denham: Data on the number of students taking up employment in the National Health Service are not held centrally. However, for the year ending July 1999, the latest date for which figures are available, 3,097 students graduated from English medical schools. In 1999–2000 the Department of Health made funding available to support approximately 3,400 newly qualified doctors at a cost of £74.5 million through the medical and dental education levy.

Hospital Bed Costs

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average unit cost to the NHS of a new hospital bed in (a) an existing district general hospital, (b) a new district general hospital paid for exclusively by public money, (c) a new district general hospital paid for exclusively by private money and (d) a new district hospital paid for through a PFI scheme; and if he will make a statement. [126059]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not held centrally but an indicative capital cost of creating a new hospital bed place in a new hospital is approximately £325,000 (excluding Value Added Tax) at current prices. The cost includes the capital construction cost, equipment costs and professional fees incurred as well as a proportion of the costs of the supporting services within the new hospital such as operating theatres, outpatient departments, accident and emergency services, catering, office accommodation, public areas, pharmacy, pathology and radiology. It does not include the running costs necessary to make the bed operational, such as staffing, linen or cleaning.

Every hospital is designed to meet specific local needs, so no two will be the same, and future hospitals may have different functions and departments. It is not therefore possible from available information to give the average capital cost of providing a new bed in an existing hospital. The cost of upgrading or adapting an inpatient ward within an existing hospital should not exceed a maximum of 70 per cent. of the cost of new provision and would generally be a much lower percentage.

Under private finance initiative rules it is the responsibility of consortium bidders to cost an overall design, construction and service solution. One element of this will be the number, type and layout of hospital beds. Because costing and pricing factors will vary between PFI projects to reflect factors like design innovation, greenfield build or refurbishment and competitive pressures in the private sectors supply chain, it is not possible to provide a unit cost for a hospital bed built under PFI.

NHS Trust Budgets

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each NHS trust in Great Britain the (a) total budget and (b) amount of budget deficit, for each year since 1995 for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [126109]

Mr. Denham: National Health Service trusts are not given budgets. They are required to break even, on an income and expenditure basis, taking one year with another.

Information on NHS trust deficits in England will be placed in the Library.

The information relating to Wales and Scotland is a matter for the devolved administrations.

Child Protection

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if his Department's register of sex offenders outlined in the Protection of Children Act 1999 will include British sex offenders who are known to have been convicted abroad; [126778]

(2) what measures he is taking to ensure that British citizens who sexually abuse children are not able to escape registration under the Protection of Children Act 1999 by travelling overseas. [126780]

Mr. Hutton: There is nothing in the Protection of Children Act 1999 which would preclude a child care worker from being referred to the Secretary of State for possible inclusion in the list to be maintained under that Act in circumstances where he has been dismissed, or has otherwise left his position, related to a conviction for sexual abuse against children committed abroad.

If a decision is taken to include a person on the list to be kept under the Protection of Children Act 1999 the name will remain on the list irrespective of where the person lives or travels.

As regards the wider question of British sex offenders convicted abroad, Part I of the Sex Offender Act 1997 does not at present require such offenders to register with the police on their return to this country. The Home Office will shortly be starting a major policy review of the Act and this question will be looked at very carefully as part of that review.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CCTV Cameras

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee in what circumstances CCTV cameras are installed in hon. Members' offices. [126313]

Sir Sydney Chapman: No CCTV cameras are, or ever have been, installed in hon. Members' offices. Installation of such cameras in an hon. Member's office would be done only with the consent of the hon. Member concerned, and with the personal authorisation of the Serjeant at Arms.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Magistrates Courts Committees

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the predicted weighted case load and cash limit allocation for 2000–01 for each magistrates courts committee ranked by cost per case on the weighted case load used in the grant formula. [126465]

Jane Kennedy: The formula for distributing revenue grant is currently under review. The cash allocation for 2000–01 and 1999–2000 was distributed using the same proportion of the available funds as allocated for 1998–99. The weighted case load was therefore based on 1997–98 figures. Additional payments were made in cases of hardship. Weighted case load accounts for 35 per cent. of the cash allocation. The cash limit allocations by MCC are in table A, the latest cost per case information is in table B. Cash allocations are not based on cost per case. We aim to complete the review of the grant formula so that a new formula is applied to the 2001–02 allocation. We will be consulting stakeholders on the elements that should constitute the formula.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Domestic Utility Bills

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what were the average annual domestic bills for (a) electricity and (b) gas in the Yorkshire region for each of the last three years broken down by (i) direct debit, (ii) standard quarterly credit and (iii) pre-payment meter payment methods. [126078]

Mrs. Liddell: Average annual domestic bills[1] for (a) electricity and (b) gas in cash terms in the Yorkshire region[2] for each of the last three years are as follows:

[1] Averages are weighted by customer numbers and based on all companies operating in the region.

[2] Figures are those for the Yorkshire Electricity distribution area and the North East Transco distribution zone.

	Payment method
	Direct debit	Quarterly credit	Prepayment meter
Electricity[1]
1997	250	263	289
1998	244	250	281
1999	242	246	281
Gas[2]
1997	307	329	348
1998	277	315	331
1999	268	304	319

[1] An annual consumption level of 3,300kWh has been assumed. Customers with electric central heating are likely to consume considerably more electricity.

[2] Annual consumption level of 18,000kWh has been assumed.

These figures are published annually in the Department's annual "Digest of UK Energy Statistics" and in the "Energy Report".

Assisted Areas Map

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many regional map applications for assisted area status were rejected by the European Commission on first application by Her Majesty's Government in (a) 1997, (b) 1998, (c) 1999 and (d) 2000. [125351]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 9 June 2000]: No regional map applications for assisted area status were rejected by the European Commission on first application for any of the years in question.

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry for what reason he withdrew the proposed map conferring assisted area status on North Staffordshire. [125352]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 9 June 2000]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Trade to my hon. Friend the Member for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Kilfoyle) on 10 April 2000, Official Report, column 38W.

Postal Services

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the impact of European Commission proposals to liberalise postal markets on domestic user costs. [125598]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 12 June 2000]: The Government support greater liberalisation of the postal market however, it is important that the scope and pace of liberalisation does not undermine the universal service. As recommended by the Trade and Industry Committee we have given responsibility to the new Postal Services Commission to bring forward proposals on future liberalisation of the market in the context of its role to ensure the maintenance of the Universal Service.

Synchrotron

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the plans of Her Majesty's Government to co-operate with the French Government on the building of a new synchrotron in France; where it will be built; and what the cost to Her Majesty's Government will be. [124784]

Mr. Byers: Her Majesty's Government have no plans to co-operate with the French Government on the building of a new synchrotron in France.

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when discussions were last held concerning United Kingdom involvement in synchrotron investment in France; who was present at those discussions; and what was their content. [126439]

Mr. Byers: The issue of a possible French synchrotron was raised when my noble Friend the Minister for Science met with the French Minister for Research in Paris on the 5 May 2000. The discussions were of a general nature and in the context of the overall European requirement for large-scale scientific infrastructure. No specific proposals were discussed and no commitment was made concerning UK Government funding.

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when were discussions last held with French representatives concerning French involvement in synchrotron investment in the United Kingdom; who was present at these discussions; and what their content was. [126440]

Mr. Byers: The last discussions concerning French involvement in the New Synchrotron project were held on the 22 May 2000 at the Rutherford Appleton Laboratory.

The discussions involved officials representing the three partners in the project and wide representation of the user communities. The discussions covered the detailed management arrangements to be put in place to take the project forward and a range of related technical issues.

US Traffic and Arms Regulations

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the benefits to the UK of being granted special status under the US International Traffic and Arms Regulations; and if he will make a statement. [125382]

Dr. Howells: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence on 15 June 2000, Official Report, columns 667W-68W.

Limited Liability Partnerships

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consultations he has had with PricewaterhouseCooper and Ernst & Young about the legislation they prepared for limited liability partnerships in Jersey; and what parts of that legislation he has incorporated in the Limited Liability Partnerships Bill [Lords]. [125426]

Dr. Howells: There have been no such consultations; and, while we are aware of the Jersey legislation on limited liability partnerships, this has not provided a model for the Limited Liability Partnerships Bill.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if bankrupts under restriction orders as proposed in his White Paper on bankruptcy will be able to become partners in limited liability partnerships. [126038]

Dr. Howells: Under the proposals referred to, the restrictions currently imposed on bankrupts will apply for the duration of the restriction order. As a consequence those subject to restriction orders will not be able to act in the management of a limited company or as a member of a limited liability partnership.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry by what means persons reported to the Insolvency Agency by insolvency practitioners as unfit will be prevented from participating in limited liability partnerships. [126046]

Dr. Howells: Section 7(3) of the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986 requires insolvency practitioners to report unfit conduct by directors to the Secretary of State. That requirement will exist where insolvency practitioners find misconduct by members of limited liability partnerships.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the assets of an insolvent business will be eligible for re-use by its former management trading on the basis of a limited liability partnership. [126037]

Dr. Howells: Provided an insolvent business enters formal insolvency proceedings, then those assets will fall within the estate of the insolvent business, subject to any security held by creditors over those assets. The office holder has a duty to realise those assets in such a way that returns to creditors are maximised. If the failure of the business is not the directors' fault, there was no misconduct and they pay the best possible price for the assets, then they should not be prevented from running a successor business utilising those assets.

Where assets have been transferred with the intention of putting them out of reach of its creditors then the "claw-back" provisions currently found in the Insolvency Act 1986 will apply.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry by what means he will prevent individuals under the individual voluntary arrangements as envisaged in his White Paper "Bankruptcy: A Fresh Start", from being allowed to become partners in limited liability partnerships. [126039]

Dr. Howells: Undischarged bankrupts are disqualified from acting in the management of a limited company by virtue of section 11 of the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986. It is intended that this disqualification be extended to include acting as a member of a limited liability partnership.

The majority of persons subject to individual voluntary arrangements (IVAs) are not bankrupt and are not therefore subject to this restriction.

The proposals in the White Paper to which the question refers are for the automatic annulment of the bankruptcy on the agreement to the IVA proposal by the creditors. This would then leave the member in the same position as if the bankruptcy order had not been made and they would therefore not be precluded from acting as a member of a limited liability partnership. However, it is likely that there would be a requirement for measures to deal with anyone failing to stick to the terms of his/her IVA. This might include the reinstatement of the bankruptcy order against them.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if Company Voluntary Arrangements as provided for in his Insolvency Bill will apply to limited liability partnerships; and what measures he proposes to stop companies operating under a Company Voluntary Arrangements transferring to limited liability partnership status. [126041]

Dr. Howells: The Insolvency Bill does not specifically refer to limited liability partnerships. However, limited liability partnerships will be able to enter company voluntary arrangements (CVAs).

A company that is subject to a CVA is subject to a court procedure. It is likely that the conversion to a limited liability partnership would require the revocation of the CVA prior to any conversion. In considering this application the court would consider whether the aims of the CVA were best served by the company being able to convert.

Small Businesses

Mr. Pollard: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent measures he has taken to increase the ability of small businesses in the United Kingdom to trade competitively in European markets. [126018]

Mr. Byers: The Government have been working closely with our European partners to improve the environment for small businesses within the European Union. The Lisbon Economic Summit in March made significant progress in this area when agreement was reached to:

draw up a European Charter for Small Firms to respond specifically to their needs; simplify the regulatory environment at both national and community level; create a Community Patent which is simple and inexpensive to obtain; and update public procurement rules with the particular aim of making them more accessible to SMEs.

The European Charter for Small Firms is due to be endorsed at the Feira Council this week. It will send out a clear signal that the European Union is serious about bringing about an environment in which small firms and entrepreneurship can flourish. The Charter will pledge action by the Commission and the member states which addresses the specific needs of small business in the above areas, as well as in others such as skills, taxation and finance, and business support.

The DTI continues to focus much of its efforts on helping business, including small business, to access markets in Europe.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the base level is against which his Department's public service target for 2002 of increasing the productivity and profitability of small and medium sized enterprises assisted by the Small Business Service is to be measured. [125921]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 14 June 2000]: This Public Sector Target states that DTI will increase the productivity and profitability of Small Business Service' assisted small and medium sized enterprises (SMEs) relative to all SMEs by 1 per cent. per annum from a base level of 12 per cent. for productivity and 14 per cent. for profitability.

This target relates to businesses assisted by the Business Links and was established on the basis of the findings of the Business Link Value for Money Evaluation (1998).

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what actions his Department is taking to achieve its key priority for 2000–01 of reducing the burden of regulation on small businesses; and what the criteria are for evaluating success. [125911]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 14 June 2000]: The Small Business Service (SBS) has a particular duty on behalf of small businesses to examine regulatory proposals put forward by Government Departments to ensure that they do not impose an unnecessary or disproportionate burden on small businesses. This will be achieved by promoting the "think small first" principle. The SBS will also ensure that compliance is made easier through the provision of comprehensible and accessible guidance and that the enforcement regime is appropriate.

By 2001, the SBS will establish a Regulation Index of the impact of regulation on small business. This will measure the cumulative burden of regulation on small businesses, will inform priorities for simplification and will determine the future criteria for minimising the burden of red tape.

In addition, my Department will continue to look for opportunities to remove unnecessary burdens in the legislation for which we are responsible. For example we are increasing the statutory audit threshold for companies from £350,000 to £1 million. This will apply to financial periods ending on or after 26 July, and should benefit up to 150,000 companies.

BA-KLM Merger

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he plans to refer the proposed merger between BA and KLM to the competition authorities. [126218]

Dr. Howells: I understand that BA and KLM have announced that they were entering into provisional talks but that they have not yet reached any agreement. Until they do it is not possible to say which competition rules will apply.

Science Base

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the overall international ranking has been of the United Kingdom's science and engineering base in terms of quality, relevance and cost-effectiveness in each of the last four years. [125923]

Mr. Caborn [holding answer 14 June 2000]: Comparisons at an international level are complicated by the different organisational structure within each country corresponding to the UK Science and Engineering Base, and hence rankings have to be treated with some care. We are continuing to refine our data, but the currently available information in terms of the following measures for the G7 countries (Canada, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, UK and US) is given in the table for the years 1994 to 1997, the latest year for which information is available for all the countries.

	Quality	Relevance	Cost effectiveness
1994	2	1	1
1995	2	1	1
1996	2	1	1

Notes:

1. Quality—total number of citations to papers originating from the UK, or having at least one author in the UK.
2. Relevance—Proportion of funds for Higher Education Research and Development (HERD) from non-Government sources.
3. Cost-effectiveness—papers published per £1 million of science base expenditure.

E-commerce

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the sectors in which e-commerce impact studies to help small businesses connect to the digital marketplace are to be carried out in 2000–01. [125969]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 15 June 2000]: Thirteen studies are under way, (steel; chemicals; aerospace; metal forming and finishing; downstream gas; upstream oil and gas; biotechnology; motor vehicle retailing; clothing supply chain; furniture; exhibitions and events; telecommunication services and electronics manufacturing).

Further studies, in sectors still to be decided, will begin in the second half of the year.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the estimated cost is of the multi-channel marketing campaign to help small businesses connect to the digital marketplace; and when the campaign will be implemented. [125975]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 15 June 2000]: The budget has been agreed for the multi-channel marketing campaign for this financial year is £1.0 million. A similar amount has been earmarked for the following two financial years. Staff have recently been recruited to implement this campaign and are currently prioritising which channels DTI should be working with. The campaign will start to be delivered over the remaining months of this financial year through different channels as joint plans are agreed.

This activity results from one of 60 recommendations in the 'e-commerce@its.best.uk' report. Progress on these recommendations is published regularly on the e-envoy's website www.e-envoy.gov.uk and more detail is given under 'Marketing' on the Information Society Initiative website www.isi.gov.uk.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to ensure his European Union partners renegotiate WTO rules in respect of animal welfare; and if he will make a statement. [126515]

Mr. Caborn: The UK fully supports the EU approach, as set out in the conclusions of the General Affairs Council on 25 October 1999, that commits the EU to take forward the issue of farm animal welfare in WTO negotiations. The UK and EU will press for this objective in the work of the WTO, including the agriculture negotiations which have started this year.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will (a) raise his target for electricity generated from renewable resources and (b) remove waste incineration from the Government's definition of renewable energy. [126275]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government have the target of obtaining 10 per cent. of UK electricity from renewable sources by 2010, against a current figure of just under 3 per cent., subject to the cost of this being acceptable to consumers. The target set is challenging, and the Government have no plan to raise it.

We do not intend to exclude energy from waste incineration from our definition of renewable energy. Wastes produced by households, industry and commerce pose a difficult problem. Our draft national waste strategy provides for waste reduction, materials recycling and energy recovery. Where there is no better alternative, using waste materials to produce energy can reduce environmental problems and at the same time save fossil fuels.

Insolvency

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to introduce (a) legislation and (b) a code of practice that will prohibit accountants acting as a reporting accountants for banks from acting as receivers and liquidators of the businesses upon which they have reported. [126483]

Dr. Howells: The question of whether reporting or investigating accountants should be permitted to accept subsequent appointment as administrative receivers of the company concerned has been considered by the working group established to undertake a review of company rescue and business reconstruction mechanisms. The report of the working group will be published for further consultation in due course.

A bank does not have any inherent right to appoint a liquidator. Where the company is insolvent, this is usually a matter for the general body of the company's unsecured creditors.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the fees collected by the receivers and liquidators of BCCI. [126491]

Dr. Howells: The liquidators of Bank of Credit and Commerce International SA in England and Wales make an annual report to the Secretary of State pursuant to Regulation 14 of the Insolvency Regulations 1994. The report is made up to the anniversary of the making of the winding up order against the company. The latest report submitted covers the period to 15 January 1999 and shows that the total liquidators' remuneration paid to that date was US$244.5 million. Such remuneration has been approved either by the court or the Liquidation Committee of creditors.

A report for the period to 15 January 2000 is expected to be submitted shortly. Copies of the liquidators' report are available to creditors of the company.

Electrical Safety

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what changes have been made to (a) the Plugs and Sockets etc. (Safety) Regulations 1994 and (b) the Electrical Equipment (Safety) Regulations 1994 since their implementation; and if he will make a statement. [126023]

Mr. Alan Johnson [holding answer 15 June 2000]: The information is as follows:

(a) The Plugs and Sockets etc. (Safety) Regulations 1994 are national Regulations and no amendments have been made since they came into force. However, the Regulations recognise that British Standards that are referenced in the Regulations may need to be revised or amended from time to time and they therefore make provision for such reference to be construed as a reference to the revised or amended standard where the amendment or revision has been approved by the Secretary of State. Ministerial approval of the revision of a number of British Standards was granted in 1998. The Department will be initiating a review of the Plugs and Sockets etc. (Safety) Regulations 1994 before the end of the year, and will be consulting with industry and other interested parties.

(b) The Electrical Equipment (Safety) Regulations 1994 implement into UK law the European Council Directive 73/23/EEC, normally referred to as the Low Voltage Directive. No amendments have been made to the Electrical Equipment (Safety) Regulations 1994 since they came into force, and as the appropriate measures are in place I have no plans to review the Regulations.

Mobile Phones

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he plans to take to inform consumers about technical matters including the absorption rate of radio frequencies on mobile phones, to ensure they can make informed choices regarding mobile phone use; and if he will make a statement. [126274]

Mr. Byers: The Government are committed to providing consumers with sufficient information on mobile phones and health in order that they may make informed choices when purchasing and using a mobile phone.

The Government are supporting the European electrical standard setting body, CENLEC, in developing a standard for measuring the Specific Absorption Rate (SAR) values of mobile phones. (The SAR refers to the rate of absorption by the human body of electromagnetic radiation). The standard will be adopted in the UK once it has been finally approved. The Government believe that the consumer should have access to the SAR values when considering purchasing a mobile phone. The Government will expect SAR measurements to be displayed at all points of sale and with each mobile phone and on the world wide web. The Government consider that the SAR value should be viewed in context, for example, by comparing the SAR value against the recommended exposure limits. We will work with industry to ensure this information is provided.

In addition, we have already started discussions on the provision of information on health aspects of mobile phone technology. This information will be provided in a widely available leaflet and will include details of how the technology works, including a description of what is meant by "Specific Absorption Rate". We will be working with the industry to provide the technology information in easy to understand language.

Young Entrepreneurs

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures he is putting in place to support young entrepreneurs (a) nationally and (b) in Teeside; and if he will make a statement. [126494]

Mr. Byers: My Department is committed to helping young entrepreneurs throughout the UK. For example, we are supporting Enterprise Insight the business-led campaign, which is informing young people about the challenges and rewards of starting a business as well as developing entrepreneurial skills and helping businesses to grow. Enterprise Insight has set up a Regional Team for the North East which is currently developing a calendar of events.

My Department is also supporting the Young Enterprise Innovation Awards final in July and helping Young Enterprise with the pilot development of Graduate Enterprise into a national programme. Teeside University is taking part in the pilot scheme.

This month the awards ceremony for the European Awards for the Spirit of Enterprise took place, which DTI supported. Young people from every region participated.

Workplace Bullying

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action is being taken by his Department to address the problem of bullying in the workplace, what recent representations he has received on this matter; and if he will make a statement. [126495]

Mr. Alan Johnson: My Department receives occasional representations about workplace bullying, which I strongly deplore. Existing legislation can address it in a number of ways. For instance, the Public Order Act 1986 and the Protection from Harassment Act 1997 provide remedies against harassment, while the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974 places a duty on all employers to ensure the health, safety and welfare of their employees. In addition, we would always encourage employers to put in place disciplinary and grievance procedures which allow employees to raise concerns and employers to address them. The Employment Relations Act 1999 contains a provision giving workers the right to be accompanied at disciplinary and grievance hearings by a fellow worker or trade union official of their choice, and workers who choose to exercise their right will be protected against victimisation by their employer, as will those who accompany or seek to accompany a worker. Our intention is to bring the new right into force on 4 September.

Post Offices

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many (a) post offices and (b) sub-post offices there were in (i) Great Britain and (ii) each parliamentary constituency in (1) 1999 and (2) 2000; and if he will make a statement. [126293]

Mr. Alan Johnson: I understand from the Post Office that at end March 1999 there were 600 crown post offices and 18,175 sub-post offices in the United Kingdom and that the corresponding figures for end March 2000 were 598 crown offices and 17,795 sub-post offices.

I also understand that the most recent data on the numbers of post offices in parliamentary constituencies in Great Britain relate to October 1999. These figures for England and Wales were published on 29 November 1999, Official Report, column 22W, and for Scotland on 20 December 1999, Official Report, column 382W.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many (a) post offices and (b) sub-post offices there were in (i) Great Britain and (ii) each region in each year since 1987; and if he will make a statement. [126295]

Mr. Alan Johnson: I understand from the Post Office that the total numbers of Crown post offices and sub-post offices in the United Kingdom at the end of March of each year since 1987 were:

End March	Crown offices	Sub-post offices
1987	1,503	19,708
1988	1,499	19,572
1989	1,493	19,537

End March	Crown offices	Sub-post offices
1990	1,339	19,532
1991	1,167	19,471
1992	1,019	19,141
1993	917	19,041
1994	799	18,975
1995	699	18,908
1996	653	18,761
1997	606	18,645
1998	601	18,407
1999	600	18,175
2000	598	17,795

I also understand from the Post Office that figures for post offices by Post Office Counters regions are only available from April 1994. I have obtained lists of the figures from that date and have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library of the House.

EU Nickel Directive

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will publish regulations required under the EU Nickel Directive (94/27/EC). [126815]

Mr. Alan Johnson: I plan to sign and lay before Parliament by the end of June the Dangerous Substances and Preparations (Nickel) (Safety) Regulations 2000, which will implement the Nickel Directive (94/27/EC).

Electricity Supply

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the supply obligation on electricity generators; and what plans he has to review the buy-out option available to companies supplying electricity. [126099]

Mrs. Liddell: The Utilities Bill will provide the powers to place an obligation on licensed suppliers of electricity to supply a proportion of their supplies from renewable sources of energy. The new provisions will enable suppliers to buy-out all or part of their obligation as an alternative to supplying renewables electricity as a means of protecting consumers from excessive costs. Later this year, I intend to consult on the level of the obligation, the level of the buy-out price option and the system of allocation by which the proceeds from the buy-out payments will be recycled.

Business Links

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many businesses used Business Links during 1998–99 in each region, counting each business only once. [123534]

Mr. Caborn [holding answer 24 May 2000]: The table shows the total number of businesses assisted in each region by Business Links in each quarter during 1998–99, England figures and averages are also included.

Total number of businesses helped by Business Links—1998–99

	Quarter 1	Quarter 2	Quarter 3	Quarter 4	Average
England	88,754	93,920	102,267	108,639	98,395
Eastern	10,706	10,999	11,908	11,986	11,400
East Midlands	6,372	6,387	6,800	7,076	6,659
London	8,716	8,851	10,837	11,473	9,969
North East	4,658	4,309	4,389	4,992	4,587
North West	16,959	19,401	19,034	19,531	18,731
South East	14,075	14,684	15,803	16,366	15,232
South West	7,615	8,799	10,915	11,186	9,629
West Midlands	10,714	11,876	12,699	13,887	12,294
Yorks and Humber	8,939	8,614	9,882	12,142	9,894

Part of the SBS performance Information requirement is to count all businesses using Business Link services for non-trivial activity. Only one use per business is recorded during each quarter. The first repeat use by a business of Business Link Services in a later quarter is also recorded. Because a business can appear more than once during the year, figures cannot be totalled across quarters to provide cumulative figures without double counting.

Wind Power

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent studies he has undertaken relating to the extension of small and medium-scale wind power schemes in the UK; and if he will make a statement about the Government's strategy to secure the maximum benefit from such electricity generation schemes. [126077]

Mrs. Liddell: My Department have funded under their New and Renewable Energy Programme several studies on small and medium-scale wind power schemes in the UK. A list of reports is as set out.

As part of its overall strategy on renewable energy, the Government are taking powers in the Utilities Bill to impose an Obligation on licensed electricity suppliers to supply a specified proportion of their electricity from renewable sources. Wind energy is an established technology and is expected to make a substantial contribution.

SOCIAL SECURITY

State Pension

14. Mr. Crausby: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people he expects will gain from the Government's proposed state second pension. [124959]

24. Ms Southworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action his Department is taking to help low-paid people to provide for their retirement. [124971]

Mrs. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to help low-paid people provide for their retirement. [124955]

Mr. Rooker: The State Second Pension will reform SERPS to help around 14 million low and moderate earners to build up much greater pension entitlements. In addition, around four million carers and long-term disabled people with broken work records will be able to build up a second pension for the first time.

21. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the increase in the state retirement pension in April. [124967]

Mr. Rooker: The basic State Retirement Pension has been increased in line with inflation, as is the normal practice.

Our first priority has been to concentrate help on the poorest pensioners, which is why we introduced the minimum income guarantee and increased it in line with earnings. In addition, we have introduced a range of measures to help all pensioners and poorer pensioners in particular.

27. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received regarding this year's increment in the basic state pension. [124974]

Mr. Rooker: I refer the hon. Member to my written answer of 13 June 2000, Official Report, column 609W.

30. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he plans to announce the pension increase for 2001–02. [124977]

Mr. Rooker: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is required to review the levels of benefit each year. The results of my right hon. Friend's review will be announced at the normal time in the normal way.

Lone Parents

15. Mr. Russell Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has for future development of the New Deal for Lone Parents. [124961]

Angela Eagle: Lone parents will benefit from a raft of measures to be introduced during 2001 through the New Deal for Lone Parents and Working Families Tax Credit. These include a £15 training premium, an increase in the Income Support earnings disregard, and help with funding for child care costs for a lone parent moving into part-time work. And all lone parents working 16 hours a week or more will get at least £155, and £214 if they work 35 hours or more.

20. Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what his estimate is of the total savings to date to his Department as a result of the New Deal for Lone Parents. [124966]

Angela Eagle: The independent evaluation of the prototype phase of the New Deal for Lone Parents confirms that the prototype clawed back nearly 90 per cent. of its total costs and, looking at operating costs only, it made a surplus of about £1.8 million.

The programme's national phase is being evaluated separately. It too will include a cost-benefit analysis and will be available in spring 2002.

36. Siobhain McDonagh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measures his Department is taking to help lone parents obtain employment. [124984]

Angela Eagle: As part of a comprehensive strategy to help lone parents obtain employment and make work pay we have introduced the New Deal for Lone Parents, the Lone Parents Benefit Run-On and Working Families Tax Credit. In the Budget we announced a guaranteed minimum income of £155 a week from next April for lone parents working 16 hours a week or more; £214 a week for lone parents working 35 hours or more. We also announced an increase in the earnings disregard in Income Support for lone parents from £15 to £20, funding for child care costs for the first year that lone parents move into part-time work and a £15 premium to help lone parents train for work.

Fraud

18. Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the level of fraud within the social security system. [124964]

Mr. Rooker: Previous estimates have shown that £2 billion a year has definitely been lost through fraud. A further £2 to £3 billion may have been lost in cases where fraud is strongly suspected.

We are now measuring the level of fraud and error, in Income Support and Jobseeker's Allowance, the two most vulnerable benefits, on a continuous monthly basis. The last figures published by the Government Statistical Service for the 12 months ending March 1999 show the level of fraud and error in these benefits was £1.37 billion or 8.9 per cent. of the total benefit paid.

We have set a target for reducing this fraud and error by 10 per cent. by 2002 and 30 per cent. by 2007.

23. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on his progress in tackling social security fraud; and which areas are his priorities. [124970]

Mr. Rooker: We are determined to combat fraud and error in the Social Security system.

We have a comprehensive strategy, to safeguard the system from the first to the final payment. For example, we are insisting claimants produce more evidence before Income Support is paid, which will save £1 billion over the Parliament. This comprehensive strategy will help to strengthen public confidence, and thereby encourage their support.

33. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many additional fraud inspectors the Benefits Agency has employed since 1997. [124981]

Mr. Rooker: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows.

Number of staff employed in the Benefit Fraud Investigation Service (BFIS) and in the Benefit Agency Security Investigation Service (BASIS) for the financial years from 1997–98

Year	Administration	Investigation	Total
1997–98	1,069	3,778	4,847
1998–99	1,697	3,776	5,473
1999–2000	1,611	3,699	5,310

All Benefits Agency staff involved in processing and paying benefits have a role in preventing and identifying fraud and abuse.

Child Support Agency

19. Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many men have been required by the Child Support Agency to take a second blood test to determine the paternity of a child. [124965]

Angela Eagle: The CSA cannot require non-resident parents to take a blood test. In cases of disputed paternity, the CSA will offer a DNA test as a means of resolving the issue, but the alleged parent is not required to take the test. Under our child support reforms, alleged parents who refuse to take a DNA test will be presumed to be the parent of the child in question and child support action will follow.

Community Orders

22. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what safeguards he will introduce to ensure the welfare of dependants of individuals who have had benefit withdrawn for non-compliance with community orders. [124968]

Angela Eagle: Hardship payments will be available for people in vulnerable groups and others at risk of hardship who have had their Jobseeker's Allowance or Training Allowance withdrawn. Similar arrangements already exist for making hardship payments where Jobseeker's Allowance is withdrawn as a result of employment sanctions. Income Support will not be withdrawn altogether, but will be reduced by 40 per cent. or 20 per cent. of the single person's adult rate, subject to their circumstances; premiums for children, other members of the family, disability etc. are not affected. JSA hardship payments are calculated in a similar manner. All claimants entitled to Housing Benefit when sanctioned would continue to receive it.

Invalid Care Allowance

25. Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has to up-rate the £50 earnings limit for those who claim Invalid Care Allowance. [124972]

Mr. Bayley: We have no plans to do so. However we understand the need to ensure that financial support for carers remains adequate. Our National Strategy committed us to keeping financial support for carers, including Invalid Care Allowance, under review and we will continue to do that.

Minimum Income Guarantee

26. Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the progress of the campaign to increase take-up of the minimum income guarantee. [124973]

Mr. Bayley: Since the launch of the Minimum Income Guarantee Take-Up Campaign was announced at the end of March, there have already been around 50,000 calls to the tele-claim centre and 24,000 Minimum Income Guarantee claim packs have been sent to pensioners.

28. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners are in receipt of the minimum income guarantee in the North-West region. [124975]

Mr. Bayley: There are 226,000 pensioners receiving the minimum income guarantee in the North-West Government Office Region.

34. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the effect of the minimum income guarantee take-up campaign. [124982]

Mr. Bayley: The minimum income guarantee take-up campaign is central to our strategy for tackling pensioner poverty.

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what indicator he will use to judge the success of his Department's efforts to increase take-up of the minimum income guarantee. [124960]

Mr. Bayley: We will carry out a comprehensive evaluation of the minimum income guarantee take-up campaign early next year.

Pensioners Tax Credit

29. Mr. Hope: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on proposals to develop a pensioners' tax credit. [124976]

Mr. Rooker: We believe that pensioners who have worked hard to provide for their own retirement should be rewarded rather than penalised. We intend to consult later in the year on proposals for a pensioner credit that will reward those who have succeeded in building up modest pensions or other savings.

Child Poverty

31. Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to alleviate poverty among children in lone parent families. [124978]

Angela Eagle: Children of lone parent families are benefiting from the additional £7 billion we are spending on tax and benefit measures to help all families with children.

The best route out of poverty is through work. The New Deal for Lone Parents, combined with other tax and benefit measures to make sure work pays, will mean more children get the best possible start in life. These measures are a major step in achieving the Government's commitment towards eradicating child poverty, and include:

Child Benefit (CHB): 36 per cent. increase in rate for eldest child over the period 1997 to 2000. Further above inflation rise from April 2000—CHB now worth £15 pw for eldest child and £10 for subsequent children.

Income-related benefits: under-11 allowance up by £4.70 from last October, and equalised with allowances for children aged 11–16 from April 2000. Support for children under 11 in the income-related benefits has gone up by over 50 per cent. in two years. From October 2000, the child allowance will rise again by £4.35, helping over 3 million children whose parents are on Income Support or Jobseeker's Allowance (Income Based).

Income Support run-on: to be paid for the first two weeks of work to help lone parents make the transition from benefits to work.

Earnings disregards: April 2001, the amount that lone parents on Income Support can earn before loosing part of their benefit increases from £15 to £20 per week.

Sure Start Maternity Grant: April 2000, payments doubled to £200, and rise again this autumn to £300.

Working Families Tax Credit: under-11 credit increased by £1.10 over and above indexation from April 2000. Credit for all children under 16 will rise by £4.35 from June 2000. Child maintenance is completely disregarded.

Childcare Tax Credit: part of WFTC, 70 per cent. of child care costs up to a maximum of £100 for one child and £150 for two or more.

Child Support Maintenance: reform legislation for child support currently before Parliament. New arrangements will allow lone parents on IS to keep up to £10 a week of any maintenance received.

Child Tax Credit: to be introduced from April 2001, worth up to £442 a year.

In addition, £190 million has been invested in the New Deal for Lone Parents over this Parliament, and from May this year invitation letters will go to lone parents with children aged 3 and 4, as well as those with children aged 5 and upwards.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for (a) Great Britain and (b) each region, the number of children who live in households with income below half of the UK average, for each year since 1979. [126327]

Mr. Bayley: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is contained in the Department's Household Below Average Income series which is available in the Library.

Winter Fuel Payments

32. Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners are eligible for winter fuel allowance. [124980]

Angela Eagle: Last winter around 10 million pensioners received a winter fuel payment. As a result of extending the scheme to eligible households containing someone aged 60 or over, the number of people who can benefit will increase by up to 1.5 million. We will also make backdated payments to up to 1.9 million people from the start of the scheme in the 1997–98 winter.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 13 June 2000, Official Report, columns 608–09W, for what reason the date of birth of a person as recorded on the NIRS2 computer system is not regarded as sufficient proof of age for purposes of a claim for a winter fuel payment. [126574]

Angela Eagle: The Departmental Central Index (DCI) has information about all people who have a National Insurance number.

The NIRS computer system is not used directly by Benefits Agency (BA) staff for Winter Fuel purposes. Any information held on the NIRS system is, however, automatically transferred to DCI, and so once this transfer has taken place the information available to Benefit Agency staff on DCI will be the same as that held on NIRS.

Where the date of birth held on DCI has been verified, then this is used as proof of age when considering entitlement to a Winter Fuel Payment (WFP).

There are a considerable number of records on DCI where although the date of birth is recorded, it is not verified. In these instances it will be necessary for the Agency to obtain verification of the date of birth from the person applying for a WFP.

Benefits Agency

35. Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to improve the ways in which the Benefits Agency communicates with the public. [124983]

Angela Eagle: Much has already been done to improve communications—but there remains much more to do.

We are improving the way we notify and explain decisions to people. We have re-designed leaflets around age groups and life events instead of benefits, making them simpler and easier to follow. A similar structure is planned for our website.

Stakeholder Pensions

Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what progress his Department is making with its proposals for stakeholder pensions. [124963]

Mr. Rooker: The Stakeholder Pension Schemes Regulations 2000 were laid on 25 May. Work is progressing for stakeholder pensions to be available from April 2001.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will set out the assumptions behind the predicted stakeholder pension pay-outs published by the Financial Services Authority; [126562]

(2) what is the expected monthly stakeholder pension for those contributing (a) £30 per month and (b) £40 per month consistent with Decision Tree 3 of the stakeholder discussion paper published by the Financial Services Authority. [126561]

Mr. Rooker: The assumptions on which the illustrative pension figures are based are listed on page 14 of the discussion paper "The FSA's approach to the regulation of the conduct of stakeholder pension business" published on 23 May 2000.

The estimated monthly pension figures in decision tree three are proportionate to the level of contributions (subject to rounding). The estimated pension figures for alternative levels of contributions can therefore be calculated from the information given. For example the expected pension outcomes for a 20 year old contributing £30 a month would be £250 for retirement at 65, and £172 for retirement at 60.

Bridging Allowance

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the current level of the Bridging Allowance; and if he will make a statement. [124881]

Mr. Wicks: I have been asked to reply.

The Bridging Allowance was introduced to provide short-term help for young people awaiting a training place. It is a national scheme, payable for up to eight weeks only. It is not a form of social security benefit and was never intended to support young people in any way over a long period of time.

The Department is currently taking forward the recommendations in the Social Exclusion Unit's "Bridging the Gap" report: to consider the rationalisation of financial support for young people. As part of this work we will be looking at the future of all financial support available to young people including the Bridging Allowance.

Social Fund

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the gross discretionary Social Fund budget for 2000–01 will be, broken down by (a) the community care grant (b) budgeting loans and (c) crisis loans. [125287]

Angela Eagle: The gross discretionary Social Fund budget for 2000–01 is £596 million, which will be funded by Annually Managed Expenditure of £138.2 million and loan recoveries of £457.8 million. The community care grant budget is £100 million and the gross loans budget is £494 million. Both budgeting loans and crisis loans are paid from the same budget.

A contingency reserve of £2 million has been retained centrally to provide additional help to any Benefits Agency Districts that face unexpected and unplanned expenditure as a result of a local emergency or disaster.

Details of individual Benefits Agency District budget allocations were placed in the Library on 3 April.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what have been the administrative costs of the Disability Living Allowance in each of the last five years. [124710]

Mr. Bayley: The administration of Disability Living Allowance is a matter for Alexis Cleveland, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. She will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Alexis Cleveland to Mr. Brian Donohoe, dated 15 June 2000:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what have been the administrative costs of the Disability Living Allowance in each of the last five years.

For the years 1995/1996 through to 1999/2000 the cost of administering the benefit was £104.78 million, £130.99 million, £125.47 million, £125.67 million and £142.5 million respectively. The figures are inclusive of Disability Living Allowance and Attendance Allowance costs. The totals cannot be apportioned into DLA and AA separately.

As you may be aware we have recently introduced new procedures for assessing claims for DLA/AA to try and improve the accuracy of decision-making. We want to get decisions right first time so that fewer cases go to reconsideration or appeal. Inevitably this has led to some delays in processing cases and the Benefits Agency have been taking action to reduce the backlog as soon as possible. This is the reason for the increase in costs for 1999/2000.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measurements of the time taken to process an application for Disability Living Allowance have been made in each of the last five years. [124709]

Mr. Bayley: The administration of Disability Living Allowance is a matter for Alexis Cleveland, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. She will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Alexis Cleveland to Mr. Brian Donohoe, dated 15 June 2000:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what measurements of the time taken to process an application for Disability Living Allowance (DLA) have been made in each of the last five years.

For the years 1996/97 through to 1999/2000 the average number of days taken to clear an application for DLA has been 31, 34, 35 and 43 respectively.

As you may be aware we have recently introduced new procedures for assessing claims for DLA/AA to try and improve the accuracy of decision-making. We want to get decisions right first time so that fewer cases go to reconsideration or appeal. Inevitably this has led to some delays in processing cases. These delays will hopefully reduce as staff become accustomed to the new procedures and we are taking action to achieve this as soon as possible.

I hope this is helpful.

Child Benefit

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the level at which a family premium for families with one or more children under the age of five years could be introduced into the Child Benefit system by the expenditure of £600 million (a) assuming no changes to levels of mean-tested benefits and (b) assuming corresponding changes to levels of mean-tested benefits. [125284]

Angela Eagle: The information is in the table.

Weekly value of family premium

No corresponding increase in means-tested benefits	5.70
With corresponding increase in means-tested benefits	4.20

Notes:

1. The figures provided do not make allowance for the additional administrative and system change costs.

2. The proportion of families with a child under the age of five has been estimated from the February 2000 5 per cent. scan of the Child Benefit computer system.

3. Proportions of families on income-related benefits who have a child under the age of five have been estimated from the February 2000 5 per cent. scans of the Income Support and Jobseeker's Allowance computer systems and the May 1998 1 per cent. sample of Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit claims.

4. The overall case loads underpinning the estimates have been controlled to forecast 2001–02 Child Benefit case loads.

5. Value of family premium rounded to the nearest 10 pence.

Surveys

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much his Department is spending in the current financial year on representative surveys of its customers; how much was spent in (a) 1998–99 and (b) 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [125534]

Mr. Rooker: Details of representative surveys of customers and other research carried out under the Department's Research Programme can be found in the Research Yearbook published annually. The information includes costs and objectives. The most recent Yearbook was published in December 1999 and includes all projects undertaken in 1998–99. A copy is available in the Library.

New surveys commissioned under the Research Programme are normally subject to a competitive tender procedure. This year's commissioning process is under way and therefore the costs for the current financial year are unavailable. The remaining expenditure on representative surveys under the Research Programme can be provided only at disproportionate cost. This is because, for a number of projects, customer surveys are carried out as part of a wider programme of work and disaggregated figures for the survey costs are not held centrally.

The Department also undertakes representative surveys of customers that are not funded through the Research Programme. Information on their costs is shown in the table.

Spending on representative surveys of customers by DSS agencies, the Appeals Service and Corporate Communications

	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01
Benefits Agency[1]	450	474	480
Child Support Agency[2]	–	20	–
War Pensions Agency[3]	21	7	–
Appeals Service[4]	–	–	–
DSS Corporate Communications[5]	204	94	–

Note:

All amounts are rounded to the nearest thousand and exclude VAT.

Sources:

[1] Benefits Agency (BA) Customer Service Team. Figures include field, computer and data collation costs and, as internal costs, are not liable for VAT. Figures are for national surveys only. BA Directorates may conduct local surveys but costs are not held centrally and could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

[2] Child Support Agency (CSA). The figure represents a customer survey commissioned by CSA Scotland and North East England Business Unit.

[3] War Pensions Agency (WPA). As part of its Business Plan for 2000–01, the WPA will conduct research to identify the services customers require, and will act on the findings. The research has yet to be commissioned.

[4] The Appeals Service (AS). AS will commission a customer survey later this year but costs are not yet available.

[5] DSS Corporate Communications. The total for 1998–99 includes a small element of qualitative research which it has not been possible to itemise separately. In the current financial year some surveys will be commissioned subject to a competitive tender procedure and cost estimates cannot therefore be provided.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the cost, including the administrative costs, of restoring pre-1997 social security entitlements to asylum seekers instead of the vouchers system, (a) per asylum seeker and (b) in total annually; if he will set out the assumptions underlying the calculations and the basis for these assumptions; and if he will make a statement. [125701]

Mr. Bayley: It is not possible to provide a reliable estimate of the costs of restoring pre-1996 social security entitlements to asylum seekers. This is because it is not possible reliably to determine what effect the changes made to the support arrangements for asylum seekers in 1996 and those introduced in April 2000 have had in deterring asylum applications.

Bilateral Social Security Agreement

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for the most recent date for which figures are available the number of people from each of the successor states to the former Yugoslavia who were claiming social security benefits in the United Kingdom under the 1958 bilateral social security agreement. [126538]

Mr. Rooker: The information is not available in the format requested from the Department's records. These are held on a computer system which identifies the country of current residence, but does not identify whether or not a reciprocal agreement has been used to enhance title to UK benefits.

The records do show how many customers we have living in the countries of the former Yugoslavia, but without examination of each individual case we cannot say whether they have benefited from the agreement.

Numbers living in the countries of the former Yugoslavia

	Number
Republic of Slovenia	88
Republic of Bosnia-Herzegovina	25
Republic of Croatia	229
The Former Republic of Macedonia	23
The Federal Republic of Yugoslavia	473

Income Support

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the cost of making income support mortgage interest payments available after a two months' wait to homeowners who had taken out mortgage payment protection insurance but had suffered an uninsurable event. [125298]

Mr. Bayley: It is not possible to say how many people with mortgage protection insurance policies would suffer an uninsurable event.

Waste Recycling

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of waste produced by his Department was (a) re-used and (b) recycled in the last year for which figures are available. [126634]

Mr. Bayley: The vast majority of the Department's waste is paper. Of this approximately 70 per cent. is recycled.

Pensioner Incomes

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for (a) Great Britain and (b) each region, the number of pensioners who live in households with income below half of the UK average, for each year since 1979. [126326]

Mr. Rooker: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is contained in the Department's Household Below Average Income series which is available in the Library.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Kosovan Refugees

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of Kosovan refugees who have returned home from the UK in the last 12 months have gone back to (a) their own homes and (b) temporary accommodation; and if he will make a statement. [126079]

Mrs. Roche: Up to 15 June, 2,177 Kosovans had returned permanently from the United Kingdom, of whom 1,731 had arrived under the United Nations High Commission for Refugees Humanitarian Evacuation Programme. According to a Refugee Council survey of permanent returnees on the point of departure up to 9 June, 59 per cent. would be staying in their own house, 36 per cent. would be staying with relatives or friends and 5 per cent. did not specify where they were staying.

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the advice he has received from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees concerning her recommendations as regards the return of Kosovan refugees. [126292]

Mrs. Roche: The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) has recently issued two papers which address the issue of the return of Kosovan refugees: "Kosovo Albanians in Asylum countries: UNHCR Recommendations as regards Return"; and, UNHCR's "Background Note on Ethnic Albanians Who are in Continued Need of International Protection". Both papers were issued in March 2000, and copies have been placed in the Library.

Metropolitan Police

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when the medical standards required to join the Metropolitan police were last reviewed; and what plans there are to update them; [126200]

(2) how many applicants to join the Metropolitan police have been rejected on medical grounds in each of the last five years. [126199]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The table sets out how many applicants to join the Metropolitan police have been rejected on medical grounds in each of the last five years:

	Number of applicants	Total number rejected on medical grounds	Percentage rejected on medical grounds
1996	6,402	878	13.7
1998	6,343	671	10.5
1999	6,115	804	13
2000[1]	2,037	366	18

[1] To 15 June 2000

The Metropolitan police follow the Guidelines on Medical Standards of Entry to Police Forces issued by the Home Office in March 1998.

The Home Office is undertaking a review of the guidelines, which it is hoped will be completed later this year.

Mr. Casale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will make available the formal response by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis to Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary report, "Winning Consent". [126969]

Mr. Straw: "Winning Consent", the Report of an Inspection by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary (HMIC), was published on 10 January. I refer to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Enfield, North (Ms Ryan) on 10 January 2000, Official Report, column 21W. I have today arranged for a copy of the Commissioner's formal response to the Report, submitted to me in my capacity as Police Authority for the Metropolitan Police Service (MPS), to be placed in the Library.

The Inspection was carried out as a direct response to a recommendation of the Report of the Inquiry into the death of Stephen Lawrence.

It was one of the most detailed and thorough Inspections ever carried out by HMIC into specific aspects of policing in one police force, and examined community and race relations policies, and the handling of murder inquiries, in the MPS.

"Winning Consent" contains 41 recommendations, 29 relate to diversity issues, and 12 are concerned with the content of murder investigations.

I welcome the Commissioner's candid and very positive response. When the Report was published, I said that I expected senior management in the MPS to address the issues in it urgently and with vigour. This response confirms that they have done so. It demonstrates how much has already been achieved by the Metropolitan police in implementing the Report and reflects the Commissioner's total commitment to meet the challenges laid down and to continue the process of improvement.

The Report makes 41 recommendations. The Commissioner has accepted all of them (except one, which concerns a matter of professional, operational judgment, in the allocation of murder investigations within the Metropolitan police). Many of the recommendations are for action to be implemented over time. The Commissioner explains that there is a specific plan of action in place for each such recommendation; and some recommendations have already been implemented in full.

A fuller account of my assessment of the Commissioner's response is being placed together with it, in the Library.

Wrongful Convictions

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress he is making in providing support for people on their release from prison following wrongful conviction. [126168]

Mr. Straw: My officials have initiated discussions with voluntary organisations interested in setting up an advice and counselling service for such people. We expect these discussions to lead to a full scoping study.

Travellers

Mr. Pound: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent reports he has received from police forces about their effectiveness in dealing with the problems caused by travellers. [126203]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I have received information on this matter from a number of sources, and I am considering urgently with colleagues what action should be taken.

Road Accidents

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the legislation governing how long after a road accident a private prosecution can be made; and if he will make a statement on the present limitation. [126186]

Mr. Charles Clarke: There are no statutory limitations on the period within which proceedings may be instituted for indictable offences (including those triable either way); but under section 127 of the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980, proceedings for summary offences must be commenced within six months of the day when the offence was committed, except where there is specific statutory provision for a different time limit to apply to a particular offence. The summary offences in the Road Traffic Act 1988 which are most commonly charged following a road accident, such as careless driving or driving with excess alcohol (sections 3 and 5 respectively), are covered by the general limit in section 127. The position is the same whether the prosecutor is the Crown Prosecution Service (or other public authority) or a private individual.

The purpose of these time limits is to ensure that summary offences are charged and tried as soon as reasonably possible after their alleged commission, so that the recollection of witnesses is still reasonably clear, and so that there is no unnecessary delay in the disposal by magistrates' courts of the summary offences brought before them.

Data Protection

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice he has given to the Data Protection Commissioner about the confidentiality of medical patient records under the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1998. [126086]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: None.

The Data Protection Commissioner is fully independent of the Government. In carrying out her functions, she takes advice from no Minister. Rather, it is she who gives advice to the Government on data protection matters.

Individuals' medical records are covered by the Data Protection Act 1998. The requirements of the 1998 Act, including the Data Protection principles, apply to them as to any other personal data. It will be for the Commissioner to give any advice that might be needed about the particular implications of the 1998 Act given the confidential nature of medical records.

Deportations

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were deported from the UK in each of the last three years. [125763]

Mrs. Roche: The numbers of people removed or departing voluntarily from the United Kingdom under port, illegal entry or deportation procedures between 1997 and 1999 are shown in the table. Data for 1999 are provisional.

Passengers refused entry and removed and persons removed or departing voluntarily as a result of illegal entry or deportation action[1], 1997 to 1999

	1997	1998	1999[3]
Passengers refused entry and removed	24,540	27,600	31,300
Removals and voluntary departures under illegal entry procedures[2]	4,540	5,580	5,220
Removals and voluntary departures under deportation procedures[2]	2,070	1,720	[2]1,170
Total	31,140	34,900	[2]37,680

[1] Includes only those voluntary departures taking place after the initiation of such action.
[2] Revised data
[3] 1999 data are provisional
Notes:
Data are rounded to 10.

Performance Indicators

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on how each of the agencies and non-departmental bodies relating to his Department performed against their key performance indicators in (a) the last year and (b) the previous two years. [125330]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 12 June 2000]: My Department has four executive agencies and 11 executive non-departmental public bodies which receive public funds. Each of these bodies publishes an annual report and accounts from which more details can be obtained. A summary table showing how each has performed in the years requested has been placed in the Library. Results for 1999–2000 are still subject to final audit.

Penalty Clauses

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 17 May 2000, Official Report, columns 168–69W, on penalty clauses, what (a) was the financial compensation and (b) were the damages which were recovered from the private sector companies listed. [125364]

Mr. Straw: Further to the reply I gave my hon. Friend on 17 May 2000, Official Report, columns 168–69W, on the amount of financial compensation and damages recovered from private sector companies previously listed, the information requested is given in the table.

Company	Financial compensation	Damages
Rebound ECD	663,240	155,152
Medomsley Training Services Ltd.	10,049	35,579
Premier Monitoring Services Ltd.	199,500	—
GSSC of Europe Ltd.	38,500	—
Securicor Custodial Services Ltd.	84,000	—
Siemens	—	380

Visas (China)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning relaxing the visa requirements for citizens of the People's Republic of China who wish to holiday in the UK. [125430]

Mrs. Roche: I have received one representation this year concerning relaxation of the visa requirements for citizens of the People's Republic of China who wish to visit the United Kingdom.

Queen's Golden Jubilee

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding a national celebration to mark the Golden Jubilee of Her Majesty the Queen. [126874]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Proposals and suggestions have been received from a number of cultural, sporting and commercial organisations and members of the public. Planning for the celebration of Her Majesty's Golden Jubilee is, however, at a very early stage. A programme of celebrations will be announced in due course.

Sunday Observance Act

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if it his policy to seek to disapply the provisions of the Sunday Observance Act 1780 in respect of 31 December 2000. [126803]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Yes. On 17 January this year, we laid before Parliament the draft Deregulation (Sunday Dancing and Licensing) Order 2000 which would remove the prohibition in the Sunday Observance Act 1780 on charging for public dances on Sundays. The Deregulation Committees of both Houses have indicated their readiness, subject to certain changes being made, to recommend approval of the Order. We have considered their comments carefully and have invited further comments from the Committees on changes to the proposals before formally re-laying the Order. We hope that the Order will be in force before 31 December 2000, which is a Sunday.

City Status Applications

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to announce the successful applications for city status to celebrate the Millennium. [126575]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: No date has yet been set for the announcement of the new city. 39 applications have been received for the Millennium grant of city status from towns in the United Kingdom. Each application is being considered on its individual merits and a recommendation will be made to Her Majesty The Queen in due course on which town should be honoured.

Football Hooligans

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what reports he has received on the behaviour of ticketless English fans in Eindhoven. [126664]

Mr. Straw: The behaviour of all England fans visiting Eindhoven for the England v Portugal match was widely praised, not least by the city mayor and local police commander.

Departmental Reviews

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the reviews undertaken by his Department and the date those reviews were completed since 1997; and if he will make a statement. [126554]

Mr. Straw: Since 1997, the Home Office has undertaken and completed a large number of reviews and reports, details of which are not held centrally and could be collated only at disproportionate cost. However, examples of the range of reviews are; the Prisons-Probation review (August 1998); reviews of financial regulations in the Crown dependencies (November 1998); and, a review of the treatment of vulnerable and intimidated witnesses (June 1998). Copies of these reports have been previously placed in the Library.

A number of reviews have also been carried out by the Police, Prisons, Probation and Fire Services Inspectorates.

Prisons

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 9 June 2000, Official Report, column 394W, on prisons, if he will give details of the RESPOND programme including the training required and the amount of training undertaken to date; if he will give details of the targets set for training in this area; and if he will make a statement. [126558]

Mr. Boateng: The RESPOND programme is designed to promote racial equality for staff and prisoners, it consists of five main strategies:

confronting harassment and discrimination;

ensuring fairness in recruitment, appraisal, promotion and selection; developing and supporting minority ethnic staff;

ensuring equal opportunities for minority ethnic prisoners; and recruiting minority ethnic staff.

To confront racial harassment and discrimination the RESPOND programme highlights the need for mandatory racial harassment training for all staff. I referred in the reply I gave the hon. Gentleman on 9 June 2000, Official Report, column 394W, to the current position against the target set for completion of this training.

To ensure fairness in recruitment, appraisal, promotion and selection the RESPOND programme highlights the need to review training for assessors and promotion board members. Assessors are provided with training at Job Simulation and Assessment Centres at every assessment event. This affords a unique opportunity to update any training they may have previously received. Training is mandatory for staff acting as promotion board members. Training for promotion board members has been reviewed. A new training course entitled Recruitment, Promotion and Selection Interviewing is being piloted. Delivery of the course and its content will be continually evaluated.

To ensure equal opportunities for minority ethnic prisoners, the RESPOND programme highlights the need to review the race relations training provided to Prison Officers including that contained in their basic training. The provision of local race relations training to all staff working in prisons is mandatory. As far as practicable, this training should be repeated every three years. In the period between the 1996–97 and 1998–99 financial years, there was a steady increase in the delivery of this training with 3,594, 4,157 and 5,617 staff trained in each year. A new local race relations training pack was launched earlier this year which will further encourage the delivery of this training. The Prison Service Order 2800 Race Relations was strengthened in February 2000 to require the Governing Governor or Deputy Governor to chair the Race Relations Management Team. To enable this, a training course is being provided in partnership with the National Association for the Care and Resettlement of Offenders. These courses will be completed in July 2000. A consultation phase has begun as part of a review of the basic training provided to Prison Officers with a view to introducing a new course. In the 1999–2000 financial year, 1,122 new Prison Officers undertook basic training. It is anticipated that during the 2000–01 financial year 1,400 new Prison Officers will require basic training.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the date each report by Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons was (a) received by the Home Office and (b) published, in each of the last two years; and if he will list those reports which are currently with his Department, but are yet to be published and the date they were received. [126557]

Mr. Boateng: The information is given in the table.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the right hon. Member for Maidstone and The Weald (Miss Widdecombe) on 8 May 2000, Official Report, column 302–05W, on the number of prisoners in work, (a) if he will break down the work undertaken by the 162 prisoners at HMP Coldingley engaged in other occupations and the 215 prisoners engaged in prison maintenance work, (b) if there are further prisoners engaged in work at HMP Kirklevington and HMP Mount and (c) what the reasons are for the figure of 223 prisoners engaged in wing cleaning work at HMP Usk; and if he will make a statement. [126543]

Mr. Boateng: The breakdown of prisoner occupation for Coldingley is set out in the table. Other occupations include offending behaviour programmes, induction and community service.

Kirklevington is a resettlement prison and in addition to the numbers of prisoners employed as shown in my reply to the right hon. Member for Maidstone and the Weald (Miss Widdecombe), on 8 May 2000, Official Report, columns 302–05W the remainder either attend college courses or are employed by companies outside the establishment.

At The Mount more up-to-date information shows an additional 40 prisoners employed in the categories shown in my reply to the right hon. Member for Maidstone and the Weald (Miss Widdecombe), on 8 May 2000, Official Report, columns 302–05W. The remainder are occupied on offending behaviour programmes, basic and key skills education and physical education courses.

The figures given for Usk in my reply to the right hon. Member for Maidstone and the Weald (Miss Widdecombe), on 8 May 2000, Official Report, columns 302–05W cover both Usk and Prescoed. There were 20 prisoners engaged on wing cleaning. The remaining 203 were engaged on craft work, education and offending behaviour programmes and should have been shown under "other occupations".

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the right hon. Member for Maidstone and The Weald (Miss Widdecombe), on 8 May 2000, Official Report, column 305–07W, on prison workshops, for what reasons HMPs Kirklevington, Usk, Wayland and Weare were not included; and if he will make a statement. [126541]

Mr. Boateng: Kirklevington, Usk and Weare prisons were not included in the answer because there are no industrial workshops at these establishments.

The average length of the working week for Wayland prison is 16 hours.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the prisons, by prison category, which have received additional funding for special projects under funding made available through the Comprehensive Spending Review; if he will give details of the projects; and if he will make a statement. [126553]

Mr. Boateng: Details of prisons, by prison category which have received additional funding through the comprehensive spending review have been placed in the Library.

The tables that have been placed in the Library show allocation of funding through the Comprehensive Spending Review for 1999–2000 and 2000–01 respectively.

Allocations for 1999–2000 are split into categories as follows:

bail information schemes funding to improve prisoners' access to and quality of bail information; education funding to expand education provision to include delivery of accredited basic skills; offending behaviour programmes funding to increase the number of accredited offending behaviour programmes delivered;

drugs—funding to implement the prison service Drug Strategy, to provide treatment for drug misusers and measures to reduce the supply of drugs into prisons; welfare to work—funding to develop schemes to improve offenders' access to employment; and juvenile estate—funding to provide a distinct under 18 estate, with a regime tailored to the population.

Allocations for 2000–01 are split into allocations for 'drugs' and 'other'.

The information in the tables is set out by prison by current prison category. The prisons are grouped by area and separately for 1999–2000 and for 2000–01 reflecting changes in Prison Service areas.

Police Manpower

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of (a) police officers, (b) civilian staff and (c) special constables, per head of population, in each police force in Great Britain and in total in (i) 1979, (ii) 1987 and (iii) each year since 1992. [126228]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I am responsible only for the police service in England and Wales. The available information on police officers has been placed in the Library, and is in the form of population per police officer. Information on civilian support staffing numbers in 1979 and 1987 is not available in a format that would allow comparisons to be made with population on a force by force basis at reasonable cost. However, the aggregate totals for civilian support staff numbers for 1979 and 1987 show that there was one civilian to 1,441 of the population in March 1979 and one civilian to 1,234 of the population in March 1987. Data on the number of special constables have only been collected with regularity since September 1995.

Research Projects

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the research projects (a) being undertaken and (b) recently commissioned by his Department; and if he will make statement. [126555]

Mr. Straw: My Department undertakes a wide range of research activities that support the development of information-led policy, including scientific and engineering research, market and opinion research and social research.

My Research, Development and Statistics Directorate conduct social research supporting all seven Home Office aims. I have placed a copy of the Directorate's work programme for this financial year in the Library and it will be made available on the Home Office website later this month.

The Fire Research and Development Group (FRDG) undertake research in support of Home Office aim seven. I have placed a copy of a table showing the current and planned FRDG research projects in the Library.

For the available information on market and opinion research, I refer to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Bath (Mr. Foster), on 8 June 2000, Official Report, columns 373–74W. In addition to this my Department is currently undertaking the following research:

"What else works"—for aim four, reducing in reoffending. Research commissioned from the University of York to examine effective psychological models, other than cognitive behavioural methods, for reducing reoffending which, on the basis of academic research have the potential for application with an offender population, and which address the gaps in current practice.

Fire Service efficiency, Control and Communications—An evaluation of issues related to the future provision of fire service control rooms and radio communications.

Two research projects commissioned by the Assessment and Consultancy Unit (ACU) to establish the reliability and validity of its assessment centres for the police Accelerated Promotion scheme.

An assessment of the fairness of the Police Initial Recruit Tests for applicants from ethnic minorities.

Porton Down

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the cost to date of the investigation by Wiltshire Constabulary into the Chemical and Biological Defence establishment at Porton Down; and how many (a) police officers and (b) civilians are employed on it. [126499]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I understand from the Wiltshire Constabulary that the cost of the investigation so far is estimated at £335,000; and that 16 police officers (including two Ministry of Defence police officers) and five civilians are currently employed on it.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people (a) have voluntarily contacted the police, (b) the police have contacted and (c) have contacted designated support groups and their helplines in connection with the Wiltshire Constabulary inquiry into events at Porton Down. [126792]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I understand from the Wiltshire Constabulary that, although the information is not available in precisely the form requested, they are aware of around 700 people who have at one time or another expressed interest or concern in the events which gave rise to the inquiry, and that they have been in touch with about 300 people in connection with the inquiry.

Assets (Civil Forfeiture)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the compatibility of the proposals on civil forfeiture of assets in Chapter 5 of the Performance and Innovation Unit report, Receiving the Proceeds of Crime, with the European Convention on Human Rights; and if he will make a statement. [126597]

Mr. Charles Clarke: We have given this issue careful consideration. It is my intention that the proposals for legislation which I bring forward to Parliament on civil forfeiture will be compatible with the Convention.

Detention Centre, Doncaster

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the new detention centre near Doncaster to open; what its initial and full capacity will be; and if he will make a statement. [126593]

Mrs. Roche: The Immigration Service will start to use the new Immigration Detention Centre within the grounds of Lindholme Prison on 10 July. At full capacity Lindholme Detention Centre will house 112 male detainees aged 21 and over. The allocation of immigration detainees into the establishment will be phased over a four week period with 28 detainees being sent to the Centre each week.

Global Cultural Diversity Congress

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answers of 12 June 2000, Official Report, column 518W, and 17 March 2000, Official Report, column 376W, if he will place in the Library the text of the review conducted by the Chairman of the Commission for Racial Equality into the collapse of the Global Cultural Diversity Congress. [126537]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 17 March 2000, Official Report, columns 376–77W.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a breakdown of the total cost to public funds of the collapse of the Global Cultural Diversity Congress. [126552]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Until the report of the findings of the liquidator, it is not possible to provide a breakdown of the total cost to public funds.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what (a) reports have been received by his Department from and (b) discussions have been held with, the liquidator in respect of Global Cultural Diversity Congress 2000 Ltd. [126560]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: On 28 March we were sent a copy of the "Report to Creditors" which was sent to all known creditors, including potential creditors.

No discussions have been held with the liquidators.

Illegal Entrants

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from foreign Governments regarding the civil penalty for carrying clandestine illegal entrants under the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999. [126530]

Mrs. Roche: Since the civil penalty provisions of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999, were introduced in Dover and Coquelles on 3 April, we have received four inquiries about them from foreign Embassies in London. These have taken the form of three fax messages, two from the Polish Embassy and one from the Czech Embassy, and a telephone call from the Spanish Embassy. All were asking about procedures, and all four were directed to the Civil Penalty Central Administration Unit (CPCAU) which was set up to administer the civil penalty provisions. No representations or other form of communication on this matter from any foreign government have been received.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) companies have gone into (i) receivership and (ii) liquidation and (b) individuals been declared bankrupt as a result of inability or failure to pay the civil penalty for carrying clandestine entrants under the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999. [126532]

Mrs. Roche: As far as I am aware, the answer to all these questions is none. But the road haulage industry has nothing to fear from the civil penalty provisions of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999, provided that the driver of the vehicle checks his load before embarking for the United Kingdom to ensure that there are no clandestine illegal entrants on board.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons have been served with civil penalty notices under the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999 for carrying clandestine illegal entrants in their vehicles; what type of vehicle was involved in each case; what the level of the penalty was in each case; what the nationality of the person served with the penalty was in each case; how many companies have been served with the penalty (a) in addition to and (b) instead of persons directly responsible for driving the vehicles; how many appeals have been entered against the penalties; and how many of them have been successful; and if he will make a statement. [126531]

Mrs. Roche: Between 3 April, when the civil penalty provisions of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999 were introduced, and 11 June, penalties were imposed in respect of 189 separate incidents where vehicles were found to contain clandestine illegal entrants. The vehicles comprised 177 heavy lorries, four vans and eight private motor cars.

In 56 cases, the driver of the vehicle was British. The 131 other cases involved four drivers who were Austrian, five Belgians, two Bosnians, four Bulgarians, five Czechs, four Dutch, 27 French, 15 Germans, four Hungarians, two Irish, 12 Italians, five Lithuanians, one Luxembourgeois, ten Poles, three Portuguese, one Romanian, five Slovaks, six Slovenians, ten Spaniards, one Tunisian and five Turkish. In two cases, the driver was a stateless person. In all but 26 cases, the nationality of the driver was the same as that of the company which owned the vehicle. Where there were differences they were as follows. Two British drivers were driving Irish-owned vehicles; and in one case each, British drivers were driving vehicles owned in France and Italy. Two Belgian drivers were driving vehicles owned in Italy. Two Lithuanian drivers were driving vehicles owned in Austria. In one case each, French drivers were driving vehicles owned in Belgium, Germany, Spain and Austria. In one case each, Turkish drivers were driving vehicles owned in Germany, Austria and the Netherlands. In one case, each Slovak drivers were driving vehicles owned in Germany and the Czech Republic. One driver from Luxembourg was driving a vehicle owned in Austria; one driver from Croatia was driving a vehicle owned in Italy; one driver from Hungary was driving a vehicle owned in Austria, one driver from Bulgaria was driving a vehicle owned in Germany; one driver from Tunisia was driving a vehicle owned in Italy; one driver from Spain was driving a vehicle owned in Italy; one driver from Slovenia was driving a vehicle owned in Italy; one Dutch driver was driving a vehicle owned in Germany; and, one German driver was driving a vehicle owned in Austria. The two drivers who were stateless were both driving their own vehicles.

In every case, the driver of the vehicle was served with a penalty notice. In addition, in all but 11 of the cases cited, penalty notices were also served on the owners or hirers of the vehicle. In 26 cases this involved the serving of penalty notices on more than two persons or companies in respect of a single incident.

In each case, the level of the penalty was £2,000 per clandestine illegal entrant detected. The penalties imposed ranged from £2,000 (one illegal entrant detected) to £100,000 (50 illegal entrants detected).

One hundred and one letters of objection have been received, in which the responsible person has sought to show why the penalty should not be levied, and thus far two have been successful.

Passport Agency

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the cost is to public funds of the establishment of the UK Passport Agency's press office; how many press officers are to be employed; what salaries they are to be paid; and if he will make a statement. [126527]

Mrs. Roche: The United Kingdom Passport Agency is establishing a press office. There will be one press officer, working to the Agency's Head of Communications, whose job will also encompass market research, writing information leaflets and liaison with the travel trade. The salary will be in the region of £22,000.

Asylum and Immigration Act 1996

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have been brought to date under section 8 of the Asylum and Immigration Act 1996. [126528]

Mrs. Roche: One.

Compulsory Voting

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his policy is on the introduction of compulsory voting at (a) local and (b) national elections. [126539]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Government have no plan to introduce compulsory voting at either local or national elections.

Detention Centres

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his planned timetable is for establishing and bringing into operation the detention centres at (a) Thurleigh, (b) Harmondsworth and (c) Aldington. [126594]

Mrs. Roche: We are in the process of selecting private sector suppliers to design, build and operate all three centres. The competition is being run under European Community Procurement Rules. Our timetable is to take delivery of the buildings and to start up operations within approximately 12 months.

Taskforces

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what task forces have been set up by his Department; when each was set up; if he will list their members and the remuneration received in each case; and if he will make a statement. [126526]

Mr. Straw: The Home Office has set up the following task forces, which include or included non-public servants, since May 1997:

Task Force on Youth Justice (established June 1997, reported July 1998);

Human Rights Task Force (established January 1999); and National Crime Reduction Task Force (established March 2000).

The membership of each of these bodies is contained in the tables. Where appropriate, expenses were paid to some members of these task forces. No other remuneration has been made.

Television Licences

Mrs. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women were sent to prison having defaulted on a fine imposed for using a television without a licence in each of the last five years. [126460]

Mr. Boateng: The information requested is given in the table. This information is also published in "Prison statistics England and Wales" a copy of which is in the Library.

Cycle Parking (London)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what assessment he has made of the value of the bans on cycle parking in central London for security purposes; and how many cycles have been used in terrorist offences since 1970; [126408]

(2) if he will discuss the ban on chaining cycles to railings outside public buildings in London with the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis with a view to removing it. [126407]

Mr. Straw: Discussions have taken place with the Metropolitan Police and we are satisfied that the wide range of protective security measures taken by the police to improve security of the streets in light of current terrorist threats, have been devised and maintained solely to counter such threats. As the threat diminishes, so too will the need for restrictive security measures.

Bicycles have been used as a terrorist weapon in the United Kingdom on four occasions since 1970:

29 August 1985: Belfast
30 March 1990: Newry
13 August 1994: Bognor Regis
13 August 1994: Brighton

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the total cost to the public departments of dealing with asylum seekers in 2000–01; and what was the total cost in 1999–2000. [126088]

Mrs. Roche: The Home Office and the Department of Health made payments totalling £590 million for supporting asylum seeking adults, families and children in 1999–2000. The costs of asylum support depend on a wide variety of factors and estimates for 2000–01 remain under review. The Home Office has a provisional allocation of £300 million for the support of adults and families in 2000–01.

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if asylum seekers from Zimbabwe are liable to be fast-tracked through the asylum determination process. [125126]

Mrs. Roche: All asylum cases are considered on their individual merits in accordance with the United Kingdom's international obligations. While it is sometimes necessary, in managing the Immigration system as a whole, to prioritise cases or groups of cases on the basis of nationality where there is a compelling reason for doing so, the number of Zimbabwean asylum applications remains low and they are currently not afforded any special priority as a result of their nationality.

CABINET OFFICE

Government Car and Despatch Agency

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office, pursuant to her answer of 13 June 2000, Official Report, column 614W, how many cars have been purchased by the Government Car and Despatch Agency since May 1997 other than through the Government Car Service. [126867]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Since May 1997, the Government Car and Despatch Agency has purchased four cars other than through the Government Car Service.

Staff Secondments

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will list the employees from private industry seconded to the Cabinet Office, indicating the names of their employers and the terms and length of their secondment. [124791]

Marjorie Mowlam: The Cabinet Office has a long standing practice of taking a small number of secondees from the private sector. This important activity underpins the Government's commitment to developing a modern, flexible, outward focused Civil Service.

There are currently seven secondees from private industry to the Cabinet Office. There are four two-year secondees, one each from Carillion and PricewaterhouseCoopers, and two from Unilever. There are two one-year secondees, one each from Oracle and British Airways, and one secondee from Microsoft who is with us for eight months.

In all cases agreements are reached with the external organisation to ensure that the salary reimbursed by the Cabinet Office falls within the Civil Service pay range appropriate to the post.

TREASURY

Tax Relief (Small Companies)

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for what reason the existing tax relief for small companies investing in research and development excludes (a) sole practitioners, (b) partnerships and (c) companies which are not incorporated under the Companies Acts. [126587]

Mr. Timms: Research and Development (R&D) tax credits are targeted on companies because the vast bulk of R&D activity is carried on by incorporated businesses. This limitation also keeps the scheme simple and straightforward.

Knowledge Economy

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what definition is used in the Review of the Knowledge Economy of the goal of universal access to the internet; and if he will make a statement. [126024]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Prime Minister has set the goal of achieving universal access to the internet for all who want it by 2005. Access is defined as including access in the home through a personal computer or other form of appliance (for example a digital TV or games console), or on the move through a mobile appliance, or at a public access point.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received concerning the cross-departmental review on the Knowledge Economy; and if he will make a statement. [126051]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 15 June 2000]: Representations were made by a range of external organisations and individuals during the course of the review. The outcome of the review will be announced as part of the Government's new spending plans for 2001–02 to 2003–04.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will answer the written question reference No. 121789 tabled by the right hon. Member for Birkenhead on 9 May. [126563]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Shortly.

NIRS2 Computer System

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of (a) the current total cost to the Exchequer and (b) the final total cost to the Exchequer of the problems associated with the NIRS2 computer system. [125632]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 13 June 2000]: The problems associated with the delayed implementation of the NIRS2 system during 1997–98 have resulted in compensation payments being made by the Inland Revenue and DSS to pension providers and benefit recipients. The total paid so far by the Revenue to pension providers is £46.2 million. The total paid by the DSS to benefit recipients is £2.6 million.

It is not possible at this stage to estimate the total amounts that will become payable. All costs relating to the correcting of problems with the NIRS2 system itself have been met by Andersen Consulting.

National Insurance

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total of (a) interest so far accrued by the National Insurance Fund as a result of the late disbursement of the age-related rebates on contracted-out money purchase pension schemes and (b) interest so far owing to providers of COMP schemes as compensation for late disbursement of rebates. [125631]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 13 June 2000]: In relation to 1997–98, additional interest so far paid to pension providers as a result of late national insurance rebates is some £46.2 million. On the assumption of a 6 per cent. rate of return on gilts, an equivalent amount of interest has accrued to the National Insurance Fund. The amount of interest accrued and the compensation to money purchase schemes specifically cannot be calculated.

Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the revenue implications of levying employer national insurance contributions on (a) private medical insurance offered to employees, (b) employee Christmas parties, (c) rape alarms for employees, (d) sports facilities for employees and (e) nursery facilities for employees. [126183]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. Pickles) on 9 February 2000 Official Report, column 216W.

Limited Liability Partnerships

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the reduction in tax paid by a limited company with a revenue of £50 million per year by converting into a limited liability partnership under the Government's Limited Liability Partnerships Bill. [125344]

Dawn Primarolo: The answer to this question will depend on the particular facts, for example the number of members of the limited liability partnership.

Company Taxation

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he proposes to publish his proposals for bringing taxation of partnerships into line with company taxation. [126048]

Dawn Primarolo: There are no proposals to bring the taxation of partnerships into line with company taxation.

Windfall Tax

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much money has been raised by the windfall tax in (a) 1999 and (b) 2000 to date. [126279]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Windfall tax receipts were £2,610 million in December 1997 and £2,614 million in December 1998. There have been no subsequent receipts.

Taxation (EU)

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which EU tax proposals currently under consideration could be agreed under qualified majority voting if the current draft of the Treaty of Nice is accepted. [126794]

Dawn Primarolo: As the Government's White Paper on the IGC clearly states, the Government are committed to retaining unanimity on tax issues.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what definition the Government use of unfair tax competition in their work in the EU on that issue. [126795]

Dawn Primarolo: The conclusions of the ECOFIN Council meeting on 1 December 1997 concerning taxation policy state that there is a > need for coordinated action at European level to tackle harmful tax competition in order to help achieve certain objectives such as reducing the continuing distortions in the single market, preventing excessive losses of tax revenue or getting tax structures to develop in a more employment friendly way.

Tax Credits

Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has for undertaking publicity campaigns ahead of the introduction of integrated child credit and employment credit; and if he will make a statement. [126182]

Dawn Primarolo: The Integrated Child Credit will bring together the different strands of support for children in the Working Families Tax Credit, Income Support/Jobseeker's Allowance and the Children's Tax Credit, to create a seamless system of financial support for children to be paid to the main carer. The adult credit element of WFTC will, along with the Disabled Person's Tax Credit and the Employment Credit component of the New Deal 50 plus, form the foundation of a new employment tax credit which will extend the principle of WFTC to people without children. Paid through the wage packet the employment tax credit will form a single visible instrument, underpinned by the national minimum wage, to make work pay. The new credits will begin to be introduced from 2003.

The Budget paper "Tackling Poverty and Making Work Pay—Tax Credits for the 21st Century" sets out this next stage of reform in more detail.

Every effort will be made to publicise and raise awareness of the new credits.

Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the cost implications to public funds of phasing out the working families tax credit and replacing it with integrated child credit and employment credit. [126181]

Dawn Primarolo: The cost of introducing the new tax credits will depend on the detailed design parameters. These have yet to be finalised. However an illustrative example of the cost of extending an employment tax credit to people without children is set out in paragraph 3.24 of the Treasury paper "Tackling poverty and Making Work Pay—Tax Credits for the 21st Century".

Financial Exclusion

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has to provide funding to assist less well off people to buy houses under the IDA scheme. [126548]

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to promote savings by people on low incomes. [126406]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government are committed to encouraging people to make provision for financial security throughout their lives. They are seeking to create an environment which promotes savings opportunities for everyone, based on three principles of fairness, flexibility, and confidence and transparency. The Government have already announced measures to extend the savings habit to all, including the introduction of Individual Savings Accounts, stakeholder pensions and all-employee share schemes, as well as working with the financial service providers to tackle financial exclusion.

Welfare to Work and ONE Review

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received concerning the cross-departmental review on Welfare to Work and ONE; and if he will make a statement. [126895]

Mr. Andrew Smith: A number of representations have been received on the cross-departmental review of Welfare to Work and ONE. The review is making excellent progress. In due course details of all aspects of the 2000 Spending Review will be included in a Spending Review White Paper in the normal way.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Driving Standards Agency

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the business plan of the Driving Standards Agency concerning its future policy on test centre closures; if he will list, by region, the test centres targeted for closure; and what the timetable is for such closures. [125588]

Mr. Hill: The Driving Standards Agency's Business Plan for 2000–01 announced targets for the disposal of all vacant space over a five-year period. The target for 2000–01 is a 48 per cent. reduction, which should save fee payers about £145,000 annually. Closures of individual test centres will be considered on their merits and with regard to local circumstances.

The Agency has consulted on the closure of the following driving test centres in the Wales and Western Area:

Pembroke Dock and Haverfordwest—rationalising at Withybush.

Portsmouth—relocating to the north of the city.

Minehead.

Representations are currently being considered.

For the future, proposals for test centre openings and closures will, as far as practicable, be considered across the group of centres serving a locality. When proposals for a locality have been developed, the Agency will consult interested parties. This strategy should provide a network of improved test centres delivering a better quality of customer service, while adapting to changes in the demand for driving tests and test requirements.

RMS St. Helena

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 5 June 2000, Official Report, column 59W, on RMS St. Helena, for how long RMS St. Helena was made available for service during the Falklands conflict; and for how many days it was in the war zone. [125592]

Mr. Hill: RMS St. Helena was made available for Royal Navy charter between May and September 1982 but did not leave the UK until 13 June 1982. The ship was in the war zone for 17 days from 26 June 1982 to 12 July 1982 which was the end of the qualifying period.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many civilians served on RMS St. Helena during the Falklands conflict; of these how many were from (a) St. Helena, (b) the Falklands, (c) the United Kingdom and (d) elsewhere; and how many have been awarded the South Atlantic Medal. [125593]

Mr. Hill: Approximately 32 civilians served on RMS St. Helena at the time of the Falklands War. Of these, 21 were from St Helena, none from the Falklands, 11 were from the United Kingdom and none from elsewhere. None of these people have been awarded the South Atlantic Medal.

Road Deaths (North Yorkshire)

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he has taken to reduce the number of deaths on North Yorkshire's roads. [125872]

Mr. Hill: This Government are committed to further improvements in road safety. We launched a new road safety strategy in March this year, and we are providing substantial extra resources for Local Transport Plans.

In the Local Transport Capital Settlement for 2000–01, North Yorkshire County Council (NYCC) received £8.5m as a block allocation, an increase of 58 per cent. over 1999–2000. This increase will allow NYCC to place additional emphasis on local safety schemes during the current financial year.

We have also in the region commissioned two safety studies which will investigate trunk road safety problems, one between Bramham and Barton on the A1 and the other between Scotch Corner and Penrith on the A66. Details of these studies, together with other planned trunk road safety schemes, are outlined in the letter from the Acting Chief Executive of the Highways Agency to the hon. Member, 29 February 2000, Official Report, columns 190W-92W.

In North Yorkshire there has been a continuing reduction in the fatal and seriously injured categories, and in 1998 the County met the then national target of a one third reduction by the year 2000 compared with the 1981–85 base.

Road Accidents (A21)

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many accidents involving one or more vehicles occurred on the stretch of the A21 between the intersections with the B2079 and B2099 in each of the last five years, setting out in each case whether personal injury occurred. [125735]

Mr. Hill: The numbers of personal injury accidents on this stretch of road is shown for the last five years for which figures are available.

	Number
1994	6
1995	7
1996	11
1997	7
1998	11

No information is available regarding damage-only accidents.

Campers (Unauthorised Waste)

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 8 June 2000, Official Report, column 312W, what representations he has received from local authorities and others concerning the effectiveness of powers under section 59(b) of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 in penalising the depositing of waste by unauthorised campers. [125772]

Mr. Mullin: I am not aware of any representations on the effectiveness of these powers.

Housing

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what steps he is taking to evaluate new approaches to allocating social housing, as proposed in the Housing Green Paper; and if he will make a statement; [126013]

(2) what recent guidance he has given to local authorities on dealing with categories of applicants who have not traditionally applied for local authority accommodation; and if he will make a statement. [126017]

Mr. Mullin: In April, we published a Housing Green Paper, "Quality and choice: A Decent Home For All". This included our proposals for modernising policies that affect people's opportunities to access social housing. The Housing Green Paper set out proposals to give applicants for social housing a greater say over where they live. Local authorities will be encouraged to develop lettings systems which provide applicants with much more information about available housing, allowing them to make decisions about their housing options. People who may not have traditionally applied for social housing will be able to apply for vacant properties but we will want to ensure that priority goes to people in the greatest housing need. However, in some areas, local authorities may wish to implement local lettings plans to tackle social problems on particular estates. This may involve giving priority to people who would help to create more sustainable communities or to provide housing for key public sector workers.

Responses to the Housing Green Paper have been invited by 31 July 2000. Following the consultation period, the Government will invite local authorities to pilot customer-focused schemes. This will include the need to test the impact of local lettings plans. All the pilot schemes will be carefully evaluated. The Government will also issue a revised version of the Code of Guidance on lettings and homelessness advising local authorities how they can implement choice-based lettings under the current legislative framework.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the definition of homelessness contained in the Housing Act 1996 will be used in future housing legislation; and if he will make a statement. [126016]

Mr. Mullin: The Housing Green Paper, which was issued for consultation on 4 April, includes proposals for strengthening the protection available to homeless people. The Government intend to take forward these proposals in the light of responses to the Green Paper. There are no present plans to change the statutory definition of homelessness.

Landing Slot Allocations

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to review the system of landing slot allocations at major UK airports. [126201]

Mr. Mullin: Slot allocation is governed by EC Regulation 95/93. At airports where demand for slots significantly exceeds supply, they are allocated by an independent slot co-ordinator, using criteria set out in the Regulation, in international guidelines, and in any local rules. There are currently four such airports in the UK: London Heathrow, London Gatwick, London Stansted and Manchester. We are awaiting proposals from the Commission for reform of EC 95/93.

Landfill

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment his Department made, prior to the publication of the Waste Strategy 2000: England and Wales (Command Paper 4693), of the experiences in other countries of landfill mining, with particular reference to Germany; and if he will make a statement. [126633]

Mr. Mullin [holding answer 19 June 2000]: UK landfill practices differ from most other countries. The mixing of hazardous and non-hazardous waste is more common in UK landfill sites, and they contain more moisture due to wet landfill operating systems. There would be significant engineering problems in drying excavated waste, some of which would be hazardous. The Environment Agency has therefore advised that landfill mining has limited potential in the UK.

Ministerial Visits (Overseas)

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what was the (a) itinerary, (b) cost and (c) purpose of his visit to (i) Nigeria and (ii) Sierra Leone in the week beginning 12 June. [126547]

Mr. Prescott [holding answer 19 June 2000]: I visited Nigeria and Sierra Leone at the request of the Prime Minister from 11–15 June in order to enhance bilateral relations, encourage UK business and thank the service men and women leaving Sierra Leone as well as visiting those who have just arrived.

I visited Abuja, Lagos, Kano and Freetown. In Nigeria I was accompanied by a business team and met the President, Vice-President and other Ministers as well as religious leaders, NGOs and British and Nigerian business leaders.

In Sierra Leone I met the President, Vice-President and Foreign Secretary and the Mayor and other civic leaders of Freetown. I also visited HMS Ocean and met service men and women from the Royal Marines, the Royal Navy, the Royal Naval Reserve and 2 Royal Anglian, who are providing the Short Term Training Team, as well as members of other armed services.

The cost of my visit to Nigeria was approximately £5,500. For security reasons I flew to Sierra Leone with the RAF. The cost was approximately £24,000.

Countryside Access

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate the Government have made of the cost to public funds of implementing their proposals on access to the countryside, including start-up costs and operational costs. [126863]

Mr. Mullin [holding answer 19 June 2000]: Placing monetary values on the cost of the Government's proposals for creating a new statutory right of access to open countryside well in advance of such a right coming into force is inevitably subject to a degree of uncertainty. The Government have undertaken a Regulatory Impact Assessment which suggests the additional annual costs to the public sector, for which monetarised values have been derived, to be in the order of £2 million to £3 million a year, with one-off costs of about £6 million.

Telecommunications Masts

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what account local authorities are obliged to take of public health concerns when determining planning applications for telecommunications masts. [126986]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Health considerations and public concern can in principle be material considerations in determining applications for planning permission and prior approval. Whether such matters are material in a particular case is ultimately a matter for the courts. It is for the decision-maker (usually the local planning authority) to determine what weight to attach to such considerations in any particular case. In doing so, authorities may have regard to the report of the Independent Expert Group on Mobile Phones published on 11 May.

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with the Scottish Executive on their advice to local authorities with respect to planning applications for telecommunications masts. [126988]

Ms Beverley Hughes: My officials regularly discuss aspects of telecommunications development with officials from the Scottish Executive. They have, in particular, held discussions about the range of actions being taken forward in response to the Stewart report's recommendations on planning.

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what guidance he has given to local authorities with respect to determining planning applications for telecommunications masts; and if he will make a statement. [126987]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Government planning policy for telecommunications is set out in Planning Policy Guidance note 8 (revised): Telecommunications, and the Department's Circular 4/99, "Planning for Telecommunications". In addition, a letter was sent to all Council leaders on 23 July 1999, providing advice about the health aspects of telecommunications masts.

In its response to the report of the Independent Expert Group on Mobile Phones, issued on 11 May 2000 and placed in the Libraries of both Houses, the Government said that they were minded to introduce a requirement for an application for full planning permission for all new telecommunications masts, but would need to consult widely before doing so, including on the principle and precise scope of any new arrangements. A copy of the response was sent to all Chief Planning Officers on 11 May.

We aim to issue a consultation document in the summer, with a view to being able to introduce revised procedures and guidance by the end of the year. In the meantime, Local Planning Authorities should continue to deal with planning applications for telecommunications on the basis of the current legislative arrangements and policy guidance.

Recycling

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps the Government are taking to enable local authorities to meet the set-up costs for intensive recycling. [126469]

Mr. Mullin: Funding for local authorities is being considered as part of the current spending review, alongside all the Government's spending pressures. The outcome of the review will be announced by the end of July.

NORTHERN IRELAND

RUC Special Branch

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland at what time and on what date the RUC Special Branch's Tasking and Co-ordinating Group was informed by any branch of the security forces or services of security operations associated with incidents in the Forfar Street area of Belfast on 9 September 1987, the Newington Street area of Belfast on 16 May 1988, the Waterville area of Belfast on 23 September 1988 and the Forterllian Drive area of Belfast on 12 February 1989. [114593]

Mr. Ingram: My hon. Friend refers to the following:

The incident that occurred in Forfar Street area on 9 September 1987. I have assumed he is referring to the murder of Patrick Hamill on 8 September 1987. The details of the incident were referred to the Royal Ulster Constabulary's Tasking and Co-ordinating Group at 17.55 hrs on 8 September 1987;

The incident that occurred in the Newington Street area on 16 May 1988. I have assumed he is referring to the murder of Mr. Terence McDade on 10 May 1988. The details of the incident were referred to the Royal Ulster Constabulary's Tasking and Co-ordinating Group at 22.39 hrs on 10 May 1988;

The incident that occurred on 23 September 1988. An exact time of when the incident was referred to the Royal Ulster Constabulary's Tasking and Co-ordinating Group is not available, but police were informed at 04.32 hrs on 23 September 1988;

The incident that occurred in the Forterllian area on 12 February 1989. I have assumed he is referring to the murder of Mr. Patrick Finucane at Fortwilliam Drive. The details of the incident were referred to the Royal Ulster Constabulary's Tasking and Co-ordinating Group at 19.41 hrs on 12 February 1989.

No-smoking Policy

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on (a) the effectiveness of his Department's no-smoking policy and (b) the proportion of his Department's offices that do not allow smoking. [125150]

Mr. Mandelson: The NIO has a well established policy on smoking. A complete ban on smoking has operated effectively in the Department since 1995. This policy is supported by participation in the national no-smoking day campaign and a series of health awareness events where staff who smoke are offered practical advice and information on how to stop.

Smoking is not permitted in any NIO offices apart from designated smoking rooms.

Police Authority

Mr. Hope: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what arrangements have been made for the appointment of a new Police Authority for Northern Ireland to succeed the present Authority whose term of office expires on 28 June. [127323]

Mr. Mandelson: The Police Authority has a vital task to perform in securing the maintenance of an effective and efficient police force. It also has a very important role to play in continuing to enhance the relationship between the police and the public it serves in the period before the planned Policing Board takes over from the Authority.

I have therefore appointed the current Chairman, Vice-Chairman and 16 members of the Police Authority for Northern Ireland to serve from 29 June 2000 for a further three years (as required by statute) or until the Policing Board takes over from them, probably at the end of March 2001. I have also appointed four new members and in making those appointments I have, as required by the Police (NI) Act 1998, consulted the 26 local district councils. In addition, and in accordance with the guidelines issued by Dame Rennie Fritchie, the Commissioner for Public Appointments, applications for appointment were invited from other individuals. As a result, the Authority widely represents the community and will provide a necessary measure of continuity in the period leading to establishment of the Policing Board.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Organic Farming

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much financial assistance will be available to fund organic conversion in the current financial year. [127017]

Mr. Morley: We expect to spend £12 million on aid for conversion under the Organic Farming Scheme in financial year 2000–01.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which European Union countries provide continuous financial support to farmers after the conversion process to organic farming has been completed. [127019]

Mr. Morley: The hon. Member may like to refer to the table of statistics (page 51 of the Minutes of Evidence) on this matter included in the Report of the Inquiry on "Organic Farming and the European Union" undertaken by the House of Lords European Communities Committee (Sub-Committee D) in Session 1998–99 (HL Paper 93).

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of agricultural land is certified organic and in conversion in (a) Austria, (b) Denmark, (c) Finland, (d) France, (e) Sweden and (f) the United Kingdom. [127016]

Mr. Morley: In respect of organic areas in other EU member states, the hon. Member may like to refer to the table of statistics (page 49 of the Minutes of Evidence) on this matter included in the Report of the Inquiry on "Organic Farming and the European Union" undertaken by the House of Lords European Communities Committee (Sub-Committee D) in Session 1998–99 (HL Paper 93). Currently, around 3 per cent. of agricultural land in the UK is certified organic or in conversion.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the answer of 11 April 2000, Official Report, column 134W, on organic food, what additional financial assistance he will make available to farmers wishing to convert to organic farming, in addition to free conversion advice and on-farms visits by the Organic Conversion Information Service, before the Organic Farming Scheme reopens. [127025]

Mr. Morley: We have no plans to provide funding additional to the £12 million we already plan to spend in 2000–01 under the Organic Farming Scheme. The OFS will reopen to new applications early in 2001 following the review of the scheme, which is currently taking place.

Floods

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress the Environment Agency has made in implementing its action plan in response to the independent report on the Easter 1998 floods; and if he will make a statement on the serious flooding in Todmorden and other areas of northern England in early June. [127295]

Mr. Morley: The Chairman of the Environment Agency has provided me with a report of progress up to the end of April 2000. Copies are being placed in the House Libraries.

I am pleased to note that the major work programme set out in the Action Plan is almost complete.

Key developments since the Agency's last report, which covered the period to end of December 1999, are as follows:

Completion of the first phase of the telemetry works resulting in an additional 109 river level gauges, 16 river flow gauges and 65 rain gauges. These will enable conditions to be monitored during flooding and the calibration of flood models.

A concordat between the Agency and the Meteorological Office has been signed to provide a framework for improved liaison and exchange of data.

The Agency has completed its programme of visual inspections of its flood defences. Local authorities have inspected between 75 per cent. and 90 per cent. of their defences. The remainder are scheduled for completion by September in line with the Ministry's High Level Targets. Defences belonging to third parties have been inspected where identified through discussions with local authorities.

Of the 1.6 million properties within the flood plain, one million addresses have been identified as high risk. This will enable flood risk information and other publicity material to be better targeted within the wider flood plain.

A letter designed to raise awareness of the flood risk to caravan sites has been produced and distributed together with a request for site owners to make visitors aware of such risks and what they should do in the event of a flood.

The Agency is providing guidelines to enable the severity and extent of flooding to be calculated on a consistent basis in order to better inform post event surveys.

Two activities have yet to be fully completed by the Agency. These are the introduction of the new flood warning codes and revised management structures. The new flood warning codes are scheduled to be introduced on 12 September 2000. The introduction of the revised management structures will be phased during April to September 2000 in order to minimise the risk of disruption to services.

The Agency's Easter Floods Project Team has now completed its work and is to be congratulated for its efforts in delivering the Action Plan and meeting the priorities I set out in striving for a seamless and integrated service of flood forecasting, warning and response. The outstanding issues will be taken forward by the Agency's National Flood Warning Centre. Further activity in improving flood defence will be driven by the High Level Targets that the Government set last November.

As regards the flooding earlier this month, I am acutely aware of the suffering experienced by many communities in northern England, and express the Government's sympathy to all those affected. I have asked the Chairman of the Environment Agency to provide a report on the flooding, by 21 July 2000, to include:

the impact of the flooding;

the causes of the flooding, including assessment of the contributory factors suggested by local members of the public;

the effectiveness and timeliness of flood warnings; to what extent the effects of these floods were mitigated as a result of the measures taken to implement the Independent Report of the Easter 1998 floods; and what further lessons can be learned from these floods.

SCOTLAND

Employment Service

Ms Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what performance targets have been set in respect of the employment service in Scotland's aims and objectives in 2000–01. [127225]

Dr. Reid: The aim of the Employment Service is to help people without jobs find work and employers to fill their vacancies. The Employment Service in Scotland makes a significant contribution to an efficient and flexible labour market and to meeting the Government's objectives of high and stable employment and growth, opportunity for all and social inclusion. Its main priority is to help people faced with particular difficulties in the labour market move from welfare and economic inactivity into sustainable employment. It is taking forward an ambitious programme of technological change and business improvement and is preparing for the merger with the Benefits Agency in 2001. I am announcing today the targets we have set for the Employment Service in Scotland for 2000–01, which relate to its four key objectives.

Vision and Purpose

The Employment Service in Scotland aims to make a major contribution to an efficient and flexible labour market and to the Government's objectives of high and stable levels of employment and growth, opportunity for all and social inclusion. The Employment Service in Scotland works closely with employers, and with its private, public and voluntary sector partners to provide a quality service for all people without a job and to promote employment opportunities for all who can work. It aims to attract a diverse range of vacancies and to fill those vacancies quickly by matching the right people and skills with the right jobs. Its main priority is to help individuals facing particular difficulty in the labour market to move from welfare and economic inactivity into sustainable employment. It does this through correct application of the JSA regime, delivery of the New Deals and the pilot ONE service, and through the provision of appropriate advice training and support. The Agency has achieved much over the past three years. The challenge and opportunity now facing it is to sustain continuous improvement in its services to jobseekers and employers and to make these services more accessible and relevant to customer needs, through effective use of modern technology and close working with a wide range of partners.

Aim

To help people without jobs find work and employers to fill their vacancies.

Objective A

To help all people without jobs, and particularly those on welfare and at a disadvantage in the labour market, to find and keep work by providing appropriate information, advice, training and support and by encouraging employers to open more opportunities to them.

Targets

1. To help 20,292 participants in the New Deals and the Glasgow Employment Zone, directly or in partnership with others.
2. To help 11,200 people with disabilities into work, directly or in partnership with others.
3. To help 33,335 disadvantaged jobseekers into work, directly or in partnership with others.
4. To help 91,875 people from welfare into work, directly or in partnership with others.
5. To help 169,325 jobless people into work, directly or in partnership with others.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

Objective B

To ensure that the rights and relevant labour market responsibilities of people on JSA and other benefits are fulfilled, while helping to combat fraud and abuse of the benefits system.

Target

To ensure that the relevant labour market responsibilities of people on JSA are fulfilled in 94 per cent. of cases checked.

Objective C

To harness new technology, the pursuit of excellence and continuous improvement to deliver effective, efficient and accessible services to all people without jobs and to employers in Jobcentres and increasingly through other locations and means of communications.

Targets

1. To achieve a 91 per cent. customer service level for jobseekers.
2. To introduce the Learning and Work Bank, new Labour Market System, touch screen kiosks and a single national telephone number for employers by March 2001.

Objective D

To deliver services to all ES customers in a way which respects individual differences, helps to overcome disadvantages due to ethnicity, gender, age or disability and achieves the best possible outcome for all.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Capital Modernisation Fund

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the applications made by her Department to the Captial Modernisation Fund, giving the (a) intended recipients, (b) financial value and (c) outcome of each application. [126450]

Clare Short: DFID has made one application to the Capital Modernisation Fund, which was unsuccessful. This was to meet the costs of a proposed project to implement overseas Information Communications Technology centres to serve three African communities. The cost was estimated at £850,000.

Departmental Publications

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list (a) the total number of publications issued by her Department each year since 1997, (b) how many of each were printed and (c) the total cost of each publication. [126448]

Clare Short: As part of our commitment to openness, as well as to raising awareness and understanding of development issues, we now make publicly available all our strategy documents, including all country and institutional strategy papers, as well as all major consultation papers and speeches. Our publishing output has therefore expanded considerably.

Due to the disproportionate cost involved we are not able to provide the full level of details requested. However within the main categories we have produced:

36 × Country Strategy Papers

10 × Institutional Strategy Papers

8 × Consultation Papers

4 × Background briefings

18 × Speech booklets

10 × Issues of Development magazine.

We also produced this year a publications catalogue which lists the majority of departmental publications produced since 1997, together with information on how to obtain copies. A copy of the catalogue has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

Costs and print runs vary from a typical strategy paper (1,500 copies costing approximately £1,500) to Developments magazine (60,000 copies costing approximately £40,000 per issue, including distribution).

Departmental Reports

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list (a) the cost and (b) number of copies printed of the Departmental report in (i) 1999 (ii) 1998 and (iii) 2000. [126443]

Clare Short: The total cost and number of copies printed of the Departmental Report are as follows:

Year	Cost (£)	Copies printed
1998	33,672	1,500
1999	65,051	2,500
2000	98,000	3,500

Zimbabwe

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list (a) the number of project completion reports received from Zimbabwe since 1 May 1997 and (b) each project that has met its objective. [126452]

Clare Short: Since 1 May 1997, 10 Zimbabwe Project Completion Reports have been received. Of these, eight (80 per cent.) were judged to have either fully or largely achieved their objectives. The following table lists the reports received, indicates their overall achievement rating and describes the rating system used.

Zimbabwe project completion reports received since 1 May 1997

Project title	Overall achievement
Small-scale Irrigation Using Wells, Pilot Project	Very good
Zimbabwe Forestry Research and Institution Strengthening Project	Satisfactory
ATP Zimbabwe Iron and Steel Company (ZISCO)—completed February 1996	Poor
Insect Pest Management Project	Satisfactory
Wildlife Disease Epidemiology, Phase II Project	Satisfactory
National Measles Immunisation Days 1998 Project	Satisfactory
ATP: Supply of 300 Land Rovers'—completed June 1997	Very good

Zimbabwe project completion reports received since 1 May 1997

Project title	Overall achievement
Social Marketing of Mosquito Nets	Satisfactory
Children Under Stress	Satisfactory
Health Management Strengthening	Fair

[1] Zimbabwe Electricity Supply Authority (ZESA), Department of National Parks and Wildlife (DNPW), Posts and Telecommunications Corporation, Forestry Commission

Performance Rating

Very good: Fully achieved

Satisfactory: Largely achieved despite a few shortcomings

Fair: Only partially achieved, benefits and shortcomings finely balanced

Poor: Very limited achievement, extensive shortcomings

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if the police project in Zimbabwe funded by her Department will meet its objective as set out in her Department's Public Service Agreement. [126457]

Clare Short: A formal review of the Zimbabwe Republic Police (ZRP) Organisational Development Project in October 1999 showed that it was successful in contributing to DFID's objectives as set out in the Public Service Agreement. The review concluded that the project was enabling organisational change to take place in ZRP to the benefit of the people of Zimbabwe, including the poorest.

However, since February the ZRP has not enforced the law or upheld their own charter in relation to the attacks on the opposition and the land invasions. I have therefore decided that we will continue to support police activities which directly relate to confidence building with civil society, community based organisations and human rights groups. I have also suspended the supply of Land Rovers.

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development (1) pursuant to her answer of 12 June 2000, Official Report, columns 442–43W, on land acquisition in Zimbabwe, for what reasons she did not list (a) the number, acreage and cost of farms acquired, (b) the person to whom the farms were transferred and (c) the acreage which remains in production; [127092]

(2) pursuant to her answer of 12 June 2000, Official Report, columns 442–43W, on Zimbabwe, if she will place in the Library a copy of the (a) ODA evaluation conducted in 1988 and (b) 1993 study carried out by the Zimbabwean Comptroller and Auditor General . [127153]

Clare Short: As I have made clear, producing the information required would involve disproportionate cost. I am happy to place a copy of the 1988 ODA evaluation report in the House of Commons Library.

The 1993 study on land reform was prepared by the office of the Zimbabwean Comptroller and Auditor General.

Overseas Staff

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many staff and at what grades her Department employs in (a) Kazakhstan, (b) Uzbekistan, (c) Turkmenistan, (d) Tajikistan and (e) Kyrgyzstan. [126432]

Clare Short: Our programmes in these countries are small or non-existent and administered by Embassy staff, who are appointed by the FCO, and Staff Appointed In Country (SAIC). Details of staff and their grades for each country are as follows:

(a) Kazakhstan

DS9 (also covers programme in Kyrgyzstan)—70 per cent.

DS7 (also covers programme in Kyrgyzstan)—15 per cent.

SAIC Grade III—100 per cent.

(b) Uzbekistan

DS9—15 per cent.

SAIC II—100 per cent.

(c) Turkmenistan

DS9—15 per cent.

SAIC III—100 per cent.

(d) Tajikistan

No staff employed

(e) Kyrgyzstan

SAIC Grade II—100 per cent.

SAIC Grade III—100 per cent.

My Department also employs two Assistant Professional Officers on DFID rural livelihoods activities within a World bank project.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the total numbers of locally employed staff employed by her Department on (a) 1 May 1997 and (b) 1 May 2000. [126445]

Clare Short: Figures for locally employed staff, now known as Staff Appointed in Country (SAIC), were not collected centrally in 1997. The figure for SAIC employed by the Department on 1 May 2000 was 410.

Job Advertisements

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list (a) the total number and (b) the total cost of job advertisements placed by her Department since 1 May 1997. [126446]

Clare Short: The total number of advertisements and their associated costs in each of the financial years since 1997 are as follows:

	Number of advertisements	Costs (£)
1997–98	[1]313	991,487
1998–99	[1]324	1,025,832
1999–2000	326	1,064,554
2000–01[2]	40	216,435
Total	1,003	3,298,308

[1] Detailed records of the number of advertisements are not held for these years. The figures are estimates based on the actual costs which are held and other known financial information.
[2] To date

Sierra Leone

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what proportion of her Department's bilateral country programme aid for Sierra Leone is spent by the Government of Sierra Leone. [126458]

Clare Short: Currently, we are providing £10 million of programme aid to the Government of Sierra Leone for two purposes: to meet the Government's debt service obligations to the international financial institutions (IFIs); and to help pay the salaries of public sector teachers and health workers, and the police. The programme aid grant is administered on behalf of the Government of Sierra Leone by Crown Agents Financial Services Ltd. (CASL). CASL make current debt service payments direct to the IFIs on behalf of the Government of Sierra Leone as they become due. CASL reimburses the Government of Sierra Leone for prior expenditure on public sector salaries, and then carries out independent audit checks on payroll to guard against fraudulent claims.

Ministerial Offices (Refurbishment)

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the total cost of refurbishment and redecoration of her Department's ministerial offices since 1 May 1997. [126444]

Clare Short: Since 1997 our Department has spent the following amounts on the refurbishment of ministerial offices, which included replacement furniture and redecoration:

1998: £7,376
1999: Nil.

The figures for 2000 are not available yet.

Know How Fund

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what aid her Department is providing to Eastern European countries under the Know How Fund; and if she will make a statement. [125229]

Clare Short: Over the last five years bilateral programmes of financial and technical assistance to Eastern European countries have totalled around £80 million a year. This assistance is channelled directly to Governments, and also to other institutions including local governments, non-governmental and civil society institutions. In addition the UK provided assistance through its contributions to multilateral institutions including the European Community and World Bank.

HEALTH

Mead Webber Plant

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the nature is of the investigation the Meat Hygiene Service is planning into official veterinary surgeon supervision at the Mead Webber plant since 10 April; and what the timescale is for the investigation. [122042]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 15 May 2000]: I understand from the Food Standards Agency that it is arranging for Mead Webber Ltd.'s complaints against the Meat Hygiene Service (MHS) to be investigated independently. The investigation will be carried out as quickly as possible.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many Official Veterinary Surgeons have attended the Mead Webber abattoir since the Meat Hygiene Service took over responsibility for supervising it; and when Mr. Yogaratnam was appointed as OVS to the plant. [122056]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 15 May 2000]: I am advised by the Food Standards Agency that, owing to a fire at a central Government filestore in 1998, the Meat Hygiene Service (MHS) is unable to provide a categorical statement as to how many official veterinary surgeons (OVSs) have attended the Mead Webber abattoir since it took over responsibility for supervising these premises.

However, available records show that 19 OVSs have attended the Mead Webber abattoir since the MHS took over responsibility for supervising it. Two of these have acted as the lead OVSs throughout this period, and as such have been responsible for the production of HAS scores for the plant. The other 17 have been used to provide locum cover.

Mr. Yogaratnam was appointed as OVS to the Mead Webber plant in April 1997.

Staff Secondments

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many staff from his Department were seconded to private sector companies in (a) May 1997 to April 1998, (b) May 1998 to April 1999 and (c) May 1999 to April 2000; and if he will list in each case the companies to which staff were sent, the names and ranks of the staff involved and the duration of the secondment. [123424]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 24 May 2000]: Interchange is a key component of the reform agenda. The Modernising Government White Paper committed us to increasing interchange, in particular by bringing in more people on secondment and sending more of our people out. Secondments and attachments are part of the Interchange Initiative which promotes the exchange of people and good practice between the Civil Service and other organisations. All sectors of the economy are involved: voluntary, education, health, public and private.

Central records are held on the following secondments to the private sector which commenced in the years shown in the table.

Date	Number	Details
May 1997-April 1998	2	Howard Bloom, SCS, to Sema Group for 5 years Mr. W. Flynn, IP4 to Dawn til Dusk Plc for 1 year
May 1998-April 1999	0	No secondments, according to central records
May 1999-April 2000	1	Robert Newton, IP3 to Federal Mogul for 6 months

Accident and Emergency Units (Violence)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had, and with whom, about giving greater support to nursing staff working in accident and emergency units at NHS hospitals in the Greater London area to combat violence towards staff from the general public. [125767]

Ms Stuart: We are determined to ensure that National Health Service staff who spend their lives caring for others are not rewarded with intimidation and violence. Violence to staff is unacceptable and will not be tolerated.

"Working Together", the national human resources strategic framework for the NHS, sets out a number of HR targets and priorities for NHS employers. One of these concerns violence to staff. NHS employers have been asked to put in place systems for the recording and monitoring of violent incidents and to meet targets to reduce these by 20 per cent. by 2001 and 30 per cent. by 2003. Regional offices of the NHS Executive are asked to monitor progress against these targets. The London Regional Office through its performance management processes will be measuring progress against these targets in 2001.

Cosmetic Surgery

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the answer of 17 May 2000, Official Report, column 129W, on cosmetic surgery, what assessment he has made of the operation of regulations pertaining to advertising of cosmetic surgery; and what contact has taken place between his Department and the Department of Trade and Industry on the same. [126320]

Ms Stuart: Our response to the Health Committee's Fifth Report on the regulation of private and other independent healthcare made it clear that we agreed that normal advertising controls alone may not be sufficient in the field of cosmetic surgery to ensure that the information that patients receive is of an acceptable standard. Officials in the Department of Health and the Department of Trade and Industry worked together on this issue. The Care Standards Bill, as drafted, will allow us to introduce regulations covering standards of information given to patients in the independent sector, including promotional material.

Diabetes

Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has (1) to improve awareness among health care professionals of the risk factors and symptoms of diabetes; [126513]

(2) to raise awareness of diabetes among the public, with particular reference to those in higher-risk groups. [126512]

Mr. Denham: We recognise the importance of raising awareness about the risk factors and symptoms of diabetes among both the public and health care professionals. Ministers have asked the United Kingdom National Screening Committee, which advises Government on all aspects of screening policy, to consider whether there is a case for the introduction of a targeted screening programme for Type 2 diabetes and, if so, how this could most effectively be achieved. The conclusions of the Committee will inform the work of the Expert Reference Group for the National Service Framework for diabetes in England.

The aims of the diabetes National Service Framework are to improve health outcomes for people with diabetes by raising the quality of services and reducing variations between them. Its scope includes prevention, identification and management of diabetes and its complications.

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what methods his Department will use to identify the estimated one million people living undiagnosed with diabetes; [126427]

(2) what plans he has to move resources within the NHS from treating the complications of diabetes towards prevention and early diagnosis; [126397]

(3) what plans he has to reduce the incidence of diabetic complications through prevention, early diagnosis and intensive management of the condition. [126418]

Mr. Denham: We recognise the importance of detecting diabetes as early as possible. Ministers have asked the United Kingdom National Screening Committee, which advises Government on all aspects of screening policy, to consider whether there is a case for the introduction of a targeted screening programme for Type 2 diabetes and, if so, how this could most effectively be achieved. The conclusions of the Committee will inform the work of the Expert Reference Group for the National Service Framework for Diabetes in England that we announced last year. The scope of the Framework includes prevention, identification and management of diabetes and its complications.

Single Currency

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the costs to his Department of switching from the pound to the euro. [126399]

Ms Stuart: Should the United Kingdom decide to join the euro, the cost of the changeover would depend on the detailed approach taken to a changeover.

Service Costs

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the total cost of the (a) adolescent and child psychiatry service, (b) adolescent and child psychology service, (c) community psychiatric nursing service, (d) cervical cytology screening programme and (e) accident and emergency service in (i) 1970, (ii) 1980, (iii) 1990 and (iv) 1999. [126824]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 19 June 2000]: Information on the costs of the community psychiatric nurses is not collected centrally. Information is not collected separately on the child and adolescent psychology service.

The NHS Cervical Screening Programme began in 1988. The National Audit Office estimated in 1998 that the Programme costs around £132 million per year, around £34 per woman screened National Audit Office: The Performance of the NHS Cervical Screening Programme in England: Report by the Comptroller and Auditor General: HC678 Session 1997–98: 22 April 1998.

The latest information on the cost of child and adolescent psychiatry service and the accident and emergency service is shown in the table.

	Expenditure 1998–99
Adolescent and child psychiatry	123,278,175
Purchase of healthcare by HAs (A&E)	780,245,000

The adolescent and child psychiatry figure includes expenditure for in-patients, outpatients, royal college specialities and day care patients.

Coronary Care Services

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the targets he has set health authorities for coronary care services. [126111]

Yvette Cooper: The National Service Framework for Coronary Heart Disease was published on 6 March. The Framework sets 12 national standards for improved prevention, diagnosis and treatment, and goals to secure fair access to high quality services over the 10-year period. This will include building up capacity, increasing the specialist workforce, improving prevention and creating faster access to services.

Last October we announced a £50 million investment for the expansion of cardiac surgery. Last month we announced a further investment of £50 million, to be used to establish rapid access chest pain clinics, to speed up ambulance response times, to purchase defibrillators and to reduce waiting times for treatment.

Regional offices are working with their health authorities and National Health Service trusts to ensure that these resources are targeted most effectively to increase the use of marginal capacity and to meet the greatest need within their region. A top priority for Dr. Roger Boyle, the National Director for Heart Disease, is to look with regional offices and with cardiac centres at the initial plans to ensure that we make the very best use of all the available skills and capacity.

Correspondence

Sir Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the hon. Member for West Worcestershire will receive an answer to his letters of 23 March, 5 May and 2 June, relating to the case of his constituent, Ms Wendy Hands of Ashbrooke, Church Walk, Upton-upon-Severn, addressed to the Minister for Public Health. [126982]

Yvette Cooper: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply to his letters as soon as possible.

Adoption

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children were adopted in the UK in 1999. [126267]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Tom Cox dated 20 June 2000:

As National Statistician I have been asked to reply to your recent question about adoption.

The final numbers of adoptions recorded during 1999 in England, Wales and Northern Ireland are not yet available; the corresponding number in Scotland was 488.

The number of adoptions recorded in 1998 in the United Kingdom was 4,998.

WALES

Education and Health Funding

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much additional funding will be made available to (a) schools and (b) the Health Service in Wales as a result of specific measures announced in the Budget. [118188]

Mr. Hanson: There will be an increase of £49.6 million in the Welsh Block as a consequence of the increase in education funding for 2000–01 and of £1,299 million as a consequence of the increase in health funding for 2000–01 to 2003–04, £99 million of which will fall in 2000–01. The allocation of these funds is entirely a matter for the Assembly.

The Assembly Finance Secretary has announced allocations of £20.6 million to schools delegated budgets to raise standards of teaching and learning; £26.8 million for capital investments in schools; £2.2 million for teacher recruitment measures; and £40 million for joint working between NHS, Social Services, voluntary organisations and others to deal with all-year emergency pressures on the NHS and for the NHS to reduce waiting times. She has said that the rest of the increase will be allocated to health; discussions are ongoing on how best to allocate it to other identified priority areas.

Drugs

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent discussions he has had with the

First Secretary concerning the impact of (a) hard and (b) soft drugs upon Deeside; and if he will make a statement. [126518]

Mr. Hanson: My right hon. Friend and I have regular discussions with the First Secretary and other Assembly Secretaries about a range of topics including drug abuse.

On 25 May, Jane Hutt, the Assembly Secretary for Health and Social Services, launched "Tackling Substance Misuse in Wales: A Partnership Approach", copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House. New developments in North Wales include the appointment by the Community Drug and Alcohol Service of two young people's workers and a specialist midwife.

Rural Bus Services

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent discussions he has had with the First Secretary concerning the provision of improved rural bus services; and if he will make a statement. [126973]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I have regular discussions with the First Secretary on a range of topics including rural bus services.

I am pleased that the Assembly has decided to continue the Bus Subsidy Grant scheme in the current financial year. Of the £5 million budget, £3 million is reserved solely for boosting the number and range of services in rural areas. The balance is available for use at local authorities' discretion—which can include yet further support to rural services. These figures are in addition to approximately £10 million a year which authorities already spend on subsidising non-commercial local bus services throughout their areas.

Rural Wales

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent discussions he has had with the First Secretary concerning new policies to assist rural Wales; and if he will make a statement. [126972]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I have regular discussions with the First Secretary about a range of matters including the needs of rural Wales.

The Assembly is addressing the specific needs of rural Wales and its communities in the development of several new policies and programmes. These include the Communities First programme; Local Regeneration Fund; Objective 1 Single Programming Document; Objective 2 and Transitional Funding for many parts of the rural East; and the Rural Development Plan for Wales.

DEFENCE

No-smoking Policy

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on (a) the effectiveness of his Department's no-smoking policy and (b) the proportion of his Department's offices that do not allow smoking. [125158]

Dr. Moonie: My Department's aim, in line with wider Government policy, is to create a non-smoking working environment in so far as this reflects the wishes of staff. Detailed guidance on this policy is promulgated in the "Departmental Health and Safety Handbook, Joint Service Publication 375", a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

The implementation of departmental policy on smoking, in common with other health and safety matters, is a local line management responsibility, and consequently, no central record is held on the proportion of the Department's offices that do not allow smoking. This information could, therefore, be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Armed Forces Exercises

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the (a) Army, (b) Navy, (c) RAF and (d) TA exercises cancelled for budgetary reasons in (i) 1999–2000 and (ii) 2000–01. [125707]

Dr. Moonie: The following table sets out the Royal Navy exercises cancelled for budgetary reasons in the specified period.

No Army, RAF or TA exercises have been cancelled for budgetary reasons during 1999–2000.

No Navy, Army, RAF or TA exercises planned to take place during financial year 2000–01 have been cancelled (or are expected to be cancelled) for budgetary reasons.

RN exercises cancelled due to budgetary reasons—FY 1999–2000

Serial/name of exercise	Dates
1 FLOTEX (Flotilla Exercise)	November 1999
2 CADENCE BRAKE (Royal Marine winter driving training in Norway (precursor to serial 4))	November 1999
3 ASWEX 2000 (Ship, Submarine, Helicopter Anti-submarine warfare exercise)	January 2000
4 Royal Marine Winter Deployment (Arctic warfare training in Norway)	January 2000

Defence Intelligence and Security Centre

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current year's budget and staff establishment of the Defence Intelligence and Security Centre. [125201]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 12 June 2000]: The cash allocation for Financial Year 2000–01 is £18.448 million. The Defence Intelligence and Security Centre's current staff establishment is as follows:

	Number
Army Officers	41
Army Solders	166
Navy Officers	9
Navy Rating	28
RAF Officer	14
RAF Airmen	49
Civilian Non Industrial	122
Civilian Industrial	25
Total	454

BOWMAN Project

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what the cost has been to date of the BOWMAN project; [125783]

(2) what alternatives to the BOWMAN project he has (a) considered and (b) evaluated; and when he will make a decision on the future of the project. [125784]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Robert Walmsley to Mr. Robert Key, dated 20 June 2000:

I am replying to your questions to the Secretary of State for Defence about the BOWMAN communication project. This matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief of Defence Procurement and Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency.

As part of the BOWMAN project, we have examined a number of alternative technical options, and have reviewed whether the basic approach to BOWMAN remains valid in the light of rapid developments in the mobile communications field. The analysis demonstrates that BOWMAN can be a robust solution to the military requirement. Our primary effort has been directed to working with Archer Communications Systems Limited (ACSL), the nominated BOWMAN contractor, to establish whether an adequately de-risked solution can be provided on taut contractual terms. In parallel, study contracts were placed earlier this year with Computing Devices Canada and Thomson CSF to ascertain whether suitable alternatives to the current ACSL solution for BOWMAN might be available. These studies have reported and are being evaluated.

A decision on the way ahead for BOWMAN is expected later this Summer. At 31 March 2000, expenditure on BOWMAN which included work that would be relevant to solutions other than that being developed by ACSL, was some £260M at outturn prices.

DERA Public-private Partnership

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the inclusion of DERA West Freugh in the DERA public-private partnership. [125950]

Mr. Hoon: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 17 April 2000, Official Report, columns 366–67W, to my hon. Friend for Huddersfield (Mr. Sheerman), which outlined our proposals for the DERA public private partnership. These are described in more detail in the consultation document, a copy of which can be found in the Library of the House and on the internet at www.mod.uk/commercial/ppp/dera/.

Under current proposals, we envisage that the capabilities provided by West Freugh will form part of the NewDERA company. It is, therefore, likely that West Freugh would transfer to the private sector.

Our proposals are designated to secure a long-term future for both NewDERA and those elements to be retained within the Ministry of Defence. The new freedoms proposed for NewDERA will open up a range of commercial opportunities not previously available and help secure jobs in the longer term.

No final decisions on the PPP will be taken until all the inputs received during the consultation exercise, which ended on 9 June, have been fully analysed. We hope to be in a position to make an announcement on the way ahead for DERA before the summer recess.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reasons army doctors during the recent deployment in Sierra Leone and Senegal did not carry sufficient supplies of (a) mefloquine and (b) savarine; and if he will make a statement. [126055]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 15 June 2000]: The normal anti-malarial drugs for Sierra Leone are mefloquine, or chloroquine and proguanil tablets for aircrew. Supplies of these drugs were readily available. The reasons why some personnel deployed to Sierra Leone without supplies of mefloquine are being investigated by the Ministry of Defence. The French anti-malarial drug savarine, which is a combination of chloroquine and proguanil, was acquired locally as an interim measure and distributed within 24 hours of personnel arriving in theatre. Personnel who had deployed without supplies of mefloquine were transferred to mefloquine within four days of arrival in theatre.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on medical preparedness of (a) the spearhead battalions of the Rapid Reaction Corps and (b) other armed forces personnel in all three Services, with particular reference to Sierra Leone; and if he will make a statement. [126056]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 15 June 2000]: It is the Ministry of Defence's policy that all Service personnel should be up to date with routine vaccinations and that members of the Joint Rapid Reaction Forces should be up to date with certain additional vaccinations, depending on their degree of readiness. Personnel deploying to high risk areas should receive further vaccinations specific to the risks they face. Other aspects of medical preparedness will depend on the role of the deploying forces and the geographical location to which they are deploying.

Service Personnel (Medical Records)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what records are kept (a) centrally, (b) in theatre and (c) on individual service personnel relating to (i) inoculations, (ii) prophylactic drugs and (iii) other medications. [126053]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 15 June 2000]: Details of inoculations, prescribed prophylactic drugs and other medications are recorded in individuals' personal medical records known as Form F Med 4. These records are normally held by the individuals' parent units. Information may also be held on medical centre computer systems. Any medical treatment administered to personnel in-theatre is recorded for each individual in an operational medical record (Form F Med 965). This information is incorporated into F Med 4s on return. In addition, the Army records the nature and date of vaccinations given to individuals centrally on personnel information systems. A central record has been maintained on vaccinations given to personnel while deployed on Operation Palliser.

Land (Caversfield)

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will enforce the agreement between the Ministry of Defence and Hodge (Eastern) Ltd. on recreational land at Caversfield in Oxfordshire. [126663]

Dr. Moonie: The former Ministry of Defence land at Caversfield, sold to Hodge (Eastern) Limited in December 1996, included two areas of 'bare' land, which the clawback clause in the transfer refers to as open space either for playing fields or agricultural purposes.

There has been no breach of the agreement between the Ministry of Defence and Hodge (Eastern) Limited in relation to this open land.

RAF Feltwell

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when a Minister from his Department last visited RAF Feltwell. [126648]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 19 June 2000]: Since 1 May 1997 no Minister of this Department has visited RAF Feltwell.

Advertising

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much has been spent by his Department on advertising in each year since May 1997. [125695]

Dr. Moonie: This information is not required in the requested format, for internal MOD management purposes and, as a result, is not collected centrally. It could, therefore, be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, related cost information is as set out.

£ million

Financial year	PR Marketing and business support services	Expenditure by the Chief of Public Relations
1997–98	0.502	2.267
1998–99	0.844	2.328
1999–2000	1.114	2.741

Excluding staff salaries or associated costs

Security

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in respect of DA-Notice No. 4, how many (a) sites and (b) individuals have been identified where disclosure of locations and addresses would not be in the public interest. [126876]

Mr. Spellar: There are under 10 sites where disclosure of location would not be in the public interest. The locations of other sites covered by DA-Notice No. 4 are not concealed, although their security arrangements are classified.

Each Ministry involved in security and counter-terrorist measures holds its own list of high threat personnel addresses. That for the Ministry of Defence contains those of 22 serving military personnel, 46 retired military personnel, three civil servants and four Ministers.

Munitions Stocks

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what steps have been taken to restore stocks of precision guided and non-precision guided munitions back to pre-operation levels following Operation Allied Force; and if he will make a statement; [124207]

(2) what contracts have been placed to replace (a) Paveway II, (b) Paveway III, (c) RBL 755, (d) 1000lb bomb, (e) Alarm and (f) TLAM expended during operations in Kosovo, listing in each case the (i) company involved, (ii) estimated date of delivery, (iii) value of the contract and (iv) cost per unit; and if he will make a statement. [124221]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 5 June 2000] [pursuant to his reply, 13 June 2000, c. 559–60W]: The unit price of Paveway II is some £18,000 (VAT exclusive) and not £8,000 as previously stated.

PRIME MINISTER

Correspondence

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister how many (a) special advisers and (b) officials are authorised to respond to correspondence on his behalf. [126506]

The Prime Minister: The nature and origin of correspondence will determine whether a Minister, official or special adviser replies.

Press Contacts

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if he will introduce a code for Ministers and special advisers on contacts with the Press. [126502]

The Prime Minister: Guidance for Ministers on contacts with the Press is set out in the "Ministerial Code". Guidance for all civil servants, including special advisers, on contacts with the Press is set out in "Guidance on the Work of the Government Information Service".

Special Advisers

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister what methods are used to resolve conflicts of interest within the terms and conditions of employment in the case of special advisers invested with power to direct civil servants. [126297]

The Prime Minister: Advice on handling conflicts of interests for all civil servants is set out in the "Civil Service Management Code". For Special Advisers, this is supplemented by guidance set out in the "Model Contract for Special Advisers".

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the visits undertaken to the United States by (a) Ministers and (b) special advisers since 1 May 1997. [126549]

The Prime Minister: Detailed information in the form requested is not held centrally. A list of Cabinet Ministers' visits overseas costing more than £500, and information on spend by all Ministers on travel overseas for the period 2 May 1997 to 31 March 1999 was placed in the Library of the House on 17 June 1999, Official Report, columns 196–97W. This included the costs of accompanying special advisers. A similar list and information on spend for the financial year 1999–2000 is currently being assembled and will be published shortly.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Holocaust Survivors

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on progress with his discussions with the banking industry concerning charges levied on holocaust survivors in respect of conversion of pensions from deutschmarks to sterling. [122449]

Mr. Byers: Earlier this year I approached a number of major banks about their charging policy in respect of regular payments made by the German Government to survivors of the Holocaust living in the UK.

I am pleased that all the major banks have agreed to waive their charges relating to holocaust payments in future. The Department of Trade and Industry will seek the help of the German authorities to identify those who might benefit from this arrangement, but in the meantime potential beneficiaries should make themselves known to one of the following banks: Bank of Scotland; Barclays; HSBC; Lloyds TSB and Royal Bank of Scotland/ National Westminster.

These banks have agreed to waive future charges. Because of the large number of other payments the banks process, those who receive Holocaust-related payments from the German Government through a bank account should contact one of these banks to benefit from this new arrangement.

Distance Selling

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the (a) organisations and companies consulted in 1998–99 as part of the consultation on the EU directive on distance selling and (b) those organisations and companies that responded to this consultation. [125951]

Dr. Howells: Consultations on the implementation of the Directive 97/7/EC on the Protection of Consumers in respect of Distance Contracts (the Distance Selling Directive) were conducted in June 1998 and November 1999. A total of 576 organisations, including consumer and business organisations, individual businesses, and local authority trading standards departments, were consulted. In addition, there have been over 350 downloadings of the second consultation document from the DTI website at www.dti.gov.uk/CACP/ca/distance/

A list of the organisations, businesses and individuals consulted in 1998–99 and those that responded to this consultation has been made available for inspection in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the organisations and companies consulted in 1998–99 as part of the consultation on the EU directive on distance selling, indicating the organisations and companies that responded to the consultation. [126894]

Dr. Howells: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him today to his question above.

Insolvency

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how he defines the difference between responsible risk takers and culpable bankrupts for the purpose of implementing the recommendations of the Insolvency Working Party; and if he will estimate the proportion of each. [126035]

Dr. Howells: I am satisfied that there is a clear distinction to be drawn between individuals who are dishonest or whose conduct with regard to their creditors is irresponsible and those whose use of credit and treatment of their creditors is conscientious and above board. Examples of irresponsible conduct would be an individual continuing to trade and incur credit at a time when he or she knew themselves to be insolvent; or an individual consumer obtaining credit without any regard to his ability to repay the debts incurred. Information available from Official Receivers indicates that the very great majority of individuals subject to bankruptcy are neither dishonest nor irresponsible.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on what basis he estimates that seven to 12 per cent. of bankrupts are culpable; and what relationship these percentages have to the findings of the Insolvency Service's Study of Business Failures in January and February 1999. [126040]

Dr. Howells: An estimate of the number of bankrupts who may have been guilty of misconduct in relation to their creditors can be made by reference to the number of bankrupts reported by Official Receivers as having, prima facie, committed criminal offences; the number of bankrupts identified by Official Receivers as having committed criminal offences but in respect of whose affairs further investigation or prosecution would not, in the public interest, be warranted; and information obtained from Official Receivers as in their survey of Business Failures.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many (a) individuals and (b) firms are regulated by each of the bodies responsible for regulating the insolvency industry. [126484]

Dr. Howells: The Insolvency authorising bodies are responsible for the authorisation of individuals as insolvency practitioners. Firms cannot be authorised. The numbers of individuals concerned are:

	Number
The Association of Chartered Certified Accountants	155
Insolvency Practitioners Association	330
The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales	784
The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland	68
The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland	156
The Law Society	196
The Law Society of Scotland	20
The Secretary of State	125

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action his Department has taken over the report issued by Mr. Justice Ferris and his proposals for setting the fees of insolvency practitioners. [126486]

Dr. Howells: Following receipt of the first report by Mr. Justice Ferris, The Association of Business Recovery Professionals (formerly the Society of Practitioners of Insolvency) issued preliminary guidance to its members on the possible format of application for fee approval. Further guidance is awaiting publication of the final report of the Ferris Working Party and the issue of a revised Statement of Insolvency Practice on remuneration of office holders. My Department is represented on the Working Party and is continuing to monitor the position.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what inquiries his Department has made into (a) receiverships and (b) liquidations started more than 10 years ago but still not finalised; and how many liquidators come into this category. [126479]

Dr. Howells: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many complaints about the conduct of the insolvency practitioners have been lodged with each of the bodies responsible for regulating the insolvency industry since 1997. [126485]

Dr. Howells: The number of complaints about insolvency practitioners received between 1 January 1997 and 31 December 1999 for each authorising body is as follows:

	Number
Association of Chartered Certified Accountants	118
Insolvency Practitioners Association	347
Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales	597
Institute of Charted Accountants in Ireland	23
Institute of Charted Accountants in Scotland	115
The Law Society	7
The Law Society of Scotland	0
The Secretary of State	132

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will set up an independent investigation into the administration and liquidation of (a) J. S. Bass & Co. Limited and (b) Exchange Travel. [126476]

Dr. Howells: No. However, as I indicated in my recent letter to my hon. Friend, officials are in touch with the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales concerning the handling of the complaint about the insolvency practitioners in the Bass case.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will place the comments received on the Insolvency Working Party's interim and final reports in the Library. [126482]

Dr. Howells: The Insolvency Regulation Working Party was established by the insolvency authorising bodies and comments made to it were a matter for the Working Party and not for Ministers.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the receiverships and liquidations begun more than 20 years ago and still not finalised. [126480]

Dr. Howells: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce legislation under which the receivers and liquidators will be required to owe a duty of care to all the stakeholders affected by their decisions. [126481]

Dr. Howells: I have no plans to do so.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action his Department has taken over the receivership of Heritage plc. [126490]

Dr. Howells: The complaint about the receivers of Heritage plc was a matter for the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, the authorising body of the practitioners concerned. The Institute found there to be no prima facie case of misconduct.

In view of continuing concerns expressed by the complainant, officials have been in touch with the Institute and are in the process of carrying out a review of the handling of the complaint.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the (a) Atlantic Computers, (b) Coloroll, (c) Barlow Clowes and (d) Stone Platt receiverships and liquidations began; when they were finalised; what fees have been collected by the insolvency practitioners; and if he will make a statement. [126478]

Dr. Howells: The information requested is not immediately available. I will write to my hon. Friend about this matter and place a copy of that letter in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proposals he has for expanding the supply of insolvency practitioners. [126489]

Dr. Howells: The requirements to be fit and proper and to meet certain criteria as to education, practical training and experience are designed to ensure that authorisation will only be granted to individuals who can demonstrate a high standard of integrity and professionalism.

There are presently 1,834 authorised insolvency practitioners of whom some 1,270 are currently understood to take appointments.

The Insolvency Bill presently before Parliament provides for the Secretary of State to have the additional power to recognise a body so that it may authorise individuals to take appointments but only in the capacity of nominee or supervisor of a voluntary arrangement.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action (a) he and (b) the Recognised Professional Bodies have taken against the insolvency practitioners whose actions were highlighted in Channel 4's "Dispatches" programme broadcast on 19 June 1996. [126477]

Dr. Howells: The relevant Recognised Professional Bodies were made aware of the programme at the time and I have no reason to doubt that any matters arising which related to the conduct of authorised insolvency practitioners would have been fully and thoroughly investigated by the bodies concerned.

Auditors

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will propose legislation which will prevent auditors acting as consultants for their audit clients. [126487]

Dr. Howells: We have no plans to do so.

It is central to the role of the company auditor that he or she is independent in mind and in appearance. The provision of non-audit services to audit clients can call into question the auditor's independence of the entities being reported on. It will be appropriate for the new Ethics Standards Board, when it is established as part of the new independent Framework of Regulation for the accountancy profession, to look at the ethical rules and guidance in this area.

The law in the UK already requires that the bodies responsible for supervising the work of company auditors have adequate rules to ensure that the auditor does not have an interest likely to conflict with the proper conduct of the audit. The current professional guidance, which forms part of those rules, acknowledges that the provision of non-audit services may give rise to threats to independence. The auditor is required to put in place appropriate safeguards and to be able to demonstrate that he or she has reasonably concluded that those safeguards are adequate. Otherwise the auditor either cannot take on the audit engagement or cannot provide the non-audit service.

Science Enterprise Challenge

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the outcome of the additional round of Science Enterprise Challenge will be announced. [126744]

Mr. Byers: I have today announced that four additional enterprise centres are to be established at the universities of Durham, Oxford, Ulster and Warwick.

These centres will join the existing network of eight centres I announced in September 1999. These centres will foster the commercialisation of research and new ideas, will help stimulate scientific entrepreneurialism and will incorporate the teaching of enterprise into science and engineering curricula in universities.

The quality of the proposals demonstrates the wealth of talent and creativity within our science and engineering community, and the enthusiasm for innovative thinking and entrepreneurialism.

I very much look forward to seeing these centres develop. I am confident that they will make a significant contribution to the enterprise and innovation culture in the UK.

Robert Maxwell

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list (a) the date when the inspectors were appointed to investigate the affairs of the business dealings of the late Robert Maxwell, (b) the cost of the investigation to date, (c) the likely date of publication, (d) representations received from any party which objects to the publication of the inspectors' report and (e) the reasons for the delay in publishing the report. [126488]

Dr. Howells: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to him on 5 May 1999, Official Report, column 416W. The cost to date of the inspection into the affairs and membership of Mirror Group Newspapers is £7,676,952. The inspectors have not yet reported to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. I am not aware that any representations have been received which object to the publication of the inspectors' report.

Personal Care Occupations

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list those occupations which involve grooming and other aspects of personal care which are not regulated. [126415]

Dr. Howells: The grooming and personal care occupations cover a number of different industries, all of which are governed by general legislation on the supply of goods and services. There are no sector specific regulations.

Following publication of the Consumer White Paper "Modern markets: confident consumers", we continue to encourage sectors to develop effective codes of practice. These can raise standards of consumer protection and help inform consumers of the level of service they can expect and of methods of redress should the service not meet their expectations.

Parental Leave Directive

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will place in the Library the letter of warning from the European Commission regarding the incorrect transposition of the Parental Leave Directive and the response from the Government to this letter. [126286]

Mr. Alan Johnson: Correspondence between the European Commission and the UK Government on the implementation of the Parental Leave Directive is confidential.

ECGD (Sudan)

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many applications have been received from United Kingdom companies for ECGD cover concerned with projects relating to the Sudan oil industry in each of the last three years. [126659]

Mr. Caborn: One application has been received in 1997 but no ECGD cover was provided.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if Sudan is accepted for ECGD cover. [126660]

Mr. Caborn: No.

Corruption and Bribery

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the British companies which have been banned from World bank contracts because of fraud and corruption in the last five years. [127076]

Mr. Caborn: The companies and individuals debarred by the World bank for infringing its procurement guidelines and which are listed on the World bank's website are as follows:

Pradeep S. Nair of London, United Kingdom

Crown Sakura Ltd. of London, United Kingdom

Chase Berkeley Cavendish Ltd. of London, United Kingdom

Amani B. P. Ltd. of London, United Kingdom

Case Technology Ltd. of Watford, Hertfordshire, United Kingdom

Labh Singh Gill of Warwickshire, United Kingdom

Pradeep Menon of London, United Kingdom

Shivshanker Pre Nair of London, United Kingdom

Agricultural Development Services Ltd. of London, United Kingdom

Ana Exports Ltd. of London, United Kingdom

Consultants for International Development plc of London, United Kingdom

Cord Construction Ltd. of Isle of Man, United Kingdom

Cybertek International of London, United Kingdom

Drill Technologies & Co. of London, United Kingdom

Economic Consulting Group of London, United Kingdom

Emkay Enterprises Ltd. of London, United Kingdom

Engineering Projects International of London, United Kingdom

First Fuji Ltd. of Isle of Man, United Kingdom

Flair Developments Ltd. of Isle of Man, United Kingdom

Infotek & Co. of London, United Kingdom

International Development Projects Services of London, United Kingdom

Inter-Russ Ltd. of Isle of Man, United Kingdom

Labh Universal of Coventry, United Kingdom

Medirite Group Ltd. of Middlesex, United Kingdom

Mirna International of Berkshire, United Kingdom

Norsk-Agro Ltd. of London, United Kingdom

Resource Development Ltd. of Isle of Man, United Kingdom

Ribalco International of Berkshire, United Kingdom

Shivind Ltd. of Isle of Man, United Kingdom

Thrust Technologies & Co. of London, United Kingdom

Times International & Co. of London, United Kingdom

United Basel Ltd. of Isle of Man, United Kingdom

West End Associates Ltd. of Isle of Man, United Kingdom

Agric-Canada of United Kingdom

Overseas Project Services Ltd. of United Kingdom.

It is understood that a number of the companies and individuals dispute the findings which led to the debarments.

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many British companies have been prosecuted in the UK for bribing foreign officials in the last five years. [127077]

Mr. Caborn: Official records do not distinguish between prosecutions of companies or individuals; nor do they distinguish between prosecutions in respect of domestic or foreign officials. The figures for prosecutions in England and Wales under the Prevention of Corruption Acts 1889 to 1916 for the last five years for which figures are currently available are as follows:

Year	Number
1993	35
1994	46
1995	60
1996	60
1997	58

Advertising Standards Authority

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the Advertising Standards Authority. [126329]

Dr. Howells: As we stated in the White Paper "Modern Markets: Confident Consumers" (Cm 4410 July 1999), the Government strongly support the self-regulatory controls on advertising in the UK run by the Advertising Standards Authority (ASA). We remain of the view that the ASA is a good example of effective self-regulation, which has succeeded in maintaining standards in the field of advertising.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many referrals the OFT has received from the Advertising Standards Authority since 1 May 1997. [126330]

Dr. Howells: The Office of Fair Trading report having received three cases referred for consideration under the Control of Misleading Advertisements Regulations 1988 by the Advertising Standards Authority since 1 May 1997.

Coal Industry

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress is being made with the Government's application to the European Commission for approval of financial support to the coal mining industry; and if he will make a statement. [127024]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government are consulting widely among producers and users of coal and other interested parties on the proposed structure of the scheme. My officials are engaged in preliminary discussions with the European Commission and we hope to be in a position to formally notify the Commission soon on our proposals to pay aid.

Advertising

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much has been spent by his Department on advertising in each year since May 1997. [125693]

Mr. Byers: Expenditure on advertising by the DTI, which was all placed through the Central Office of Information, was as follows:

1997–98	[1]2,373,637
1998–99	[1]5,543,938
1999–2000	[1]1,714,573

[1] Excluding VAT

Public Holidays

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to declare a public holiday to commemorate (a) in 2002, the 50th anniversary of the accession to the throne of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II and (b) in 2003, the 50th anniversary of her coronation; and what dates have been selected. [126653]

Mr. Alan Johnson: A bank holiday in 2002 to celebrate the Queen's Golden Jubilee, and the date on which such a holiday might be held, is under consideration and will be the subject of appropriate consultations. I have no plans for any additional bank holidays in 2003.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Equal Treatment Directive

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library copies of the responses which he received from organisations outside Government to his consultation about the proposed EC Directive on implementing the equal treatment between persons irrespective of racial or ethnic origin. [126535]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The consultation was conducted at a series of five meetings with organisations outside government which were held between publication of the draft by the Commission in November 1999 and political agreement at Council in June 2000. This was due to negotiations in Brussels being conducted in closed Working Group sessions, and are, therefore, being unable to provide later versions of the text of the Directive outside government in writing.

Drivers (Red Lights)

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many drivers have been (a) prosecuted for and (b) convicted of driving through a red traffic light in each of the last five years. [126248]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The following table gives the available information:

Numbers of prosecutions and convictions for failing to comply with traffic signals, England and Wales, 1993 to 1997

	Prosecutions	Convictions
1993	35,306	30,061
1994	29,152	24,266
1995	29,695	24,480
1996	30,220	25,307
1997	27,915	23,553

Note:
Figures for later years are not yet available

The majority of these offences are dealt with by the issue of fixed penalty notices.

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to reply to the letter, dated 25 April, from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mr. T. Khan. [126289]

Mr. Straw: I wrote to my right hon. Friend on 20 June.

Cycling on Pavements

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultations he has had with police forces about the enforcement and value of the prohibition of cycling on pavements. [126409]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Cycling on the pavement is a long-established offence under Section 72 of the Highways Act 1835. The Government's most recent consultation with the police on this subject was on the introduction of a fixed penalty offence for cycling on the pavement. The change was supported by the Association of Chief Police Officers.

The Home Office consultation exercise in 1996 on seven proposed new fixed penalty offences, including cycling on the pavement, revealed substantial public concern about inconsiderate and irresponsible cycling on the pavement in England and Wales, which particularly affected the elderly and disabled. The new fixed penalty offence allows the police to deal more simply and directly with particular local problems as they arise.

Bribery

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to make bribery carried out overseas by UK citizens and companies a criminal offence; and if he will make a statement. [127075]

Mr. Straw: Copies of the discussion paper setting out the Government's proposals for the reform of the law of corruption are now available in the Library and in the Vote Office.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Kosovan refugees in the UK applied for leave to remain in the last 12 months; and what percentage of such applications (a) were granted, (b) were refused and (c) are under consideration. [127088]

Mrs. Roche: Since March 2000, of those who arrived from Kosovo under the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees Humanitarian Evacuation Programme, 656 principal applicants have sought an extension of exceptional leave to enter, 374 have applied for asylum and 150 have applied for both exceptional leave and asylum. Five per cent. of the applications have been granted, 33 per cent. refused and 62 per cent. are outstanding.

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received in support of allowing Kosovan refugees to remain in the United Kingdom until such time as they feel able to return. [127089]

Mrs. Roche: Ministers and officials have corresponded with and have had regular meetings with various non-Governmental organisations involved with the support of the Kosovan evacuees since they came to the United Kingdom last year.

Kosovan Albanians who were evacuated to the United Kingdom under the Humanitarian Evacuation Programme (HEP) between 25 April and 25 June 1999 were granted 12 months' leave to enter. As agreed with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) at the outset of the evacuation process, protection was afforded on a temporary basis only. It was made clear at the time and subsequently that the leave of the evacuated Kosovans would not be extended and that they would be expected to return to Kosovo as soon as it was safe to do so.

UNHCR judge that it is now safe for the majority of Kosovan Albanians to return to Kosovo and this has been exemplified by the one million Kosovans who have voluntarily chosen to return since July 1999.

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Kosovan refugees were returned to Kosovo on each day between 1 and 16 June. [127087]

Mrs. Roche: All of the 469 Kosovans who arrived in the United Kingdom under the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees Humanitarian Evacuation Programme and the 69 who arrived in the United Kingdom independently, returned to Kosovo on the permanent voluntary return programme between 1 and 16 June. The table shows the number of Kosovans returning permanently on each flight between 1 and 16 June.

Date	Humanitarian evacuation programme	Independent arrivals
1 June	120	11
9 June	112	15
15 June	93	31

Regulation of Investigatory Powers Bill

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the nature of the representations he has received recently from business interests in respect of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Bill. [126305]

Mr. Straw: I have received various representations from business interests since the introduction of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Bill to the House of Commons on 9 February this year. They have supported the broad aims of the Bill. Most have pressed for changes to minimise the uncertainty over the impact of Clause 12 (maintenance of a reasonable intercept capability). The Clause has been amended in response to some of these representations. The Alliance for Electronic Business pressed for affirmative resolution for the order under Clause 12. This was provided by amendment at Commons Report. We have also amended the Bill to require the Secretary of State to meet the marginal costs of interception. Some businesses have also asked for reassurances which have been given as to how we intend the regime to work. Others are pressing us about the costs of maintaining a reasonable intercept capability on the internet.

Business interests have also pressed for some changes to Part III of the Bill in relation to access to encryption keys. Changes have been made to Part III in response to these representations. For example, the Bill has been amended to say that keys can be accessed only "in special circumstances" as a direct response to industry representations. Amendments designed to clarify what should be contained in a decryption notice and to remove the Directors' liability in respect of Part III of the Bill were also a response to industry representations.

Burns Committee

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will establish an investigation into the source of the leak of the findings of the Committee of Inquiry into Hunting with Dogs; and if he will make a statement. [126303]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I am not aware of a leak of the findings of the Report of the Committee of Inquiry into Hunting with Dogs in England and Wales.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with Lord Burns following the publication of the report of the Committee of Inquiry into Hunting with Dogs; and if he will make a statement. [126304]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: None.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for licences under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 were (a) granted unamended, (b) granted in amended form and (c) rejected in the last year for which figures are available. [126332]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: This information is not recorded centrally.

I am advised that the vast majority of project licence applications are revised during negotiations with the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Inspectorate or have conditions added to either restrict or qualify the authorities sought. Proposals which are outside the requirements of the law or not good science will rarely become formal applications (and hence rejections) because most potential applicants seek and take the advice of inspectors at an early stage.

Paragraph 13 of Appendix B of the Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals (Great Britain) 1998 provides figures for the number of project licences granted and revoked during 1998 and how many were in force on 31 December 1998. A total of 1,104 project licences were granted in 1998. This is also shown subdivided into severity bandings.

Appendix C of the 1998 Statistics contains 10 typical examples of the value added to licence applications by the Inspectorate's assessment process.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent discussions he has had with Huntingdon Life Sciences; and if he will make a statement. [126264]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I visited Huntingdon Life Sciences on 8 June 2000 in connection with my responsibilities under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. During my visit I talked to managers and staff about the campaign of harassment they have experienced from animal rights extremists over recent months. This included meeting two women who had their cars set on fire outside their homes. While it is a long-standing tradition in this country that individuals are free to express their views peacefully, people also have a right to carry out their lawful business without fear of intimidation and violence. The Government unreservedly condemn those who use such repellent tactics and wholeheartedly support the police in their continuing efforts to combat those who use them.

Crime Fighting Fund

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the additional police officers announced as part of the Crime Fighting Fund are (a) in service and (b) coming into service in each of the next eight quarters (i) nationally and (ii) in Merseyside. [127073]

Mr. Charles Clarke: All forces in England and Wales have been asked to profile their planned recruitment over the 12 months of 2000–01. On the basis of the force profiles, the table shows the number of officers recruited, or planned to be recruited, that will be deemed to be Crime Fighting Fund officers.

The total allocation of Crime Fighting Fund officers for 2000–01 is 3,000. Forces have, so far, profiled the recruitment of 2,672 of the 3,000. Forces will have the opportunity to re-profile their recruitment up to the maximum of 3,000 Crime Fighting Fund officers as the year progresses. The number of deemed Crime Fighting Fund officers may rise or fall if actual recruitment does not match profiled recruitment or if the profile changes.

Forces have not yet been asked to profile recruitment for 2001–02. The table shows the allocation of Crime Fighting Fund officers for 2001–02 as a whole.

Criminal Records

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what estimate he has made of the cost of exempting volunteers from fees for (a) criminal conviction certificates, (b) criminal record certificates and (c) enhanced criminal record certificates; [126991]

(2) what his latest estimate is of the fee to be charged for (a) criminal conviction certificates, (b) criminal record certificates and (c) enhanced criminal record certificates; [126992]

(3) what plans he has to review his policy on the liability of volunteers for fees for criminal conviction certificates, criminal record certificates and enhanced criminal record certificates; [126993]

(4) what estimate he has made of the number of volunteers each year who will require (a) criminal conviction certificates, (b) criminal record certificates and (c) enhanced criminal record certificates once the Criminal Records Bureau is in operation; [126990]

(5) what estimate he has made of (a) the start-up costs and (b) the first year's operating costs of the Criminal Records Bureau; and if he will make a statement. [126989]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Criminal Records Bureau is being established within the framework of a Public Private Partnership. The Department has planned provision across the three financial years 1999–2002 for expenditure of around £10 million in connection with the establishment of the Bureau. But the Bureau's full operating costs will not be known until a contract has been awarded to the private sector partner.

It has always been planned that the Bureau's costs should be recovered through the charges that it makes for certificates. Work on the level of fees must await information about the Bureau's operating costs. But we have made clear our determination to keep the cost of certificates as low as possible. Reducing or waiving charges in respect of particular voluntary organisations, or for the voluntary sector as a whole, would raise substantial problems of principle and would either place an added burden on the public purse or lead to an increased level of fee for others seeking certificates from the Bureau, who may be no less deserving than volunteers.

Part V of the Police Act 1997, under which the Bureau is being established, does not require volunteers to apply for certificates. It will generally be for organisations to decide who will require a certificate. Work is continuing on estimating the likely number of applicants for certificates, building on work on demand estimates and market research, and will be subject to consultation before final conclusions are reached.

Before we make Regulations to prescribe various matters including charges for certificates, we shall undertake a Regulatory Impact Assessment, in consultation with representatives of voluntary organisations and others. This will provide a thorough and up-to-date assessment of the implications.

Advertising

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much has been spent by his Department on advertising in each year since May 1997. [125697]

Mr. Straw: The money spent on advertising in each financial year since May 1997 was as follows:

	£ million
1997–98	1.4
1999–2000	5.9

In each year the major Home Office campaigns have been on fire safety, electoral registration and special constables recruitment. The higher expenditure in 1999–2000, was largely accounted for by additional expenditure on fire safety and on publicity to explain the new voting system for the European Parliamentary election.

Corruption Law

Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish the Government's proposals for the reform of the law of corruption. [127223]

Mr. Straw: The Government's proposals for the reform of the law of corruption in England and Wales are published today and copies will be placed in the Library.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Television Licence Reminders

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will discuss with the Television Licensing Authority the sending of television licence reminder forms headed Accounts Payable to companies; and if he will make a statement. [125736]

Mr. Chris Smith: Under the provisions of the Broadcasting Act 1990, the BBC has statutory responsibility for the administration of the television licensing system. TV Licensing carries out the day to day administration of the licensing system as agent for the BBC. The wording of TV Licensing's renewal reminder letters is therefore a matter for TV Licensing and the BBC, and not one in which the Government can intervene. The BBC has, however, confirmed that it is not promoting the TV licence as an Account Payable.

Orchestras

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is his estimate of the number of people employed full time as professional musicians working for orchestras in the UK; and if he will make a statement. [126076]

Mr. Alan Howarth: I have asked the Arts Council of England, as the main distributor of public subsidy for the arts in England, to provide this information for England. When it is available, I will write to the right hon. Member, and place a copy in the Library of the House. Figures for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland are the responsibility of the devolved administrations.

Independent Television

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will review the legislation that controls independent television in the UK with the aim of ensuring that adequate safeguards exist to protect local programme generation and local management of services. [126075]

Mr. Chris Smith: The Government are reviewing broadcasting legislation as part of our consideration of the future regulation of communications. Our conclusions will be announced in the forthcoming Communications White Paper, which is being prepared jointly by my Department and the Department for Trade and Industry.

Single Currency

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will estimate the cost to his Department of switching from the pound to the euro. [126398]

Mr. Chris Smith: Should the UK decide to join the euro, the cost of a changeover would depend on the detailed approach taken to a changeover.

Television Advertisements

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many television advertisements have been commissioned by his Department since 1 May 1997; and, of these, how many were provided with closed caption subtitling. [126898]

Mr. Chris Smith: None.

Opinion Research

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his answer of 8 June 2000, Official Report, column 301W, on opinion research, if he will place all the unpublished opinion and market research carried out since January 1999 in the Library. [126984]

Mr. Chris Smith: This material could be provided only at disproportionate cost; as indicated in my answer of 8 June, all non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Department have been made aware of their obligations under the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Advertising

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much has been spent by his Department on advertising in each year since May 1997. [125692]

Mr. Chris Smith: The following table shows the cost of advertising undertaken by my Department. This expenditure was incurred to attract candidates for the many public appointments for which I am responsible.

May 1997-March 1998	0
1998–1999	242,700
1999–2000	139,501
2000–01 to date	0

BBC Public Service Proposals

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when he will publish the criteria he uses in assessing new BBC public service proposals. [127227]

Mr. Chris Smith: I intend to publish the criteria tomorrow, and copies will be placed in the Library of the House.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Fiji

13. Mr. Russell Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action Her Majesty's Government have taken to encourage the restoration of democracy in Fiji. [125216]

Mr. Battle: We have condemned the use of criminal armed force by the kidnappers in Fiji and demanded the release of all the hostages, the restoration of democratic, constitutional government and the arrest of the hostage-takers. In pursuit of these aims, I participated in the meeting of the Commonwealth Ministerial Action Group on 6 June which agreed to suspend Fiji from Commonwealth Councils and to send a CMAG delegation to Fiji. We are also discussing with our EU partners ways of encouraging the restoration of democracy in Fiji.

Zimbabwe

14. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the political situation in Zimbabwe. [125217]

Mr. Hain: We hope that the presence of over 300 international observers will help the people of Zimbabwe to overcome their fears, political intimidation and violence and exercise their democratic right to vote.

21. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the situation in Zimbabwe. [125224]

23. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the UK's relations with Zimbabwe. [125226]

Mr. Hain: The UK and Zimbabwe have a shared history. Our people know each other well. But President Mugabe's actions and rhetoric have made it difficult for us to have the warm and friendly government-to-government relations that we would like.

27. Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Zimbabwean high commissioner on land reform. [125232]

Mr. Hain: The Zimbabwe High Commissioner was a member of the delegation that met my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary on 27 April. We have had no further discussions with him on land reform.

29. Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received on the rule of law in Zimbabwe; and if he will make a statement. [125234]

Mr. Hain: We have had discussions with people inside and outside of Zimbabwe on the urgent need to restore the rule of law there.

34. Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last visited Zimbabwe to discuss the political situation there; and if he will make a statement. [125240]

Mr. Hain: I have not visited Zimbabwe in my capacity as FCO Minister of State.

International Criminal Court

15. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many countries have ratified the statute for an International Criminal Court; and if he will make a statement. [125218]

Mr. Vaz: To date 97 countries have signed and 12 have ratified the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court. The Court will come into existence once the Statute has been ratified by 60 states. The UK intends to be one of those 60.

Iran

16. Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Iranian authorities on securing a fair trial for the 13 Jews accused of espionage. [125219]

Mr. Hain: This Government and our EU colleagues have raised with the Iranians at every appropriate opportunity our concerns about the trial on espionage charges in Shiráz of 13 Jews and eight Muslims.

The Danube

17. Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of when a navigable route will be available along the Danube for the countries economically dependent on it; and if he will make a statement. [125220]

Mr. Vaz: The UK welcomed the proposal on 24 May by the European Commission for an EU contribution of up to 22 million euro to the International Fund for the Clearance of the Danube. This proposal followed a comprehensive examination of the technical issues associated with this project. The target date for the opening of a navigable channel at Novi Sad is spring 2001. Provided this timetable is met, work on the second phase of the project to restore the river-beds and banks would begin in summer 2001. We will work with the EU towards completing this work on time and in accordance with the EU sanctions regime.

Ethical Foreign Policy

18. Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made in developing an ethical dimension to his foreign policy; and if he will make a statement. [125221]

Mr. Hain: We consistently promote British interests and pursue British values by supporting democracy and human rights wherever we can, however we can.

Sierra Leone

19. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the current position is in respect of the UN arms embargo on Sierra Leone. [125222]

Mr. Hain: United Nations Security Council resolution 1171 (1998) imposed an embargo on the sale and supply of arms and related material to Sierra Leone other than to the Government of Sierra Leone through named entry points. There are exemptions in that resolution and in resolution 1299 (2000) for supply to the United Nations and the Military Observer Group of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOMOG) as well as UN member states co-operating with UNAMSIL and the Government of Sierra Leone.

The UK fully supports and rigorously implements the embargo. We are discussing with Security Council colleagues ways to ensure that is implemented more effectively by all states.

Middle East

24. Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the middle east peace process. [125227]

25. Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement regarding the situation in the middle east peace process. [125228]

Mr. Hain: The Middle East Peace Process is at a crucial stage. On the Palestinian track, negotiations continue in the US. We continue to work for a conflict-ending agreement this summer.

On the Syrian track, we are watching developments closely following the death of President Asad. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary attended his funeral last week and met his son, Bashar. We believe Syria remains committed to the peace process and look forward to continuing Syrian and Israeli efforts to reach agreement.

We welcome UN confirmation that Israel has withdrawn fully from Lebanon. We shall continue to work hard with the UN and countries in the region to maintain calm and stability in southern Lebanon.

32. Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received about the middle east peace process. [125237]

Mr. Hain: We are in frequent contact with all the parties. Most recently, my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary met a number of interlocutors, including Bashar al-Assad, at the condolence ceremony for the late President Assad on 13 June.

Angola

26. Mr. Borrow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the effect of UN sanctions in Angola on the operational activities of UNITA. [125231]

Mr. Hain: UN sanctions are making it harder for UNITA to continue fighting and put pressure on UNITA to return to the negotiating table. We commend the work of the Expert Panel of the UN Angola Sanctions Committee in investigating violations of the sanctions and developing recommendations on tightening implementation. The UK strongly supported the adoption of UN Security Council resolution 1295 on 18 April. The resolution welcomes the Panel's report, stresses the obligations of all member states to comply with the measures against UNITA and expresses the readiness of the Council to consider action in relation to states it determines to have violated those measures. This shows the determination of the international community to make sanctions bite.

Plan Colombia

28. Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of Plan Colombia and the part the United Kingdom can play in its development. [125233]

Mr. Battle: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier in the House today to my hon. Friend the Member for Doncaster, Central (Ms Winterton), Official Report, columns 150–51.

Burma

30. Valerie Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the situation in Burma. [125235]

Mr. Battle: We are deeply concerned at the lack of any prospects towards democratisation in Burma, as well as at the serious violations of human rights there. We are at the forefront of international action to press the military regime to improve the situation and to enter into dialogue with democratically elected Burmese leaders.

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will introduce investment sanctions against Burma. [126908]

Mr. Battle: There is no consensus within the European Union or the United Nations for investment sanctions at the moment, nor do we have any plans to introduce such measures. But we do discourage trade and investment in Burma by UK companies. In March, I met the Chief Executive of Premier Oil, and made clear to him our deep concern about their investment in Burma and that we would welcome their moving out as soon as and to the fullest extent that they lawfully can. We regularly give business inquiries a statement on the nature of the Burmese regime and the state of the economy.

The European Union has recently adopted a freeze on funds held by members of the Burmese regime. We will continue to press the regime in other fields too: for example the ILO has just agreed to adopt unprecedented measures against the regime in an effort to stop forced labour.

EU Enlargement

31. Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what will be on the agenda in respect of enlargement at the forthcoming European Council meeting; and if he will make a statement. [125236]

Mr. Vaz: As the hon. Member may know, the European Council took place yesterday and today. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister will be making a statement on the outcome to the House tomorrow.

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on British policy on the enlargement of the European Union. [125230]

Mr. Vaz: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier in the House today to my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Crausby), Official Report, column 141.

Ukraine

33. Ms Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on bilateral relations with Ukraine. [125239]

Mr. Vaz: Bilateral relations between the United Kingdom and Ukraine are very good. We engage with Ukraine in a broad range of activity and maintain close contacts at working and ministerial level. I had three meetings with the Ukrainian Foreign Minister, Borys Tarasyuk, in 1999 and visited Kiev in April this year. I have invited Mr. Tarasyuk to pay an official visit to the United Kingdom in early 2001. The newly established UK-Ukraine Consultative Mechanism provides an additional channel for regular dialogue between 10 Downing Street and the President's Administration.

Diamond Trade (Africa)

35. Mr. Michael Jabez Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in stopping trading in diamonds which fuels conflict in Africa. [125241]

Mr. Hain: The Government are committed to curbing the trade in diamonds which fuels conflict in Africa. We fully support UN Security Council resolution 1173 (1998) which prohibits the import from Angola of diamonds not controlled through the Angolan Government's Certificate of Origin regime. We have tabled a draft UN Security Council Resolution which would ban the import of uncertified diamonds from Sierra Leone.

BBC World Service

36. Mr. Rammell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of the BBC World Service in north America. [125242]

Mr. Hain: The BBC World Service broadcasts to North America as it does to other parts of the world. Its radio audience in Canada is a third of a million. In the USA it is 2.7 million. This figure represents significant growth, and has been achieved mainly through the establishment of local rebroadcasting partnerships. World Service activity world-wide is monitored against targets and is subject to periodic review with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

Russia

37. Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the UK's bilateral relations with Russia. [125243]

Mr. Vaz: Our relations with Russia are in good shape. We want to do what we can to encourage a democratic and stable Russia. The key is critical engagement. We should not isolate Russia, nor should we shy away from issues on which we disagree, such as Chechnya.

EU (French Presidency)

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent meetings he has had with the Government of France to discuss its presidency of the European Union; and if he will make a statement. [125223]

Mr. Vaz: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has regular contact with his French counterpart, M. Vedrine, on a number of issues, including the French Presidency of the European Union. He is next due to discuss the Presidency with M. Vedrine on 21 June. I also met Pierre Moscovici, the French Minister for Europe, in Santa Maria da Feira to discuss the Presidency.

Czech Republic

Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about relations between the United Kingdom and the Czech Republic. [125225]

Mr. Vaz: The UK enjoys excellent relations with the Czech Republic. The Czech Defence Minister is in the UK today. And my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary will visit Prague in July. We are close NATO allies, and the UK fully supports the Czech application for EU membership.

Wine Expenditure

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 12 May 2000, Official Report, column 496W, concerning his Department's spending on champagne and other wine, in which category such expenditure is recorded; what items in addition to (a) champagne and (b) other wine are recorded in this category; and how much his Department has spent on items in this category in each year since 1 May 1997. [124246]

Mr. Hain [holding answer 5 June 2000]: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office records this expenditure as official entertainment. The costs also include such items as catering requirements (including food/drink), related hire charges, and other administration costs (such as invitation cards). The Foreign and Commonwealth Office does not maintain a comprehensive central record of these categories of expenditure.

International Traffic and Arms Regulations

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the benefits to the UK of being granted special status under the US International Traffic and Arms Regulations; and if he will make a statement. [125381]

Mr. Hain: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary for Defence on 15 June 2000, Official Report, columns 667–68W.

Saudi Arabia

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is taking on human rights in Saudi Arabia following the Amnesty International report "Saudi Arabia: A Justice System Without Justice"; and if he will make a statement. [126080]

Mr. Hain: Saudi Arabia is an Islamic country in which justice is based on Sharia Law. The British Government respect Islam but have concerns about human rights in the Kingdom, including the discrimination against women and non-Muslims, the restrictions on freedom of expression, movement, assembly and worship, the implementation of UN human rights instruments, and issues relating to the judicial process.

The British Government are firmly committed to constructive engagement on human rights with Saudi Arabia and discuss the issue regularly with the Saudis. The Government take, and will continue to take, every realistic and responsible step to try to improve matters.

Nazi Slave Labour Victims

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement as to the circumstances in which the proposed compensation package for slave labour victims of the Nazis to be met by the German Government have been proposed to be reduced in respect of claimants in the "rest-of-the-world" group, including United Kingdom residents. [126032]

Mr. Vaz: I understand that the sum of money earmarked at one stage of the negotiations for allocation to "rest-of-the-world" claimants was reduced subsequently in discussions between the German and US Governments.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received (a) from and (b) on behalf of slave labour victims of the Nazis, in respect of the German compensation fund. [126030]

Mr. Vaz: I have received a number of letters from colleagues in the House, on behalf of their constituents.

My officials have spoken regularly with representatives of former Poles and Ukrainians who were former slave/forced labourers.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the original estimate of compensation levels for Nazi slave labour victims under the German compensation scheme (a) in total and (b) in respect of each category of case; and what is the current estimate under the revised proposals put forward by the German Government as to (a) and (b). [126033]

Mr. Vaz: Agreement on a fund totalling DM10 billion was announced in December 1999.

The amount of compensation intended for allocation to former slave labourers has been set at a maximum of DM15,000 per claimant. Former forced labourers may receive a maximum of DM5,000.

Current uncertainty about the availability of funds and the process of disbursement mean it is not possible at this stage to predict the sum which will be available in practice to individual claimants.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the German Government concerning the regulations over the compensation scheme for slave labour victims of the Nazi regime. [126029]

Mr. Vaz: Our Ambassador in Berlin has written recently to the German Government to express concern that UK claimants have free, fair and equal access to the compensation fund. We remain in close touch with the German Government on this.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has made as to the number of rest-of-the-world claimants resident in the United Kingdom, who are likely to qualify for compensation from the German fund for slave labour victims of the Nazis. [126031]

Mr. Vaz: We have no exact numbers for the UK, but understand that there may be 2,000 or more potential claimants.

Kosovo

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Kosovan Albanians have been referred to the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia for atrocities committed against Serbs and other non-Albanian people in Kosovo. [126219]

Mr. Hain: The International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia (ICTY) is investigating all atrocities committed in Kosovo regardless of the perpetrator's ethnic origin. ICTY has issued indictments against five Serbs for alleged crimes against humanity in Kosovo. No Kosovan Albanians have yet been indicted.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the percentage of UNMIK'S authorised civil administration staff deployed in Kosovo. [126647]

Mr. Hain [holding answer 19 June 2000]: According to the United Nations Secretariat there are 1,148 approved posts for international staff working for UNMIK, 75 per cent. of which are currently filled. There are a number of staff who have been appointed but have not yet arrived in Kosovo. When they do, 90 per cent. of the approved posts for international staff will be filled.

United Nations

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with his (a) EU and (b) UN counterparts concerning Ambassador Richard Holbrooke's proposal that the United Nations should transform its civilian-run peacekeeping Department into a larger and more effective military-style operation. [126607]

Mr. Hain [holding answer 19 June 2000]: We strongly support efforts to enhance the operational capacity and effectiveness of the UN's Department of Peacekeeping Operations (DPKO). We are working closely with the UN Secretariat, the United States, and other EU and UN members.

Military officers are already closely involved in the preparation and execution of United Nations peacekeeping missions. But DPKO needs increased intelligence and planning capacity and an enhanced capacity to manage police and other civilian deployments. And, since modern peacekeeping is now rarely wholly military in nature, we want to see better integration of military and civilian resources. I have also explained the concept of a UN rapid reaction capability.

Official Visits (Overseas)

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list his officials who have visited (a) Nigeria, (b) Liberia, (c) Sierra Leone and (d) Togo since January 1999. [126610]

Mr. Hain [holding answer 19 June 2000]: There have been regular visits by a range of officials to these four countries since January 1999.

The provision of a detailed breakdown would incur disproportionate cost.

UN Register of Conventional Arms

Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the UK will submit its return covering imports and exports of major types of conventional weapons during 1999 to the UN Register of Conventional Arms; and if he will place copies of the return in the Library. [127224]

Mr. Hain: The Government submitted the UK's return to the UN Register covering conventional arms transfers in calendar year 1999 on 20 June. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Echelon Surveillance System

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to establish that the Echelon Surveillance System is not used to the economic disbenefit of (a) the UK and (b) other EU states; and if he will make a statement. [126298]

Mr. Robin Cook: The hon. Member will be well aware of the Government's policy not to comment on alleged surveillance systems.

China

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the human rights record of the Chinese Government in respect of practitioners of Falun Gong; and what steps he is taking to promote human rights in China. [126669]

Mr. Battle: We are deeply concerned about the treatment of Falun Gong adherents, including the passing of severe sentences, by the Chinese authorities since the movement was banned in July 1999. We and EU partners have made this clear to the Chinese Government on a number of occasions and urged them to comply with the provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights which China signed in October 1998.

On 20 June I called in the Chinese Ambassador to London and expressed directly my concerns to Mr. Ma on the treatment of dissidents in China, and on the alleged intimidation in China of family members of a Falun Gong practitioner who is a UK citizen.

We are pressing for greater respect for human rights in China through our bilateral human rights dialogue with the Chinese Government. During the last round of the dialogue in February 2000 we agreed to establish a joint expert working group to work towards the ratification and implementation of the International Covenants on Civil and Political, and on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. An invitation was also extended to the Foreign Secretary's Death Penalty Panel to visit China to discuss issues relating to abolition of the Death Penalty throughout China.

Execution (Texas)

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to Governor George Bush of Texas about the execution on 22 June of Mr. Gary Graham. [126983]

Mr. Battle: The EU Presidency, on behalf of the UK and other members, made representations to the Governor of Texas on 17 May on behalf of Mr. Graham asking him to commute Mr. Graham's sentence to life imprisonment, or such other penalty as is compatible with international law. Notice of the EU Demarche was given to the State Department.

Advertising

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much has been spent by his Department on advertising in each year since May 1997. [125694]

Mr. Hain: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office does not use advertising to publicise Government policy or programmes.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Social Fund

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the additional administration cost of every (a) budgeting loan and (b) crisis loan if they were repaid over a period of (i) 78 weeks, (ii) 104 weeks, (iii) 130 weeks and (iv) 156 weeks. [125286]

Angela Eagle: The administration of the Social Fund is a mater for Alexis Cleveland, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Alexis Cleveland to Mr. Steve Webb, dated 19 June 2000:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking if he will estimate the additional administration cost of every (a) budgeting loan and (b) crisis loan if they were repaid over a period of (i) 78 weeks, (ii) 104 weeks, (iii) 130 weeks and (iv) 156 weeks.

The integrity of the social fund depends on recycling the loans within a reasonable timescale to make future loans available as soon as possible.

Only a composite figure for the cost of recovering budgeting loans and crisis loans is available. Approximately 95% of Social Fund recovery is taken directly from benefit in payment to the customer. Around 90% of that is taken automatically through a computerised link between the Income Support and Jobseeker's Allowance computer systems and the Social Fund system. Staff input is required at the beginning and end of the process, but very little intervention is needed during the course of the recovery. While some recovery from benefit is made by clerical processes, and customers no longer in receipt of benefit are pursued to repay their loans by other means, the proportionate cost of this is small in comparison to the overall cost of recovery.

As a consequence, it is estimated that the administrative cost of the process would not be greatly affected by the duration of the recovery period if the customers who took advantage of the longer repayment periods remained on benefit throughout. However, the longer the payment period, it is more likely that customers will leave benefit before their loan is repaid. Then the proportion requiring clerical activity would increase and therefore administration costs would rise but we are at present unable to quantify by how much.

I hope this is helpful.

Winter Fuel Payments

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners in the Basildon parliamentary constituency received Winter Fuel Payments in (a) 1998–99 and (b) 1999–2000; and how much was paid in total in each of those years. [125955]

Angela Eagle: The administration of Winter Fuel Payments is a matter for Alexis Cleveland, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. She will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Alexis Cleveland to Angela Smith, dated 19 June 2000:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about how many pensioners in the Basildon parliamentary constituency received winter fuel payments in (a) 1998–99 and (b) 1999–2000; and how much was paid in total in each of those years.

In 1998–99, 13,241 winter fuel payments (WFP) were made in the Basildon constituency; in 1999–2000, 16,098 payments were made.

In 1998–99, the total amount of WFP in the Basildon constituency was £256,940; in 1999–2000, the total was £1,204,050.

WFP exercises before 1998–99 highlighted that over 500,000 customer accounts did not hold a postcode. A correction exercise resulted in more postcodes being allocated. The figures for 1999–2000 in the Basildon constituency increased due to this, and also because of the increase in the WFP from £50 to £100 from 1999–2000.

I hope this is helpful.

Widowed Mother's Allowance

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the Benefits Agency received application for widowed mother's allowance and widows' payment from Mrs. C. M. of Weston Turville, Buckinghamshire (WA 075311C); when his Department will complete its calculation of her benefit; when she will receive payments; and if he will make a statement. [126529]

Angela Eagle: The administration of benefits is a matter for Alexis Cleveland, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Alexis Cleveland to Mr. David Lidington, dated 19 June 2000:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the widow's benefit claim made by Mrs Caroline Moran, 4 Worlds End Lane, Weston Turville, Aylesbury.

As you will appreciate, individual customers' cases are confidential. I will therefore, write to you privately on this matter.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what his target is for processing applications for widowed mother's allowance; how many applications are being processed within that target time; and if he will make a statement; [126525]

(2) how many applicants are currently awaiting a decision on the calculation of their entitlement to widowed mother's allowance; and how many of those have been waiting for more than (a) three months, (b) six months and (c) 12 months; [126523]

(3) what is his policy on paying interest on late payments of widowed mother's allowance. [126524]

Angela Eagle: The administration of benefits is a matter for Alexis Cleveland, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Alexis Cleveland to Mr. David Lidington, dated 19 June 2000:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary questions asking, what his target is for processing applications for widowed mothers allowance; how many applications are being processed within that target time; and if he will make a statement. Also, how many applicants are currently awaiting a decision on the calculation of their entitlement to widowed mother's allowance; and how many of those have been waiting for more than (a) three months, (b) six months and (c) 12 months, and what is his policy on paying interest on late payments of widowed mother's allowance (WMA).

The Benefits Agency (BA) has targets for the clearance of Widows Benefit claims. The targets are measured from the date of receipt of the claim in the BA to the date the benefit is awarded. Figures for the individual widows benefits, such as Widowed Mothers Allowance are not maintained.

The current clearance target is 85 per cent. in 10 days for Widows payment cases and 85 per cent. in 30 days for Widows benefit.

The latest figures available show that for the year ended March 2000, 90.2 per cent. of claims to Widows Payment and 78.5 per cent. of claims to Widows Benefit were cleared within target.

For the months of April and May 2000 the Widows payment clearance is running at 91.5 per cent. and at 84.5 per cent. for Widows Benefit.

Although individual benefit offices would be able to focus on the state of their uncleared claims for management purposes these details are not fed into any national statistical counters. The information required to answer your question could only therefore be obtained at inappropriate cost and effort.

It is clear from the figures quoted above that the clearance target for Widows Benefit claims was not met for 1999–2000. This has been due for the most part to the difficulties associated with the introduction of the new National Insurance computer system (NIRS2). NIRS2 provides the BA with its benefit calculations including those for entitlements to Retirement Pension and Widows Benefits.

Early figures for 2000–2001 as above show an improving level of clearance for Widows Benefit claims as NIRS2 recovery proceeds.

Failure to process a WMA claim within the published operational targets will not, in itself give rise to a special payment. Each case must be considered on its own merits.

In the majority of cases, it is anticipated that claims will be processed by the Agency within published timescales. However, some cases will legitimately take longer to process than others because of the complex nature of the case and the degree of work involved.

Different rules apply where payment was delayed because of the implementation of the new National Insurance Recording System (NIRS2). Where a customer has suffered unreasonable delay and inconvenience in receiving their full entitlement to WMA which was solely attributable to the problems encountered with the implementation of NIRS2, they automatically receive a £10 flat-rate compensatory payment.

Where payment of WMA has been unreasonably and exceptionally delayed due to official error a special compensatory payment in the form of interest would be considered.

Where the customer feels that the compensation calculated does not adequately compensate for the financial loss actually suffered as a direct result of the delay, a specific claim for further compensation should be made by the customer and full supporting evidence of the loss provided.

I hope this is helpful.

Automatic Credit Transfers

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the payment of benefit by automatic credit transfers involves the notification of the claimant's national insurance number to the receiving bank. [126542]

Mr. Rooker: The administration of benefit payments is a matter for Alexis Cleveland the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. She will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Alexis Cleveland to Mr. Terry Rooney, dated 19 June 2000:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question asking if the payment of benefit by automated credit transfer (ACT) involves the notification of the claimant's National Insurance number to the receiving bank.

Payments made by ACT are made through BACS (the UK's major automated clearing house). For BACS to accept a payment file completion of a number of identification fields is mandatory, for example bank/building society account number, sort code and amount.

Another mandatory requirement is for the inclusion of a payment reference. The inclusion of a reference allows each benefit system to track and trace individual payments, facilitating action such as recalling a payment and responding to customer enquiries.

All benefits use the customers' National Insurance number as a payment reference, with the exception of Child Benefit for which the Child Benefit number is used.

This reference is passed over to the receiving bank with all other payment details.

I hope this is helpful.

Minimum Income Guarantee

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners there are whose income takes them above the qualifying income for minimum income guarantee but who receive a final income below the minimum income guarantee once council tax rebates and Housing Benefit are deducted. [127074]

Mr. Bayley: The information is not available.

State Pension

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the cost of increasing the basic state pension for persons over (a) 75 and (b) 80 to the level of the minimum income guarantee. [126673]

Mr. Rooker: The information is in the table.

Estimated costs of increasing the basic state pension

£ million

2001–02	75 and over	80 and over
Gross	3,600	2,400
Net of means-tested benefits	2,600	1,600

Notes:

1. It is assumed that the Category A rate of basic Retirement Pension is raised to the level of the Minimum Income Guarantee in 2001–02 (assumed to be £84.80 for those aged 75 to 79, and £90.20 for those aged 80 and over).
2. It is assumed that basic Retirement Pension recipients with entitlement of less than the full Category A rate receive a pro-rata increase, except married women in receipt of the Category BL pension, who receive an increase such that the Category A and Category BL pension together are equivalent to the appropriate couple rate of the Minimum Income Guarantee.
3. These estimates include a saving of £30 million from the removal of the 25p age addition currently paid to those aged 80 and over.
4. Costs are rounded to the nearest £100 million and are in 2000–01 prices.
5. Costs include benefits whose rates are linked by statute to the rate of basic Retirement Pension.
6. Gross costs are estimated by the Government Actuary's Department. Costs net of means-tested benefit savings have been estimated using the Policy Simulation Model.

Radiation Diseases

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the recommendations made by the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council in relation to diseases caused by radiation will be implemented; and if he will make a statement. [127226]

Mr. Bayley: Amendment Regulations to the Social Security (Industrial Injuries) (Prescribed Diseases) Regulations 1985 were laid yesterday implementing the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council's recommendations with effect from 10 July 2000. All the Council's recommendations set out in their report "Diseases induced by Ionising and Non-Ionising Radiation" (Cm 4280) are included in the amending regulations.

The regulations also clarify that the time limits that operate between leaving a prescribed occupation and making a claim for asthma (prescribed disease D7) and deafness (prescribed disease A10) refer to employed earners employment. The regulations also specify the exact lung function formulae that should be used in connection with claims for chronic bronchitis and emphysema rather than making a reference to a textbook.

Fraud

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 13 June 2000, Official Report, column 606W, on the Social Security Administration (Fraud) Act 1997, (a) how many of those local authorities who have reported the appointment of an inspector have a serving inspector at present and (b) how many inspectors are serving at present. [127086]

Angela Eagle: The figures in my Written Answer on 13 June 2000, Official Report, column 606W, referred to the number of inspectors currently serving. Since then, the Department has been notified of the appointment of one additional inspector, bringing the total currently serving up to 720 in 209 local authorities.

TREASURY

Census

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will make a statement on the steps he is taking on including a question concerning religious identity in the 2001 Census; [126011]

(2) how many representations he has received from (a) hon. Members and (b) others concerning the inclusion of a question in the 2001 Census concerning religious identity. [126012]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Putney (Mr. Colman) on 15 June 2000, Official Report, column 687W.

Single Currency

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the cost to (a) the public sector and (b) the private sector of changing from the pound to the euro. [126403]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Should the UK decide to join the euro, the costs of a changeover would depend on the detailed approach taken by organisations to a changeover.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the Treasury's estimate of the economic and fiscal consequences of joining the first wave of the euro in 1999; and if he will update it. [126791]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Treasury published the paper, "UK Membership of the Single Currency: An Assessment of the Five Economic Tests", in October 1997. The Chancellor of the Exchequer has said we will make another assessment of the five economic tests early in the next Parliament.

Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what safeguards he has put in place to ensure that money spent through the National Changeover plan will be neutral in its impact upon public opinion about whether the United Kingdom should join the euro. [126185]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 19 June 2000]: Government policy on the euro was set out in the Second Outline National Changeover Plan.

The Government are committed to making preparations both to help business deal with the euro following its introduction in the 11 participating member states on 1 January 1999, and also to making preparations for the possibility of the UK joining the single currency.

VAT

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what powers are available to him to offer a VAT rebate on holiday accommodation for visitors in the United Kingdom with particular reference to citizens of other EU states; and if he will make a statement. [126981]

Mr. Timms: There is no mechanism to rebate any of the VAT paid by tourists on the holiday accommodation they stay in while in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will use the powers available to him to vary the rate of VAT on specific services on a regional basis; and if he will make a statement. [126980]

Mr. Timms: The Chancellor has no powers to vary the rate of VAT on specific services on a regional basis.

Opinion Research

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 8 June 2000, Official Report, column 384W, on opinion research, how he is intending to make the results of this research publicly available in accordance with Cabinet Office guidelines. [126985]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Cabinet Office guide on Government research into public attitudes and opinions, published on 12 May 2000, says

> It is good practice to publish the results of research, or at least to place them in the House of Commons Library and make them publicly available on request and on the Internet.

We take full account of the Cabinet Office guidelines.

Correspondence

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will reply to the letters of 4 April and 3 May from the hon. Member for Banff and Buchan regarding his constituent Helen Cruickshank. [126675]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I replied to the hon. Member on 8 April. A copy will be forwarded.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will reply to the letter of 9 May from the hon. Member for Banff and Buchan regarding his constituent Vernon Hope. [126676]

Dawn Primarolo: I replied to the hon. Member on 14 June.

Landfill Tax

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will ring-fence landfill tax for waste recycling and reduction. [126804]

Mr. Timms: I have no plans to do so. However, the recently published Waste Strategy announced that the Government propose to use the Landfill Tax Credit Scheme to help deliver an increase in recycling, particularly of household waste.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Magistrates Courts

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many (a) cases were dealt with by (i) stipendiary magistrates and (ii) non-stipendiary magistrates benches and (b) each way cases were referred to the Crown court by (1) stipendiary magistrates and (2) non-stipendiary magistrate benches in each magistrates courts committee, for the last five years for which figures are available. [126442]

Jane Kennedy: A breakdown of cases dealt with by stipendiary magistrates and non-stipendiary magistrates benches is not held centrally, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

CABINET OFFICE

Business Excellence Model

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will make a statement on the progress of Phase three of the Public Sector Benchmarking project relating to the use of the Business Excellence Model. [125940]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Public Sector Benchmarking Project promotes the EFQM Excellence Model (previously the Business Excellence Model) to the public sector. Phase three, which begun in April 1998, includes arrangements for easy access to training and support at reduced rates. Since then, the project has introduced over 1,000 public sector organisations to the Model.

The Model is now used throughout the public sector, including local government, central Government, schools, hospitals, police forces, fire brigades, Agencies and non-departmental public bodies. It is used in support of the Modernising Government agenda, through policies such as Best Value and Better Quality Services.

We are not complacent. We are studying further the impact of the Excellence Model to help us decide how we can improve our efforts to maximise the use of the Excellence Model in the public sector.

The Public Sector Benchmarking Project is now known as the Public Sector Excellence Programme.

Taskforces and Review Groups

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will list the (a) task forces and (b) review groups which have been established since 1 May 1997, indicating which are still in existence; and how many there were on 1 May in (i) 1998, (ii) 1999 and (iii) 2000. [126500]

Mr. Stringer: A full list of Task Forces established between 2 May 1997 and 31 October 1999 was placed in the Library of the House on 9 December 1999. A list of review groups established during the same period was placed in the Library on 1 February 2000. We have given a commitment to update these lists every six months. Updated lists covering the period to the end of April 2000 will be published shortly.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Statistics

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what statistics relating to the responsibilities of his Department are collated by parliamentary constituency, indicating the dates covered in each case. [123846]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 25 May 2000]: The information requested is shown in the following table:

Table 1—Data relating to DfEE responsibilities which are collated by Parliamentary Constituency.

Subject area	Availability/frequency of publication/reference period
Working age employment rates	Annually for 1996, 1997 and 1998. 1999 data due in January 2001. Published by ONS
Working age economic activity rates	As above
ILO unemployment rates	As above but only available for about 80 constituencies due to small samples sizes
Claimant unemployment rates and claimant unemployment levels by age and duration	Monthly from January 1996. Latest available data is for April 2000. Published by ONS
Employee jobs by industry	1995–98 data are available currently. Next update for 1999 due in March 2001. Published by ONS.
Average earnings of full-time employees	Available for 1998 and 1999. Published by ONS.
New Deal for Young People Statistics	Available quarterly and updated quarterly

Note:
Other information collected in the Annual Schools Census, and school performance data using other measures than those quoted, could not be collated by constituency

New Deal Gateway

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to increase the flexibility of the New Deal Gateway in order to cope with those clients with severe social problems. [123883]

Ms Jowell: There already exists a high degree of flexibility in the Gateway for those with severe social problems, not least through the individually tailored support from the New Deal Personal Adviser. They are able to make use of systematic assessment techniques to identify problems that may be preventing the young person moving into employment. Young people will then, if necessary, be referred by their adviser to a range of provision which can help them with jobsearch, training in basic skills, dealing with issues such as drug or alcohol abuse. This help can be continued beyond the Gateway when the young person is on an option.

Advisers will also be able to defer entry to the new Gateway to Work by a few weeks for those young people who have other issues that need to be resolved and who would not be ready to benefit from the course.

School Lunches

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will place in the Library a list and a summary of responses to consultation on draft regulations and guidance for minimum nutritional standards for school lunches. [124496]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 5 June 2000]: A list and a summary of responses to our consultation on draft regulations and guidance for minimum nutritional standards for school lunches was published on 19 June, and copies have been placed in the Libraries.

Health and Safety

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the resource implications of the incorporation of health and safety issues into the National Curriculum; and if he will make a statement on developments on this matter. [125714]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 14 June 2000]: Health and safety issues have always been included in the National Curriculum. The revised curriculum, which will take effect in autumn 2000, contains clearer and fuller statements of the general principles applying to health and safety teaching, including the importance of risk assessment. Subject specific requirements are highlighted in individual subject orders. The only new requirement relates to Information and Communications Technology to reflect the massive increase in the use of computers in schools in recent years.

£6 million is available to schools from the Standards Fund to support the implementation of the revised National Curriculum. In addition, the Health and Safety Executive and the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority have produced joint guidance on teaching health and safety issues which is available at www.hse.gov.uk/policy/genteach.htm.

Single Currency

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will estimate the costs to his Department of conversion to the euro from the pound. [126402]

Mr. Wills: Should the UK decide to join the euro, the cost of a changeover would depend on the detailed approach taken to a changeover.

Performance-related Pay

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment whether teachers employed to teach in (a) institutions for young people maintained by social sciences departments and (b) prison institutions for young offenders are eligible for performance-related pay. [126318]

Ms Estelle Morris: Teachers employed to teach in institutions for young people maintained by social services departments and in prison institutions for young offenders are not, as of right, subject to the terms of the School Teachers' Pay and Conditions Document and are not eligible to apply for the threshold in the current round of the assessment process. In response to representations received from institutions wishing to mirror the threshold arrangements, we are actively considering how to open up threshold training and the external assessment process to such institutions once the immediate pressures of the current application round have reduced.

School Milk

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what recent guidance he has issued to (a) infant, (b) junior and (c) primary schools in England and Wales on school milk schemes. [127029]

Jacqui Smith: The Government encourage schools to provide drinking milk, and to make use of either the EU School Milk Subsidy Scheme or the Welfare Food Scheme. These schemes are administered by the Intervention Board, on behalf of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, and by the Department of Health, respectively.

Class Sizes

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what the average class size was for classes taught by one teacher in (a) 1996 and (b) 2000 for (i) pupils in Key Stage 1, (ii) pupils in Key Stage 2, (iii) primary schools and (iv) secondary schools in (1) Great Britain and (2) each parliamentary constituency. [126175]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 19 June 2000]: Class size information covering English parliamentary constituencies for 1996–97 and 1999–2000 has been placed in the Library.

Provisional national estimates of Key Stage 1 classes for January 2000 were recently published in a Statistical First Release "Class sizes in maintained schools in England: January 2000 (15/2000)" on 12 April 2000.

National figures for infant class sizes in September 1999 were published in Statistical First Release "Infant class sizes in England (2/2000)" on 21 January 2000.

The Government are well on target to deliver their pledge to limit infant classes to 30 pupils. At the same time, average class sizes in maintained primary schools went down for the second year running—from 27.5 in January 1999 to 27.1 in January 2000, after rising for the previous 10 years. The average size of junior classes also fell, from 28.4 in January 1999 to 28.3 in January 2000. Maintained secondary classes are already much smaller than primary, with around five fewer pupils on average. The pupil:teacher ratio in secondary schools in January 2000 was 17.1. It is worth bearing in mind that secondary classes rose steadily under the previous Government—in 1998 the figure was 19.9; and that in the Budget, secondary headteachers received between £30,000 and £50,000 each to spend as they choose. If they spent it on teachers, they could reduce the secondary pupil:teacher ratio by 0.4.

For information on class sizes in Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland, I refer the hon. Member to the Secretaries of State for Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Disabled School Children

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what (a) resources and (b) money targeted at improving access for disabled school children has been made available (i) nationally (ii) in Teesside and (iii) in the constituency of Middlesbrough, South and Cleveland, East since 1 May 1997; and if he will make a statement. [126496]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 19 June 2000]: Each year we make resources available through the School Access Initiative, to invest in making mainstream schools accessible to those with disabilities and sensory impairments. The following table sets out the amount allocated each year since 1997–98, nationally, in Teesside, and to Redcar and Cleveland LEA (which covers the constituency of Middlesbrough, South and Cleveland, East).

This is part of this Government's determination to improve educational standards for all children and work towards a more inclusive approach for children with disabilities. More than 1,900 schools will benefit from this year's £30 million programme. Working closely with LEAs like this offers us the best opportunity to secure a coherent approach to opportunities for disabled children.

Financial year	England (£ million)	Teesside[1] (£)	Redcar and Cleveland LEA (£)
1997–98	3.6	57,860	15,000
1998–99	11	175,000	35,000
1999–2000	20	350,000	100,000
2000–01	30	490,000	140,000

Correspondence

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Hexham of 22 February about the reduction in Northumberland school budgets. [126768]

Mr. Wills: A reply will be issued by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister shortly.

New Deal

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list for each parliamentary constituency (a) the total number of leavers from the New Deal for 18 to 24-year-olds, (b) the total number of leavers who have gone into sustained unsubsidised employment and (c) the total number of leavers whose destination is unknown in 1999; and if he will make a statement. [126178]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 19 June 2000]: The information on young people showing the number of leavers and the number of people moving into sustained unsubsidised employment is already held at constituency level in the Library. Although the number of people leaving for unknown destinations is not published at constituency level, it is available at Unit of Delivery level and is also in the Library. More statistical information is available and more research findings are published on New Deal than any previous Government programme.

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many lone parents in Paisley, South have found employment as a consequence of the New Deal for Lone Parents. [126816]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 19 June 2000]: Between October 1998 and the end of March 2000, 78 lone parents in Paisley, South had found employment as a consequence of the New Deal for Lone Parents.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the impact of the New Deal for (a) young people, (b) those aged over 50 years and (c) the long-term unemployed in Coventry. [125642]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 13 June 2000]: Up to the end of March 2000, 3,140 young people and 2,215 long term unemployed adults had benefited from starting the New Deal in Coventry. The New Deal for those aged 50 or over was launched nationally in April this year and it is too soon to provide statistics. New Deal has had a major impact on the employability of those who have taken part in the initiative; already over 1,750 people have found jobs. Many others have gained from the Personal Adviser approach and benefited from training, education and work experience opportunities.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people on the New Deal for over 25s in (a) Edinburgh and (b) Edinburgh, East and Musselburgh (i) at the end of March and (ii) at the latest available date, (1) were in the advisory interview process, (2) had found unsubsidised jobs through the advisory interview process, (3) had transferred to other provision, (4) were in subsidised employment, (5) had taken education and training opportunities, (6) were in training for work and (7) were in follow through. [125754]

Ms Jowell: The information is contained in the following table.

	Edinburgh	Edinburgh, East and Musselburgh
In advisory interview process	499	73
Found unsubsidised jobs through advisory interview process	160	35
Transferred to other provision	119	22
In subsidised employment	32	5
Taken education and training opportunities	61	7
In Training for Work	42	5
In Follow Through	3	0

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people in Edinburgh had (a) joined the 18 to 24 New Deal, (b) gained subsidised jobs from the 18 to 24 New Deal, (c) gained unsubsidised jobs from the 18 to 24 New Deal, (d) started on the 18 to 24 New Deal Gateway, (e) entered each of the 18 to 24 New Deal Options and (f) been on follow-through (i) at the end of March and (ii) at the latest available date. [125822]

Ms Jowell: Latest figures show that to the end of March 2000 in Edinburgh 3,099 people joined the New Deal for Young People, 232 gained subsidised jobs, 1,238 gained unsubsidised jobs, 2,739 started on the New Deal Gateway, 232 started the employment option, 397 started Full Time Education and Training, 239 started the Voluntary Sector option, 194 started the Environment Task Force option and 594 started Follow Through. We are on course to meet our Manifesto commitment of 250,000 jobs.

Governors' Advice Line

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he plans to launch a governors' advice line as recommended by the Education and Employment Committee's Fifth report of Session 1998–99, HC509-I; and when it will be available for school governors to use. [126904]

Jacqui Smith: The Government stated their commitment to providing a single national helpline for school governors in the response my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State made last autumn to the Select Committee's Report on the Role of School Governors. Negotiations with national governor organisations' representatives are continuing. Meanwhile, we are funding the three existing governors' helplines provided by the National Governors' Council, the National Association of Governors and Managers and Information for School and College Governors.

We greatly appreciate the work done by governors, as volunteers, and we want them to have access to independent advice from experienced governors.

ICT Access

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what advice has been given to schools about allowing local residents' groups and other organisations access to computers and other facilities outside school hours. [126116]

Jacqui Smith: The Department published "Raising Standards: opening doors: developing links between schools and their communities" in January this year. This document offers wide-ranging advice to schools on allowing greater access to their premises and facilities and on enhancing their links with the local community. It is available free of charge to all schools.

We are also planning to publish later this year a Schools Plus Manual, which will offer schools further practical advice and support on how to develop as a community resource and how to strengthen their relationships with their local community.

In March this year the Schools Plus Policy Action Team, set up by the Social Exclusion Unit following its report on Neighbourhood Renewal, published its report on "Building Learning Communities". The Team considered how schools could be used to engage the community, drawing in greater support and making their facilities available to more people. It made 32 recommendations under two broad headings: extending services offered by schools; and improving school community links. We are considering how to implement the Team's recommendations.

Specialist Schools

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of specialist schools make use of their right to select up to 10 per cent. of their pupils by aptitude. [127072]

Ms Estelle Morris: We do not have figures on the percentage of specialist schools which make use of the 10 per cent. aptitude selection arrangement. Information about this is now being collected within the schools' progress reports. From a questionnaire sent to the first 238 specialist schools we know that 7 per cent. of the 142 schools which responded select some of their pupils by aptitude.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many specialist schools have been set up since 1997; how many have opted to select 10 per cent. of their intake by aptitude; and if he will list each of those schools and their local education authority. [126905]

Ms Estelle Morris: In May 1997, there were 181 specialist schools. A further 222 specialist schools have become operational since then. We do not have figures on the percentage of specialist schools which select 10 per cent. of their intake by aptitude. Information about this is now being collected within the schools' progress reports. From a questionnaire sent to the first 238 specialist schools we know that 7 per cent. of the 142 schools which responded select some of their pupils by aptitude.

Class Sizes (East Sussex)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what the average class size was in secondary schools in East Sussex in each year since 1979. [126299]

Ms Estelle Morris: The requested information on class sizes in maintained secondary schools in East Sussex local education authority area is shown in the following table.

In England, maintained secondary classes are already much smaller than primary classes, with around five fewer pupils on average. The average class size in maintained secondary schools in England in January 2000 was 22.0, compared to an average of 27.1 pupils per class in maintained primary schools. It is also worth considering the secondary class size figures published on 12 April in the Statistical First Release "Class sizes in maintained schools in England: January 2000", which showed a rise in class sizes under the previous Government—in 1990 the average class size in maintained secondary schools in England was 20.3.

In the Budget, secondary headteachers received between £30,000 and £50,000 each to spend as they choose. If they spent it on teachers, it is estimated that this would reduce the pupil:teacher[1] ratio in secondary schools by 0.4.

[1] Pupil:teacher ratios (PTRs) within maintained secondary schools relate the overall number of pupils in these schools to the full-time equivalent number of qualified teachers employed in these schools.

SSAs

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list by LEA in England the amount each local authority spent on education above its education SSA for each of the past five years. [126906]

Ms Estelle Morris: The following table shows by LEA the amount in £ million by which each authority budgeted above or below its education SSA for the years 1995–96 to 1999–2000. Budget figures are taken from Local Authority Revenue Account (RA) returns, and include a centrally calculated estimate of the amount of education related capital expenditure from the revenue account (CERA). Figures for 2000–01 are not yet available: in this and future years, budget data which are more precisely comparable to education SSA will be available from the section 52 returns submitted by local education authorities, including their own estimate of CERA.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Corruption and Bribery

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which British companies involved in the Ilisu Dam project are involved in the trial concerning bribery and corruption in Lesotho; and if he will make a statement. [127079]

Mr. Caborn [holding answer 20 June 2000]: As has already been reported in the press, Balfour Beatty, one of the companies involved in a bribery trial in Lesotho, is bidding for work on the proposed Ilisu Dam project in Turkey.

It would be inappropriate to comment on specific allegations against British firms, which are a matter for the appropriate courts.

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what formal procedures are in place in the event of companies in receipt of ECGD support (a) being charged with corruption and (b) having allegations of corruption made against them. [127082]

Mr. Caborn [holding answer 20 June 2000]: ECGD's audit services would normally investigate any case, in either category, where there are grounds for believing that the Exchequer's interest might be prejudiced as a result of alleged corrupt practices.

ECGD will shortly be introducing new procedures to the OECD Bribery Convention aimed at further deterring corrupt practices.

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he has taken concerning recent allegations of bribery and corruption on the part of British companies in Lesotho. [127080]

Mr. Caborn [holding answer 20 June 2000]: The Government share international concern at all allegations of corruption. It would, however, be inappropriate to comment on specific allegations against UK firms which are a matter, in this instance, for the Lesotho courts. The Government will, if asked, co-operate fully in any way that it can.

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the directors of UK companies banned from World bank contracts who are directors of companies in receipt of ECGD support; and if he will list the relevant companies. [127085]

Mr. Caborn [holding answer 20 June 2000]: The World bank last updated their list of ineligible firms on 29 February 2000. ECGD has no record of having provided support to any of the firms on that list.

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what staff he has in post to check for corruption relating to ECGD- backed projects. [127083]

Mr. Caborn [holding answer 20 June 2000]: ECGD policy makes it clear that all staff have a part to play in minimising the risks of corruption and malpractice by remaining alert to such possibilities and by developing and maintaining effective controls to reduce these risks. Additionally there is an Internal Audit Department of seven who have responsibility for investigating any suspected cases of corruption relating to ECGD backed projects.

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if guidelines to prevent corruption will be included in the forthcoming recommendations for the ECGD's Mission and Status. [127084]

Mr. Caborn [holding answer 20 June 2000]: The review of ECGD's Mission and Status is ongoing and I cannot comment on the outcome of the review until it is complete. It is looking at what ECGD's future role should be and, as I stressed when I announced the review last July, will consider carefully how ECGD can better help the Government to meet their wider objectives. I expect Ministers to determine necessary changes to ECGD's Mission in the next month or so. A report of the review will be published.

Post Offices (Benefits Agency Business)

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what payments were made to post offices in each of the last five years for undertaking Benefits Agency business in (a) Scotland, (b) Dumfries and Galloway and (c) Galloway and Upper Nithsdale parliamentary constituency. [124713]

Mr. Alan Johnson: I understand from the Post Office that details of payments made to post offices in respect of business undertaken for the Benefits Agency are contractual matters and as such commercially confidential.

Trade Partners UK

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the recent performance of British Trade International; and what are its (a) performance criteria and (b) annual budget. [126751]

Mr. Caborn: British Trade International's services for trade development and promotion are now delivered under the single brand name of Trade Partners UK. As I announced last month, British Trade International is also the umbrella body for the Invest in Britain Bureau which will work alongside Trade Partners UK.

Trade Partners UK was launched nationally on 31 May 2000, and replaces the various promotional brands that have been used in the past. The services available to firms will be easier to access and more effective. A new electronic gateway provides internet access to all basic information on international markets and business sectors, and an electronic inquiry service. Trade Partners UK will continue to work in partnership with other Government Departments, devolved administrations and regional bodies.

Trade Partners UK's aim is to enhance the competitiveness of Britain's companies through overseas sales and investments. Trade development and promotion objectives have been published in both the Foreign Office's Departmental Report and the Department of Trade and Industry's Government Expenditure Plans.

In the period 1999–2000, these objectives were achieved with, for example, a customer satisfaction rate of 89 per cent. and more businesses (especially SMEs) being encouraged to take an active and professional approach to exporting as a result of assistance provided.

Detailed performance criteria for Trade Partners UK's future activities are in development. These will be in place by April 2001.

British Trade International's annual budget for its Trade Partners UK activities consists of three elements. In round figures these are:

about £67 million for programme expenditure;

about £90 million (net of certain overheads) currently devoted to running costs (staff) in overseas posts; about £30 million currently devoted to running costs in the UK (the headquarters in London and the English regional operations). About £28 million of the funding is provided by DTI, the balance by the FCO.

These figures exclude funding for the Invest in Britain Bureau.

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what will be the cost of establishing Trade Partners UK. [126753]

Mr. Caborn: It cost £250,000 to develop the Trade Partners UK brand. Further costs of promoting and developing customer awareness of the new brand and the services we offer are being met by redirecting marketing effort that would in any case have been spent on promoting our services.

A3XX

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what level of launch aid has been provided by his Department for the Airbus A3XX; to how many sets of components the launch aid applies; and how many jobs he estimates will be created as a result of the launch aid. [127158]

Mr. Alan Johnson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry announced on 13 March 2000, Official Report, column 9W, that the Government would provide £530 million of launch investment to BAE Systems to help them develop the wings for the A3XX. We estimate this project will create 22,000 new jobs (8,000 in BAE Systems and supply companies, and 14,000 new induced employment) and safeguard a further 62,000 jobs (20,000 on current Airbus programmes and 42,000 in induced employment).

Employment Relations Act 1999

Dr. Desmond Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will use section 23 of the Employment Relations Act 1999 to give ministers of religion the same employment rights as other employees. [126879]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The Government are committed to carrying out full public consultation before exercising the power in section 23, which allows the Secretary of State to confer existing employment rights on categories of individuals who currently fall outside their coverage. The issue of rights for ministers of religion is one of those on which we intend to seek views in the consultation document.

Foreign-based Commercial Staff

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many commercial staff and at what grades his Department employs in (a) Kazakhstan, (b) Uzbekistan, (c) Turkmenistan, (d) Tajikistan and (e) Kyrgystan. [R] [126433]

Mr. Battle: I have been asked to reply.

Commercial staff overseas are employed by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office as part of the unified FCO/DTI British Trade International operation. Staff in British Trade International's UK operation are primarily employed by the Department of Trade and Industry. We have no representation in Tajikistan or Kyrgystan. Details of commercial staffing in the other countries are (a) Kazakhstan—the equivalent of 2.68 staff (including a DTI officer on loan), (b) Uzbekistan—the equivalent of 2.65 staff and (c) Turkmenistan—the equivalent of 1.95 staff. The staff involved in commercial work vary in grades. These totals are a reflection of the total time spent by both UK based and locally engaged staff over a year. They reflect the combined efforts of several staff at each post on commercial work.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Food Imports

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of (a) organic foods, (b) bottled drinking water, (c) parsnips and (d) yoghurt consumed in the UK are imported. [126323]

Ms Quin [holding answer 19 June 2000]: It is estimated that about (a) 70 per cent. of organic foods, (b) 35 per cent. of mineral water, and (d) 15 per cent. of yoghurt consumed in the UK are imported. Statistics on imports of parsnips are not separately available.

Animal By-products

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to minimise skip lorry movements of animal products for final disposal between farms. [125167]

Ms Quin [holding answer 8 June 2000]: None. The transport and disposal of animal by-products are already controlled by the Animal By-Products Order 1999. The Order is enforced by local authorities.

Confectionery Manufacturing

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the impact on British confectionery manufacturing of the European Commission's decision to suspend the payment of refunds payable on the export of non-Annex 1 products. [124769]

Ms Quin [holding answer 14 June 2000]: From 8 May this year the European Commission temporarily suspended the issue of further refund certificates, required for refund payments on the export of non-Annex 1 products. Special provision has been made for small traders to ensure that they are unaffected by the suspension. This suspension reflects the Commission's concern about the value of claims made so far in the current year compared to budgetary limits.

For the British confectionery manufacturing industry this could result in a shortfall in the current budget year of some £4.7 million from the previous year's export refund receipt of £18.5 million, if certificates remain suspended until the end of the budget year in October. The UK confectionery industry exports products worth some £300 million per year to non-EU destinations, and it is these exports that will be affected by suspension.

Discussions with the Commission are continuing at official and at ministerial level to secure a solution that will minimise the impact for all exporting industries affected by the suspension.

Milk

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to promote the consumption of fresh milk in schools. [125790]

Ms Quin: The Government have already taken action via the Intervention Board to draw the attention of schools and local education authorities to the existence of the EU School Milk Subsidy Scheme and to simplify its operations. The Intervention Board has also recently issued a questionnaire to all claimant organisations in England and Wales seeking further suggestions for improvements to the administration of the scheme.

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to assist the promotion of the sale of fresh milk. [125791]

Ms Quin: In response to calls from representatives of dairy farmers the Government widened the remit of the Milk Development Council (MDC) to allow it to engage in the generic promotion of milk. The MDC's first marketing campaign for fresh milk, funded jointly by producers and processors, commenced on 19 June.

Mr. Todd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the basis and source of data of the Intervention Board calculations of milk production; and what representations he has received as to their accuracy. [125775]

Ms Quin: The monthly, wholesale, butterfat-adjusted, milk production figures calculated by the Intervention Board are based on monthly returns submitted to the Intervention Board by all approved milk purchasers, as required by regulation 28(2) of the Dairy Produce Quotas Regulations 1997, as amended.

The Intervention Board has received a number of representations over time about the accuracy of the milk production figures and, in response to such inquiries, has explained that the figures are subject to amendment and should not be regarded as definitive. It is made clear in the accompanying notes that the figures are issued only as a guide to trends in milk production and for comparison against a calculated milk quota profile. Those using the figures, particularly in reaching commercial decisions relating to milk quota or milk production, are advised to take account of the limitations, which are set out in some detail.

Farm Diversification

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what (a) advice and (b) financial assistance is available to farmers to help them diversify their work; and if he will make a statement. [125949]

Mr. Morley: We will launch a new Rural Enterprise Scheme which will include grant aid for farm diversification once we receive approval from the European Commission for the England Rural Development Plan.

Under the Action Plan for Farming we will also produce a new booklet on farm diversification and intend to provide free advice on planning to successful applicants to the Rural Enterprise Scheme.

Farm Animal Welfare

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to persuade his European Union partners to give a high priority during negotiations to revise WTO rules ensuring that the EU can maintain and improve its standards of farm animal welfare; and if he will make a statement. [126514]

Ms Quin: The conclusions of the EU Agriculture Council on 27 September 1999 and the General Affairs Council on 25 October 1999 committed the EU to taking forward the issue of farm animal welfare in the WTO negotiations. The UK has been a strong support of this commitment, which was reinforced by the Prime Minister in his Action Plan for Farming, published on 30 March 2000, and we will be seeking to take it forward in the negotiations on agriculture which have now started.

Fisheries Council

Mr. Casale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what the outcome was of the Fisheries Council held in Luxembourg on 16 June; and if he will make a statement. [127182]

Mr. Morley: The Fisheries Council met in Luxembourg on 16 June. I led the UK delegation, accompanied by John Home Robertson, Deputy Minister for Rural Affairs in the Scottish Executive.

The Commission presented its mid-term review of the Multi Annual Guidance Programme (MAGP) IV, which will now go for further study. I made clear that I could not accept the cuts in the UK fleet suggested by the Commission. In particular, effort control must be retained. However, the need to bring capacity into better balance with available stocks remained, and I welcome the Commission's plans for a public consultation this autumn on successor arrangements to MAGP IV. Stricter MAGP limits should be applied in member states offering construction grants for new vessels.

The Council adopted a report on the integration of environmental concerns into the Common Fisheries Policy for submission to the European Council and agreed on new arrangements for the collection of biological and economic data on the industry. I, together with German and Belgian colleagues, succeeded in insisting that these should not be unnecessarily burdensome. We raised the issue of unregulated international fishing for haddock off Rockall and with support from a number of member states pressed the Commission to seek early action through the North East Atlantic Fisheries Commission.

I welcomed a statement from Commissioner Fischler on the need for member states to take action to reduce cetacean bycatches in EU waters. I also welcomed the Commission's report on the pilot stage of Regional Workshops, which helpfully bring together fishermen, scientists and administrators to consider improvements in the management of particular fisheries.

Commissioner Fischler reported on the latest state of play on negotiations on a new EU-Morocco Agreement. The Council had an initial discussion on responsibility for the enforcement of Regional Fisheries Organisation responsibilities. A revised Total Allowable Catch for anchovies was agreed.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Free Votes

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Council if she will make it the Government's policy that in each instance where the majority of the House is in favour of legislation and where the Government are neutral on the issue in question, it will put forward appropriate legislation, provide time for debate and permit a free vote on specific issues. [126084]

Mrs. Beckett: Governments are elected on the basis of their Manifestos, which will always contain a number of commitments requiring legislation. It is right that Manifesto commitments should have priority. Other legislative needs are identified by Government and examined on a case-by-case basis. Although parliamentary time is limited, there have always been occasions when the Government has found time for matters on which it is itself neutral.

Appointments Commission

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Council if the Appointments Commission will make it its policy to give unsuccessful applicants for membership of the House of Lords reasons why their applications failed. [126832]

Mrs. Beckett: This is a matter for the Appointments Commission.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Council who provides the secretariat supporting the Appointments Commission; and how many persons are employed in it. [126835]

Mrs. Beckett: The Appointments Commission is supported by a Secretariat who are either members of, or on loan to, the Cabinet Office. The Commission has yet to determine its final requirement for staff.

The same staffing arrangement applies to other independent bodies such as the Commissioner for Public Appointments and the Committee on Standards in Public Life.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Council if applicants for membership of the House of Lords are to receive a specification from the Appointments Commission setting out the qualities and abilities expected in successful applicants. [126836]

Mrs. Beckett: I understand that it is the Commission's intention to be exceedingly open in its procedures. The issue of a person specification would be consistent with that approach.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Council if she will list the scheduled dates of meetings of the Appointments Commission in 2000. [126834]

Mrs. Beckett: This is a matter for the Commission.

I understand, however, that the schedule of meetings has not yet been finalised.

DEFENCE

Boeing C17

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the total cost is over the whole life of the contract for the lease of the four Boeing C17 aircraft; and if it includes maintenance for the aircraft. [125437]

Mr. Hoon: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Robert Walmsley to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 21 June 2000:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence in which you asked what the total cost is over the whole life of the contract for the lease for the four C17 aircraft; and if it includes maintenance for the aircraft. This matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief of Defence Procurement and Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency.

The exact contract price is commercially confidential. In broad terms, however, we expect the overall cost to be in the order of £500M, which costs include maintenance of the aircraft.

Permanent Secretary (Official Visits)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the visits outside the UK made by his Department's Permanent Secretary on official business since 1 January 1999, indicating the date and purpose of the visit in each case. [127135]

Dr. Moonie: The MOD's Permanent Secretary has made the following visits outside the UK on official business since 1 January 1999.

Date	Venue	Purpose
1999
5–7 February	Munich, Germany	Wehrkunde security conference
25–26 February	Bonn, Germany	Talks on european defence and bilateral issues
24 March-2 April	Pakistan and India	UK/Pakistan Defence Cooperation Forum UK/India Defence Consultative Group
12–13 May	Ploce, Macedonia	Visiting UK forces, and bilateral discussions
3 June	Brussels, Belgium	Discussions at NATO Headquarters
7–8 June	Ankara, Turkey	Talks on European defence and bilateral issues
20 July	Paris, France	Talks on European defence and bilateral issues
2–3 August	Bosnia and Croatia	Visiting UK forces
1–2 September	Copenhagen, Denmark	Conference of Northern Defence Permanent Secretaries
18–19 October	Rome, Italy	Talks on European defence and bilateral issues

8–9 November	Germany	Visiting UK forces
2000
24–25 January	Cyprus	Visiting UK forces
4–5 February	Munich, Germany	Wehrkunde security conference
15–16 March	Berlin, Germany	Chairing UK/German seminar
11–12 April	Oslo, Norway	Talks on European defence and bilateral issues
11–12 May	Pristina, Kosovo	Visiting UK forces, and other discussions

MOD Buildings, Whitehall

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his proposals for refurbishing the MOD building in Whitehall, including the total cost of the refurbishment. [126677]

Dr. Moonie: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for St. Albans (Mr. Pollard) on 17 May 2000, Official Report, columns 162–63W.

Kosovo (Depleted Uranium)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what reports he has evaluated of health problems among service men deployed in Kosovo attributable to contact with depleted uranium. [125934]

Mr. Spellar: I have not received any reports evaluating or suggesting health problems among service personnel deployed in Kosovo attributable to contact with depleted uranium.

Senegal (Chinooks)

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the decision was taken to send Chinooks to Senegal in order to assist the deployment of troops; when the Chinooks left the United Kingdom; when they arrived in Senegal; and if he will make a statement. [126998]

Mr. Hoon: The decision to deploy Chinooks to Dakar in Senegal, which was designated as the Forward Mounting Base for the evacuation operation, was taken on Saturday 6 May. The Chinooks left the UK that day and flew to Dakar over the course of that weekend, arriving in the early morning of 8 May.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Hospitals

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to monitor cleanliness of hospital wards and operating theatres. [126918]

Clare Short: Our health programmes in developing countries work to improve the overall quality of health care provided, particularly for the poorest. Good hygiene practice and sterile operating conditions are important indicators of quality in service delivery.

China Western Poverty Reduction Project

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to support the Qinghai component of the China Western Poverty Reduction Project. [126919]

Clare Short: The report by the Independent Inspection Panel into the China Western Poverty Reduction Project, and World Bank management's response to it, will be discussed at a World Bank Board meeting in early July 2000. We will be looking very carefully at the conclusions of the Inspection Panel Report, and management's response to it, in preparing our position for that board meeting.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Flaxmill, Shrewsbury

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the extent of repairs required to the Flaxmill in Shrewsbury. [125943]

Ms Beverley Hughes: I understand the building has been empty since 1987 and has a status of Grade A awarded by English Heritage. The repairs have been estimated to cost some £12.2 million.

Bus Lanes

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will amend the road traffic regulations to enable Class 3 vehicles to use bus lanes; and if he will make a statement. [126187]

Mr. Hill: I have no plans to amend regulations to permit Class 3 vehicles to access bus lanes.

The use of bus lanes by those vehicles, which are limited by Regulation to a maximum speed of 12.8 kph, would impede the flow of buses. That would clearly undermine the purpose of bus lanes which is to afford buses greater priority over other vehicles.

There is also the question of safety. We would be extremely concerned about the safety of Class 3 users travelling in small, slow moving vehicles immediately in front of or behind some of the largest vehicles on our roads.

Where Class 3 users consider that the road conditions are unsuitable for them to travel on the carriageway we would strongly recommend that they continue the journey on the footway where they can legally travel at up to 6.4 kph. We believe that is more appropriate than providing them with access to bus lanes.

Rail Service (London-Liverpool)

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with the Rail Regulator about the delays in boarding Liverpool trains at Euston Station. [126421]

Mr. Hill: The Franchising Director, not the Rail Regulator, is responsible for monitoring delays in the boarding of trains. The Secretary of State has had no discussions with the Franchising Director about delays in boarding Liverpool trains at Euston station.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received on the timekeeping of West Coast Main Line trains between Liverpool and Euston. [126422]

Mr. Hill: The Secretary of State has not received any representations about the timekeeping of West Coast Main Line trains between Liverpool and Euston. All trains on the West Coast Main Line have been subject to some delays due to the West Coast Main Line upgrade, but consequential amendments have been to the timetable and timekeeping has remained constant. The Franchising Director's publication 'On Track' (copies of which are available in the House Libraries) shows that 80.6 per cent. of West Coast Main Line trains arrived at their destination within 10 minutes of the advertised time in the year to 31 March 2000. This was an improvement on the 72.8 per cent. achieved in the previous year.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with the Rail Regulator on the timekeeping of West Coast Main Line services between Liverpool Lime Street and Euston. [126420]

Mr. Hill: The Franchising Director not the Rail Regulator is responsible for monitoring the timekeeping of trains. The Secretary of State has had no discussions with the Franchising Director about the timekeeping of West Coast Main Line services between Liverpool and Euston.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received about delays in boarding Liverpool trains at Euston station. [126511]

Mr. Hill: The Secretary of State has received no representations relating specifically to delays in boarding trains to Liverpool at Euston station. Development work in connection with the West Coast Main Line upgrade has resulted in a number of platforms at Euston being closed between May and September of this year. The consequential shortage of platforms has meant that upon arrival trains unload passengers and are then cleaned and stored out of the immediate station area, returning to the departure platform shortly before departure time. This has resulted in reduced intervals between trains being available for loading and departure times but this is common to all services from Euston.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions took place at the Rail Summit about the timekeeping of West Coast Main Line services between Liverpool Lime Street and Euston. [126782]

Mr. Hill: Timekeeping of West Coast Main Line services between Liverpool Lime Street and Euston was not discussed at the Rail Summit.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make it a condition when re-awarding the franchise for the West Coast Main Line that the level of on-board services between Liverpool Lime Street and Euston Station is improved. [126781]

Mr. Hill: The present franchise for the West Coast Main Line is not due to be replaced until 9 March 2012. The franchise, in common with all the other passenger rail franchises, does not contain any provisions stipulating what on-board services must be provided. It is not envisaged that there will be any such provisions in any of the replacement franchises.

Sewage Works

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what monitoring system is in place to ensure that the precautions required by law when parties of school pupils or organised parties of adults visit water treatment or sewage works are taken. [126282]

Mr. Meacher: Employers in the water supply and sewage treatment industry have general duties placed upon them by the Health and Safety at Work etc Act 1974 to ensure that, so far as is reasonably practicable, visitors are not exposed to risks to their health and safety.

The Management of Health and Safety at Work Regulations require employers to carry out a suitable and sufficient assessment of the risks arising from their undertaking to the health and safety of persons not in their employment. This includes members of the public.

Risks to health, including biological risks, are also covered by the more specific requirements of the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1999. They require the employer to carry out a risk assessment and where necessary to implement suitable measures to reduce the risk. This duty would extend to groups visiting the site.

The Health and Safety Executive is responsible for the inspection of water treatment works and sewage works. Inspections of water treatment companies would include an assessment of their ability to manage and control risks, including, where appropriate, risks to the public.

Mr. Gorrie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of whether washing screens in the screen houses of sewage works with untreated effluent produces a local atmosphere containing biological agents of a hazardous nature. [126269]

Mr. Meacher: HSE has undertaken at least one local intervention to monitor levels of aerosols in a screen house and at visits to water treatment companies over the years has looked into the biological risks arising from the process and the way they are controlled.

There are potentially hazardous micro-organisms in all sewage and a range of reasonably practicable precautions should be taken to control the risk.

HSE made a number of recommendations including improved washing facilities, disposable overalls, respiratory protective equipment and improved ventilation. Although they had initially recommended the use of clean mains water or its equivalent for screen washing, they accepted that this was not reasonably practicable given the very large volumes used and the fact that a new secondary treatment works is being built and that biologically treated effluent will be available for screen washing from September 2000, with the plant being fully commissioned by the end of 2000.

At a national level HSE works with the water industry's national trade body, Water UK, to help identify and resolve health and safety problems in the industry. Work has been carried out at national level on the microbiological risks from sewage, including those encountered at sewage treatment works. HSE produced guidance for employers and workers in 1995.

Screens are usually washed with water which has been through the treatment process ("final effluent") which, while not of drinking-water quality, has fairly low levels of micro-organisms. However, where the treatment facilities are limited, as at Seafield, the water used will have higher levels of micro-organisms. The main risk is from ingestion/swallowing and from splashes on the skin and in the eyes. Aerosols containing micro-organisms are likely to be produced in screen houses from the general flow of sewage and also from the washing down of the screens. These aerosols can pose a risk to health from inhalation, depending on droplet size and the type and amount of micro-organisms present.

Cycles

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many of his Department's buildings display notices prohibiting the chaining of cycles to railings. [126410]

Mr. Hill: Only the Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre, London, displays such signs. This reflects the high security needs of the centre.

Light and Noise Pollution

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish maps showing tranquil areas in respect of light and noise pollution. [126413]

Mr. Hill: In respect of noise, Birmingham City Council has recently produced an innovative noise map of the City with support from this Department. This has been published as a DETR report ("A report on the production of noise maps of the City of Birmingham"—ISBN 1–851123–59–8). Copies are available in the House Library and on the DETR website (www.environment.detr.gov.uk/noisemaps/birmingham/report/index.htm).

The question of extending this technique throughout the country both in urban areas and relatively quiet areas in the open country is actively being considered by the Government and in European fora. My hon. Friend may wish to be aware that the Council for the Protection of Rural England together with the Countryside Commission has published a "Tranquillity Map", identifying areas of England which are far enough away from visual or noise intrusion to be considered unspoilt by urban influences.

There are no plans at this time to introduce mapping for light pollution.

Dioxin

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for East Worthing and Shoreham (Mr. Loughton) of 24 May 2000, Official Report, column 539W, on dioxin, if he will make a statement about the operation of his Department's Hazardous Air Pollutants Programme in East Sussex. [126258]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 19 June 2000]: The Hazardous Air Pollutants Programme has no measuring station in East Sussex.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for East Worthing and Shoreham (Mr. Loughton) of 24 May 2000, Official Report, column 539W, on dioxin, what assessment his Department has made of the geographical comprehensiveness of his Department's Hazardous Air Pollutants Programme; and if he will make a statement. [126257]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 19 June 2000]: The Hazardous Air Pollutants Programme has made measurements of polyaromatic hydrocarbons (PAH), dioxins, furans and polychlorinated biphenyls in Cardiff, Manchester, London, Stevenage, Hazelrigg in Lancashire, High Muffles in the North Yorkshire Moors and Stoke Ferry in East Anglia in various years since 1991. It is making further measurements of PAH at Ashington, Bolsover, Glasgow, Holyhead, Kinlochleven, Lisburn, Newport (Gwent), Port Talbot and Scunthorpe. The first list of sites gives a good indication of levels of hazardous air pollutants across the UK as a whole, while the second list represents sites where levels might be expected to be higher than average.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for East Worthing and Shoreham (Mr. Loughton) of 24 May 2000, Official Report, column 539W, on dioxin, what steps he has taken to publicise the website displaying the results of programmes which monitor dioxin levels; how many hits that website has received for each of the last 12 months for which figures are available; and what is the web address. [126259]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 19 June 2000]: The Department's website that contains the results of all the Department's air quality measuring programmes is widely publicised in a variety of media. The number of hits on the pages containing the dioxin measurements were 2,445 in the period 1 June 1999 to 31 May 2000, representing approximately 1,150 users. The website address is http://www.environment.detr.gov.uk/airq/aqinfo.htm, then click on National Air Quality Information Archive and then Monitoring Networks. The dioxin data are collected in the Toxic Organic Micropollutants section.

The Food Standards Agency data are on the website http://www.foodstandards.gov.uk. This site has experienced 612 hits since 3 April 2000 on the pages giving information about dioxins in food.

Houses in Multiple Occupation

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which local authorities operate registration schemes for houses in multiple occupation; how many properties are on the list; and what proportion are estimated to be high risk. [127007]

Mr. Mullin: The latest information my Department has on such schemes, based on local authority returns made in July 1999, indicated that 81 authorities, as listed, had schemes, and had registered approximately 10,000 houses in multiple occupation in the private rented sector. A number of these schemes, notably in London boroughs, are ward-based, although the majority are authority-wide:

Darlington, Gateshead, Middlesbrough, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Stockton-on-Tees, North Tyneside, Barnsley, Calderdale, East Riding of Yorkshire, Harrogate, North East Lincolnshire, North Lincolnshire, Rotherham, Scarborough, York, Derby, Kettering, Mansfield, Newark and Sherwood, South Kesteven, Basildon, Cambridge, Colchester, Kings Lynn and West Norfolk, Luton, Mid Bedfordshire, North Norfolk, Peterborough, South Norfolk, St. Albans, Tendring, Watford, Waveney, Barking and Dagenham, Bromley, Brent, Camden, Croydon, Ealing, Greenwich, Hackney, Hammersmith and Fulham, Haringey, Hillingdon, Kingston-upon-Thames, Lewisham, Newham, Islington, Hounslow, Sutton, Tower Hamlets, Westminster, Chiltern, Dover, Gravesham, Canterbury, Guildford, Portsmouth, Rushmoor, Southampton, Thanet, Bournemouth, Bristol, Cheltenham, Mid Devon, North Somerset, Torbay, West Devon, Weymouth and Portland, Birmingham, Coventry, Redditch, Wyre Forest, Blackpool, Bury, Carlisle, Chester, Lancaster, Preston, Warrington, West Lancashire, Wirral.

Authorities are not required to notify new schemes to my Department, but we are aware of several in the past year, including:

Kingston-upon-Hull, Sheffield, Bexley, Harrow, Lambeth, Southwark, Eastbourne, North Warwickshire, Brighton and Hove, Doncaster, Oxford, Herefordshire.

All the schemes are based upon my Department's 1997 model, which exempts certain lower-risk categories in the private rented sector, including houses occupied by: persons who form only two households; no more than four persons who form more than two households; no more than three persons in addition to the responsible person and any other member of their household.

Speed Cameras

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the results of the schemes that are exploring alternative mechanisms of funding speed cameras. [126966]

Mr. Hill: The camera funding pilots that started in April this year in eight police force areas in England, Wales and Scotland will run for two years to assess the effectiveness of new funding arrangements. It is too soon after the start for any results to be available yet, and we expect some preliminary results after the first year.

Abandoned Vehicles

Mr. Patrick Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will review the Refuse Disposal Act 1978 with regard to the seven day notice period applicable to vehicles abandoned on the public highway before they can be removed by local authorities. [126568]

Mr. Hill: The existing regulations are intended to provide owners with safeguards against a local authority prematurely assuming a vehicle is abandoned and having it towed away for scrap. They also ensure that local authorities do not have to go to the unnecessary expense of removing and storing vehicles that may not, in the event, have been abandoned.

We believe that the current legislation provides a good balance between the powers of local authorities to deal with abandoned vehicles and the rights of vehicle owners.

Mr. Patrick Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make it his policy to maintain an official record of the number of motor vehicles abandoned every year in England and Wales. [126566]

Mr. Hill: There are no plans at present to maintain an official record of such cases.

Mr. Patrick Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will introduce legislation to amend the Data Protection Act 1998 to allow details of last registered owners of abandoned motor vehicles to be passed to local authorities on request. [126565]

Mr. Hill: The Data Protection Act exempts certain data from its non-disclosure provisions. The Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency already has powers to release vehicle keeper details to local authorities to help them deal with abandoned vehicles. The Agency provides the information on request. It is also developing electronic links with authorities to speed up the process.

Mr. Patrick Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to review the (a) legal and (b) financial framework for dealing with abandoned motor vehicles. [126567]

Mr. Hill: We will review the existing arrangements as we develop proposals for implementing the proposed European End-of-Life Vehicles Directive in the UK.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the overseas trips on official business he has made since 1 January; and how many days he has spent overseas since 1 January. [126546]

Mr. Prescott [holding answer 19 June 2000]: Since 1 January 2000 I have made the following overseas visits on official business:

Sunday 12 to Friday 17 March:

Brazil and United States. Meetings with President Cardoso and other Brazilian Ministers. Trade Promotion. Meetings with Carnival and Cunard shipping companies and discussions on aviation with US Secretary of Transportation.

Friday 7 to Tuesday 11 April:

Japan. Attend G8 Environment Ministers Conference. Meetings with Prime Minister Mori and other Japanese Ministers and with Honorary Chairman of Toyota.

Tuesday 25 to Thursday 27 April:

United States. Meetings with Vice President Gore and other members of US Administration. Discussions with Senators on climate change. Attend United Nations Commission on Sustainable Development.

Sunday 4 June:

France. Represent UK Government at 60th Anniversary of Dunkirk.

Sunday 11 to Thursday 15 June:

Nigeria and Sierra Leone. Meeting with President Obasanjo and other Nigerian Ministers. Trade promotion. Meeting with President Kabbah and visit to UK troops in Sierra Leone.

All travel has been undertaken in accordance with the Ministerial Code.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many times (a) he, (b) the Minister for the Environment, (c) the Minister for Local Government and the Regions and (d) the Minister for Housing and Planning have come to their office in the last month (i) all or part of the way by official car and (ii) by other means. [126796]

Ms Beverley Hughes [holding answer 19 June 2000]: Ministers travel by car and by public transport on a regular basis on official visits and on journeys to their offices.

Ministers are required under the Ministerial Code always to make efficient and cost-effective travel arrangements.

Housing

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the number of below tolerable standard houses in England and Scotland; and on what criteria this is based. [126544]

Mr. Mullin [holding answer 19 June 2000]: The tolerable standard is a measure of minimum standard housing in Scotland and is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland. It does not apply in England. Therefore there is no comparable information.

Environment Policy

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will issue his Policy Appraisal and the Environmental Policy Guidance, "Sustainable Development: What it is and What You Can Do", to newly-appointed Ministers and civil servants involved in policy development. [126851]

Ms Beverley Hughes: My Department's document, "Policy Appraisal and the Environment: Policy Guidance", has been made widely available to other Departments since it was published in 1998. It is also now included on the Cabinet Office's website as part of the "Policy Makers Checklist" and all Departments will be adding that checklist to their own intranet sites. A number, including mine, already have. Electronic availability of this guidance is more efficient than the distribution of large numbers of paper copies.

The guide "Sustainable Development: What it is and What You Can Do" is one of four guidance notes issued by the Green Ministers Committee. Again my Department has a stock of paper copies which other Departments can draw from while the guide is also available to them through our website or by addition to their intranets.

Green Ministers regularly consider the procedures by which sustainable development and the environment are integrated into policy-making and act as the focal point for those procedures among their ministerial colleagues in their own Departments.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what further plans he has concerning the development of the targets and policies contained in the sustainable development frameworks produced in each English region; and if he will make a statement. [126850]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The first regional sustainable development framework was launched in the West Midlands in February and the second is due to be launched in the North-West in July; both are promising documents. We expect all the regions to have completed their frameworks by the end of 2000. Frameworks are not Government documents nor are they statutory and they will set their own targets. For frameworks to have a real impact it is vital that their production, including setting priorities and establishing systems for monitoring progress, involves all stakeholders and has support across the region. That is why we have said they should be agreed by the regional chambers. Once published we expect regional decision-makers to "buy in" to the visions set out in frameworks and to act in ways that are consistent with them.

O'Byrne Lawsuit

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he plans to take following the decision in R v. Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and Regional Affairs, ex parte O'Byrne. [126801]

Ms Beverley Hughes: None.

St. Helens Council

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will set out the cash and percentage increase in the St Helens Metropolitan Council (a) revenue support grant, (b) HRA subsidy, (c) capital grants and (d) partnership grants for (i) 1997–98, (ii) 1998–99 and (iii) 1999–2000. [126638]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The following tables set out the cash and percentage changes in the amounts of grants made by my Department to St. Helens Metropolitan Council in each of the last three financial years.

Cash change on previous year

£ million

Grant	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000
Revenue support grant[1]	−3.757	6.602	3.274
Housing revenue account subsidy[2]	−1.497	−1.062	−0.313
Capital grants[3]	−1.326	1.052	0.612
Partnership grants[4]	2.450	−0.234	1.103

[1] Data for 1999–2000 takes into account amending report figure of £4,900, adjustment in respect of 1997–98 data.
[2] 1999–2000 Housing Revenue Subsidy is subject to change once final audited figure is received.
[3] Data do not include capital grants paid to Passenger Transport Executives (PTEs) in support of rail service in Merseyside.
[4] Partnership grants comprise Single Regeneration Budget grant paid to the authority as the accountable body for the partnership projects, which include Southern Corridor, Parr Partnership, Newton 21 and Count Me In, and are grants to the partnerships and not specifically to the authority.

Percentage change on previous year

Grant	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000
Revenue support grant	−5.41	10.05	4.53
Housing revenue account subsidy	−7.26	−5.55	−1.73
Capital grants	−50.86	82.12	26.23
Partnership grants	96.88	−4.70	23.25

UK/US Air Services

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent discussions he has had with US authorities regarding fifth freedoms and cabotage rights in US airspace for UK commercial carriers. [126302]

Mr. Mullin [holding answer 20 June 2000]: UK/US air services talks took place between 13–15 June in London. These talks, which covered a wide range of issues, including traffic rights, will continue in Washington on 5 July.

Rents

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will introduce measures to restrict rent officers raising annual rents above those applied for by landlords. [126670]

Mr. Mullin [holding answer 20 June 2000]: Rent officers are required to set fair rents based on market rents less any element resulting from scarcity in accordance with the Rent Act 1977 and case law. We do not intend to require rent officers to take into account the rent applied for by the landlord. However, the House of Lords has granted the Government provisional leave to appeal the decision of the Court of Appeal to quash the Rent Acts (Maximum Fair Rent) Order which we introduced in February 1999 to cap excessive increases in fair rents.

Incineration

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent epidemiological research the Government have undertaken near incinerators; and what research they intend to undertake in the future. [126333]

Mr. Mullin [holding answer 20 June 2000]: The Small Area Health Statistics Unit (SAHSU) has carried out two Government-funded studies on cancer incidence around the older generation of more polluting incinerators ("Elliott P et al (1996). Cancer incidence near municipal solid waste incinerators in Great Britain. British Journal of Cancer, volume 73, pp 702–710", and "Elliott P et al (2000). Cancer incidence near municipal solid waste incinerators in Great Britain. Part 2: Histopathological and Case-Notes Review of Primary Liver Cancer Cases. British Journal of Cancer, volume 82, pp 1103–6.") These found a small excess of primary liver cancer in people living near to incinerators between 1974 and 1987. The Government have sought advice on these studies from the Committee on the Carcinogenicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment (COC).

The COC has advised that it is not possible to conclude that this small increase in primary liver cancer is due to emissions of pollutants from incinerators, as it is not possible to rule out completely that it may be related to socio-economic factors. It has also advised that any potential risk of cancer due to living near municipal incinerators (for periods in excess of 10 years) was exceedingly low and probably not measurable by the most modern epidemiological techniques. The COC has recommended that, at the present time, there is no need for any further epidemiological investigations of this subject. The COC's statement can be found on the Department of Health's website at www.doh.gov.uk/munipwst.htm.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the Government's estimate is of the cost per year of continuous emissions monitoring at incinerators. [126805]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 20 June 2000]: It is not possible to estimate with precision the cost of continuous emissions monitoring for incinerators, as this will be site-specific, varying according to the nature and circumstances of the plant, and with the manufacturer and supplier of equipment used. The Environment Agency has estimated, however, that the installed cost for continuous monitoring equipment to meet the requirements of the forthcoming waste incineration Directive would be £50–60k per plant. Annual operating costs, including calibration, are estimated to be in the range £12–18k per plant.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment the Government have made of continuous emissions monitoring at incinerators in Belgium. [126806]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 20 June 2000]: The Government have made no assessment of continuous monitoring at incinerators in Belgium.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Ashford (Mr. Green), of 13 June 2000, Official Report, column 543W, on consultees, for what reason (a) Friends of the Earth and (b) Greenpeace were not consulted over the EU waste incineration Directive. [127000]

Mr. Hill: Friends of the Earth were included among those to whom copies of the draft Directive and copies of our consultant's cost-benefit analyses were sent for comment. Comments on the proposal were also invited from the National Society for Clean Air and Environmental Protection. Greenpeace were not known to have such an active interest in incineration and related issues (for example, Greenpeace did not respond to the consultation on our waste strategy consultation document A Way With Waste, nor to the earlier consultation on Less Waste More Value).

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the implications of the Government's waste strategy on the need for additional waste incinerators. [126812]

Mr. Mullin: The Government's waste strategy is principally directed at reducing waste and, where waste is produced, at increasing recycling and composting in order to maximise the value recovered from waste and to meet the requirements of the landfill Directive.

The need for additional incinerators will depend on the success of the strategy in achieving waste reduction, and increasing recycling and composting.

Modelling of possible mixes of waste management options is included in the Regulatory Impact Assessment in the Waste Strategy 2000 (Part Two). The mix of facilities will be a matter for local authorities.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has concerning the location of future incinerators. [126813]

Mr. Mullin: The location of facilities is a matter for local authorities. Suitable sites for new incineration plant will be determined by local planning authorities, in line with the decisions of regional planning bodies. Planning policy guidance on waste management in England is set out in "Planning Policy Guidance Note 10: Planning and waste management".

Jubilee Line

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 14 June 2000, Official Report, column 635W, for what reasons the section of the Jubilee line between Charing Cross and Green Park was not retained as a separate branch. [126999]

Mr. Hill: LUL consider that while it is sensible to retain the Green Park—Charing Cross spur for occasional special purposes (e.g. reversing empty trains), it would not be feasible to use it for passenger services. Up to 24 trains per hour serve the Jubilee Line. Dividing these to serve both the extension to Stratford and the spur to Charing Cross would result in an unacceptably sparse service for both routes, significantly reducing the attractiveness of operations on the extended line while providing only a limited service to Charing Cross. In addition, running services in this way would be more complex operationally and could have an adverse impact on reliability.

Diabetic Drivers

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the progress of the review of the driving licensing regime for insulin users. [126582]

Mr. Hill: The following progress has been made:

(i) The Honorary Medical Advisory Panel on Driving and Diabetes has been asked to reconsider their view on what constitutes "very exceptional cases". They have also been asked to compile relevant research data.

(ii) Inquiries have been made with other EU member states about arrangements for the licensing of insulin treated diabetics.

(iii) Preliminary inquiries have been made with the European Commission about the interpretation of Directive 91/439/EEC. Follow up arrangements are in hand.

(iv) Work has begun on developing the specification for two research projects to be initiated in this financial year. Tendering is expected to take place in early Autumn.

Radioactive Discharges

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to publish a draft of the UK strategy for radioactive discharges. [127623]

Mr. Meacher: A draft of the strategy is being published for consultation today and copies are being placed in the Library.

The strategy demonstrates how the UK is going to achieve substantial and progressive reductions in radioactive discharges in the period to 2020, in order to fulfil the obligation entered into at the 1998 meeting of the OSPAR Commission.

Comments on the draft are invited. After taking accounts of the comments we receive, the Government intend to publish a final version of the strategy towards the end of the year. The Government will shortly publish a draft of guidance they intend to issue to the Environment Agency on the setting of radioactive discharge authorisations. The intention is that the guidance, when it is formally issued with the final version of the strategy, will ensure that discharge authorisations are consistent with the strategy.

The Government are determined to continue the downward pressure of radioactive discharges. This draft strategy marks a further step towards meeting our OSPAR commitments. We owe it to the future generations to get it right.

WALES

Aerospace Industry

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the prospects for the aerospace industry in Wales. [126280]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I acknowledge the significant contribution that a strong aerospace industry has made to the economic life of Wales in recent years, particularly the British Aerospace Systems Airbus facility at Broughton. I hope the Government's announcement of £530 million for the A3XX project will consolidate and enhance this position.

Industrial Development

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the First Secretary concerning requirements in Deeside for land for industrial development; and if he will make a statement. [126520]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I have regular discussions with the First Secretary about a range of topics including the availability of land for industrial development.

Through its strategic sites programme, the Welsh Development Agency seeks to identify and bring forward sites for development across the whole of Wales. The Agency has reviewed the need for additional land in North Wales, jointly with the North Wales Economic Forum, and concluded that new strategic sites are required to allow for future industrial development.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

New Deal

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what statistics about the New Deal he collects on the participation of, and outcomes for, (a) ethnic minorities, (b) men, (c) women and (d) the disabled by (i) unit of delivery and (ii) parliamentary constituency. [126811]

Ms Jowell: Information is collected separately for men and women, people with disabilities and those from ethnic minority groups, on their participation through the New Deal and outcomes from the programme. However, some of the outcome information is limited by what participants are prepared to tell us.

Unit of Delivery tables are placed monthly in the House of Commons Library and give key information by the client's characteristics. Parliamentary constituency tables are placed in the House of Commons Library quarterly. These are intended as summary documents and information is not shown separately by the client's characteristics.

School Repairs

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list by local education authority, for the latest date for which figures are available, the total value of the estimates that schools have made of the sums needed for the repair of school buildings. [126847]

Jacqui Smith: The Department does not have these data. However, local education authorities are currently preparing Asset Management Plans covering all the maintained schools in their areas.

ICT Access

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps his Department is taking to increase access to ICT in deprived communities. [126114]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 20 June 2000]: We are taking forward a range of measures so that everyone can benefit from the advantages of new technologies. We are providing £252 million to fund the ICT Learning Centres initiative which will give people living in disadvantaged communities in England the opportunity to access the internet and ICT facilities. There will be around 700 Learning Centres which are targeted within the 2,000 most deprived local authority wards and rural areas with significant transport and deprivation problems. They will support disadvantaged client groups with low or no ICT skills.

We are also introducing a £10 million pilot project which will "wire-up" deprived communities around England. The project will provide a window into the future, assessing how home access to the internet and e-mail can transform lives in the most disadvantaged communities.

In addition, the Government are making £15 million available for a pilot scheme—"Computers Within Reach"—to enable those who cannot afford new computers to acquire reconditioned computers for use in the home for the purpose of improving their employment prospects, for lifelong learning, or for their children's homework.

The recently published report of Policy Action Team 15 looked specifically at issues relating to the role of ICT in community renewal. We will continue to work with partners and the private sector to address the issue of closing the digital divide.

Dyslexia

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people suffering from dyslexia are currently receiving (a) full-time and (b) part-time support worker time under the Access to Work Scheme. [126579]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 20 June 2000]: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. James Paice, dated 21 June 2000:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question regarding how many people with dyslexia are currently receiving (a) full time or (b) part time support worker time under the Access to Work programme. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

I am afraid we do not collect the specific information you have asked for. However, we do collect information on the total number of disabled people needing the help of a support worker, and the total amount spent in providing this support. In 1999–2000 Access to Work helped 4,133 disabled people needing support workers in their jobs at a cost of £5.6 million. Independent research conducted for the ES and published in 1998 indicated that around 3% of people receiving Access to Work help had a specific learning disability, a category which includes people with dyslexia.

I am sorry that I cannot be more helpful.

School Exclusions (Coventry)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many pupils were excluded from schools in Coventry in the years 1995 to 2000; and what alternatives to exclusion his Department is developing. [126113]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 20 June 2000]: The available information on exclusions in maintained schools in Coventry local education authority area is shown in the table.

Exclusions data were collected in the January 2000 Annual Schools Census for the 1998–99 academic year and were published in the Department's Statistical First Release SFR20/2000 "Permanent Exclusions from Schools and Exclusion Appeals, England 1998–99 (provisional)" on 10 May 2000.

We are providing more than £500 million over three years, backed up by new guidance on 'Social Inclusion: Pupil Support', to help tackle behaviour problems in classrooms. This includes increasing the number of on-site Learning Support Units to more than 1,000 within two years to help schools better manage disruptive pupils. The 'Social Inclusion: Pupil Support' (Circular 10–99) also recommended multi-agency Pastoral Support Programmes (PSPs) for pupils at serious risk of permanent exclusion. The Department has provided funding for PSPs.

We announced at the NASUWT Conference (27 April) that there would be a new £2 million innovation fund with the voluntary sector and employers to provide innovative programmes for excluded pupils and those at risk of exclusion. In addition, there would be a new £9 million pupil allowance scheme for secondary schools in Excellence in Cities areas which accept difficult pupils outside the normal admissions round.

Postgraduate Teacher Training

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many applications were received for courses of postgraduate initial teacher training commencing in September; and how many had been received at the same stage last year, broken down into those applying for secondary teaching in (a) maths, (b) foreign languages, (c) science and (d) technology. [126317]

Ms Estelle Morris: Latest available figures for applications for postgraduate initial teacher training courses in England and Wales for secondary teaching in maths, modern foreign languages, science and technology, together with comparative figures for the previous year are given in the table.

	3 June 2000	5 June 1999
Mathematics	950	1,085
Science	2,167	2,324
Modern Languages	1,757	1,673
Technology	871	928

The figures are for applications as entered on the GTTR computer system.

Graduate Teacher Training Register (GTTR)

The Government announced on 30 March that training salaries would be introduced for postgraduate trainees starting initial teacher training courses from September 2000. Since that date, latest available figures show 1,119 (32 per cent.) more applications have been input onto the Graduate Teacher Training Registry computer system than for the equivalent period last year.

The number of trainees recruited onto mathematics postgraduate initial teacher training courses declined between 1994–95 and 1998–99. There was a similar decline in the number of trainees recruited onto science postgraduate initial teacher training courses between 1996–97 and 1998–99. Last year, with the introduction of "golden hellos", recruitment to mathematics and science was up on the previous year.

In recognition of the fierce competition for good graduates in mathematics, science, modern foreign languages, information technology and design and technology, as well as £6,000 training salaries, new style "golden hello" incentives of £4,000 were announced for postgraduate trainees in these subjects who pass their induction year and go on to take up a relevant teaching post. Since the announcement, available figures for all these subjects together show an increase of 379 or 22 per cent.

Class Sizes (East Sussex)

Mr. Caplin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what the average primary school class size in East Sussex was for each year since 1979. [126540]

Ms Estelle Morris: The requested information is shown in the table.

In East Sussex, the number of pupils in key stage 1 classes of 31 or more pupils taught by one teacher was 1,240 compared with 6,439 a year earlier, which represented an 80 per cent. reduction in the number of such pupils. The Government are well on target to deliver their pledge to limit the size of infant classes to 30 pupils. During the same time period, the average size of classes in maintained primary schools for the unitary authorities of East Sussex and Brighton also fell. This was the first year for some time that average primary class sizes in either the new or old authorities of East Sussex had fallen, after class sizes had shown a steady increase since 1987.

East Sussex local education authority area has been allocated £4 million of funding so far to support their efforts in reducing infant class sizes. This funding comprises some £1.1 million of capital funding and £2.8 million of revenue funding.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when the special educational needs and disability in education Bill will be introduced in Parliament. [127380]

Mr. Blunkett: We are totally committed to taking forward the education recommendations of the Disability Rights Task Force (DRTF) and will legislate when parliamentary time allows, alongside our proposals to change the special educational needs framework. Our commitment to legislate on SEN was made in the Queen' Speech and remains in place. However, it has now become clear that it will not be possible to introduce a Bill this parliamentary Session.

The DRTF recommendations—crucial to our plans—were not available until December and required full consultation. Our consultation exercise on how to take forward the education recommendations of the report has revealed strong support for the broad thrust of our proposals, but there are some detailed issues which have required further consultation.

In view of the inevitable delay, and without the option of carryover, we have decided to publish a draft Bill in this parliamentary Session, giving the opportunity for comment and feedback before introduction of the Bill.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Incomes

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the average income in (a) cash, (b) real terms and (c) as a percentage of average earnings in (i) 1979, (ii) 1984, (iii) 1989, (iv) 1994 and (v) each year from 1994 to 2000 for (A) the UK and (B) Scotland of (1) pensioners, (2) pensioners aged over 75 years, (3) students, (4) single parents, (5) the bottom decile, (6) the top decile and (7) the disabled; and if he will make a statement. [126770]

Mr. Bayley: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Information on average (mean and median) income of pensioner couples, single pensioners and single parents, and median incomes of the top and bottom deciles are published in the annual publication Households Below Average Income. The latest published edition, which relates to 1997–98, also contained analyses showing the position in the income distribution of pensioners by age, and students. Copies of this volume are in the Library.

Benefit Recipients

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in (a) Yeovil constituency and (b) South Somerset have been in receipt of (i) Income

Support, (ii) Disability Living Allowance, (iii) Incapacity Benefit, (iv) Unemployment Benefit, and (v) Housing Benefit in each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [126580]

Mr. Bayley: The administration of benefits is a matter for Alexis Cleveland, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. She will write to the right hon. Member.

Letter from Alexis Cleveland to Mr. Paddy Ashdown, dated 20 June 2000:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to respond to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many people in (a) Yeovil constituency and (b) South Somerset have been in receipt of (i) income support, (ii) disability living allowance, (iii) incapacity benefit, (iv) unemployment benefit, and (v) housing benefit in each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

The data is not available in the requested format, however the information that is available is supplied in the attached tables.

I hope this is helpful.

Pension Schemes

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people lost pension entitlements because their company pension schemes were underfunded and were wound up in each year since 1990. [126412]

Mr. Rooker: The Pension Schemes Registry indicates that since April 1997, the first date at which reliable information is available, a total of about 22,500 occupational pension schemes have been recorded as having wound up. However, no information is available as to how many of these schemes are salary-related schemes that were underfunded on wind-up.

Home Responsibility Protection

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if time spent as a foster parent qualifies for state retirement pension under the rules of home responsibility protection. [126913]

Mr. Rooker: Foster parents do not receive Child Benefit in respect of foster children who are deemed to be in the care of the local authority. Consequently, foster parents are not currently eligible for Home Responsibilities Protection in respect of their foster caring role.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on how many occasions he deposited papers in the Library in response to parliamentary questions tabled to his Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000. [127101]

Mr. Rooker: We have answered 1,815 parliamentary questions between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000. Papers were deposited in the Library in response to 40 parliamentary questions.

TREASURY

Council Tax Exemptions

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will issue guidelines to universities and local authorities on the issuing of exemption certificates for council tax eligibility for intercalating students; and if he will make a statement. [124696]

Ms Beverley Hughes [holding answer 15 June 2000]: I have been asked to reply.

Those undertaking a period of intercalation, who remain enrolled at the educational establishment, may continue to qualify as students for council tax purposes. Guidance was issued to this effect to all local authorities on 29 April 1996. We have no evidence to suggest there is a need to issue further guidance at this time. However, we continue to keep the operation of council tax under review and will issue further guidance should the need arise.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on how many occasions he deposited papers in the Library in response to parliamentary questions tabled to his Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000. [127104]

Mr. Timms: The information is not held in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, in replying to parliamentary questions Treasury Ministers often place documents in the Library of the House for the information of Members.

Vocational Training

Mr. Willis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to specify the vocational training courses that will qualify for tax relief. [126809]

Mr. Timms: I assume the hon. Member is referring to the new Individual Learning Account framework being introduced shortly by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment and in Scotland by the Scottish Ministers. Clause 57 of the Finance Bill provides that employees will not be taxable on any financial contribution which their employers may make towards the cost of an eligible learning course for which a Government grant may be payable. The range of training which can qualify will be a matter for the Department for Education and Employment and devolved administrations, but I can confirm that it will be a very wide range.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the saving to the Exchequer that will result from the removal of tax relief for vocational training costs from students. [126808]

Mr. Timms: As the Chancellor made clear in his 1999 Budget statement, the savings from the removal of Vocational Training Relief (VTR), as set out in Table A2.1 of the FSBR 2000—will help pay for the Government grants and discounts that can be claimed under the coming Individual Learning Account scheme. The Government are making available £150 million in grants and discounts up to April 2002. In addition we are introducing in the Finance Bill a tax exemption for employees on employer contributions towards these learning accounts; the estimated Exchequer cost of this exemption is £10 million in a full year.

Working Families Tax Credit

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps the Government are taking to publicise the working families tax credit in Northern Ireland. [125496]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Elmet (Mr. Burgon) on 9 February 2000, Official Report, column 215W.

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many lone parents are benefiting from the working families tax credit. [126866]

Dawn Primarolo: The number of families in receipt of working families tax credit at the end of April 2000 is provisionally estimated at 1,053,000. Of these, it is estimated that 542,000 were headed by lone parents.

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much is spent annually on the working families tax credit; and how much would be spent if the national minimum wage were raised to five pounds per hour. [125111]

Dawn Primarolo: Table C12 in the March 2000 Financial Statement and Budget Report shows estimated and projected expenditure on the working families tax credit (WFTC) and the disabled person's tax credit (DPTC).

It is not possible to estimate accurately the potential impact of raising the minimum wage on the labour market. No reliable estimate of its effect on WFTC expenditure can therefore be provided.

Single Market

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what tax measures are needed to complete the EU single market. [126404]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government assess all EU tax proposals on their merits, including whether they assist the effective functioning of the single market.

Customs and Excise (Liverpool)

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes are proposed in the location and operation of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in Liverpool. [126437]

Dawn Primarolo: It is for the Chairman and the Management Committee of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise to determine where best to place Customs operations in order to discharge its various responsibilities. I understand that there are no major changes currently planned in the location of Customs and Excise in Liverpool, but changing demands and work patterns mean that the management would be failing in its responsibilities if it did not keep the position constantly under review.

Sea Tax Rebates

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on sea tax rebates. [126498]

Dawn Primarolo: I assume that the right hon. Member is referring to the Tonnage Tax. The Government's proposals on tonnage tax are set out in schedule 22 of this year's Finance Bill.

Pesticides Tax

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what (a) representations the Treasury has received and (b) meetings he has held on the proposed pesticides tax with (i) the British Agrochemicals Association, (ii) UKASTA, (iii) NOAH, (iv) the National Farmers' Union, (v) the Country Landowners' Association and (vi) agrochemical companies, giving the name of each company, including the dates and duration of the meetings. [126900]

Mr. Timms: Ministers and officials have had numerous meetings with representatives of the agrochemicals industry, agriculture and environmental non-Government organisations, and received a number of representations on a possible pesticides tax and on a voluntary package of measures to reduce the environmental impact of pesticides use.

The Government are currently consulting on a formal set of voluntary proposals which have been published by the British Agrochemicals Association. The Government welcome the views of all interested parties on these proposals and their effectiveness in tackling the environmental impacts of pesticide use.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Wormwood Scrubs Prison

Mr. Darvill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons will publish his report into his follow-up inspection of Her Majesty's Prison Wormwood Scrubs of 7 to 17 February. [127381]

Mr. Straw: Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons' report of his unannounced inspection is being published today. Copies have been made available in the Library and the Vote Office.

I made a statement to the House on 28 June 1999, Official Report, columns 21–33, on the report of an unannounced full inspection of Wormwood Scrubs prison that had taken place in March 1999. That report made deeply disturbing reading. Sir David's inspection had taken place against the background of criminal investigations into allegations that a number of members of staff at Wormwood Scrubs had assaulted prisoners. Sir David and his team of inspectors had found the overall treatment of prisoners was profoundly unsatisfactory.

In my statement last year, I said that I had made it absolutely clear to the Director General of the Prison Service that change must be delivered at Wormwood Scrubs. I expected a robust action plan to be put in place quickly, and I expected the majority of Sir David's recommendations to be accepted and implemented. I reported that I had asked Sir David Ramsbotham to carry out a further inspection in six months' time and that I would report the result to the House.

The Chief Inspector returned to Wormwood Scrubs between 7 and 17 February this year, and his report of that inspection is published today. He found Wormwood Scrubs much improved from his previous visit. Change had taken place, and life for prisoners had improved. Prisoners felt safer, and their relationships with staff were better. Health care was radically improved, education had been expanded and, together with employment, could attract most prisoners into purposeful activity.

The extent of the changes required, including substantial cultural change, inevitably takes time. Nevertheless, the chief inspector found that a promising start had been made and real improvements had already been delivered. The report makes 99 recommendations for further improvement, but encouragingly identifies 12 examples of good practice.

I should like to pay tribute to all those who have contributed to this change. Senior managers at Prison Service headquarters have given the establishment both leadership and support. The Governor and his management team have tackled the problems at Wormwood Scrubs with determination and commitment, and their legitimate authority has been restored. It also gives me great pleasure to commend the staff of Wormwood Scrubs for what has been achieved. This time last year, there were serious concerns as to whether or not the Prison Officers' Association would co-operate fully with what needed to be done. Sir David notes the determination of the vast majority of staff in the prison to see Wormwood Scrubs restored to a place of excellence, known for the high quality of the treatment of and conditions for its prisoners.

Staff at Wormwood Scrubs still face a difficult time. A number of staff are still suspended from duty in connection with the investigations into the allegations of assault. I understand that the first criminal trials are likely to start in the next few weeks, and this will bring further unwelcome attention on everyone connected with the establishment. Nevertheless, today's report shows how much has already been achieved in the face of these sorts of difficulties, and with Sir David Ramsbotham I am optimistic that the programme of improvement will be continued and completed at Wormwood Scrubs. I am still keeping the option of market-testing open, but believe that this report shows the kind of rapid progress I had hoped for.

Correspondence

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the hon. Member for Greenock and Inverclyde will receive a substantive answer to his letter of 17 May concerning the visit of Mr. Mike Tyson. [126306]

Mr. Straw: The Minister of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche) wrote on 16 June in response to my hon. Friend's letter.

Asylum Seekers

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department to what extent Her Majesty's Government's policy on removals to Zimbabwe of failed asylum seekers has changed in response to the civil unrest and political repression in that country. [125125]

Mrs. Roche: We see no reason at present to change our arrangements for the removal of failed asylum seekers to Zimbabwe. No one has been or will be removed to Zimbabwe unless we are satisfied that they can return without risk. Each case is considered on its individual merits and circumstances. Developments in Zimbabwe are being carefully monitored.

Prison Service Expenditure

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the change was in planned expenditure on (a) the Prison Service, (b) policing and (c) probation (i) in total and (ii) in real terms in each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [126556]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 19 June 2000]: The following tables set out the total expenditure (revenue and capital) on the prison service, policing and probation for the 10 financial years 1991–92 to 2000–01. The figures for the financial years 1991–92 to 1998–99 represent expenditure outturn. The figures for 1999–2000 are estimated outturn while the figures for 2000–01 reflect expenditure plans. The tables also show the change in expenditure from one financial year to the next in both cash and real terms.

Prison Service

Financial year	Total net expenditure (£ million)	Percentage change over previous financial year: Cash terms	Real terms
1991–92	1,462	—	—
1992–93	1,470	0.56	−2.67
1993–94	1,509	2.62	0.00
1994–95	1,598	5.91	4.41
1995–96	1,667	4.32	1.39
1996–97[1]	1,609	−3.50	−6.49
1997–98	1,734	8.10	4.85
1998–99	1,812	4.18	1.17
1999–2000 (estimated)	1,846	1.88	−0.61
2000–01 (plans)[2]	1,780	−3.58	−5.72

[1] Expenditure on capital reduced following completion of major capital works programmes in 1995–96

[2] Reduction in planned expenditure reflects transfer of provision of £118.2 million (from the Prison Service to the Youth Justice Board) in respect of the secure juvenile estate

Police

Financial year	Total net expenditure[1] (£ million)	Percentage change over previous financial year: Cash terms	Real terms
1991–92	5,405	—	—
1992–93	5,897	9.10	5.61
1993–94	6,225	5.56	2.82
1994–95	6,490	4.26	2.79
1995–96	6,735	3.78	0.87
1996–97[1]	6,986	3.73	0.49
1997–98	7,243	3.68	0.86
1998–99	7,450	2.86	−0.41
1999–2000 (estimated)	7,859	5.49	2.92
2000–01 (plans)[2]	8,100	3.07	0.80

[1] Total expenditure includes revenue and capital expenditure by police authorities and expenditure on policing incurred directly by the Home Office

[2] Excludes Capital Modernisation Fund moneys announced in the Budget as this is in respect of a range of projects and the funding can and will be spread over an number of years. The detailed profile of this expenditure is still being established

Probation

Financial year	Total net expenditure[1] (£ million)	Percentage change over previous financial year: Cash terms	Real terms
1991–92	335	—	—
1992–93	365	9.00	5.46
1993–94	393	7.67	4.89
1994–95	406	3.31	1.85

1997–98	481	2.78	−0.01
1998–99	475	−1.25	−4.39
1999–2000 (estimated)	491	3.37	0.85
2000–01 (plans)	524	6.68	4.37

[1] Total expenditure figures do not include capital expenditure on probation/bail hostels nor direct Home Office central expenditure

WWII Unexploded Bombs

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will establish a national register of unexploded bombs from the Second World War, available for public inspection; and if he will make a statement. [126952]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: During the Second World War local authorities were responsible for maintaining records of the locations of unexploded ordnance. Although some local authorities destroyed the details they held, some information is still available through the Public Record Office.

In 1997 the Home Office collated details of information from a variety of sources including emergency services, local authorities and the military. It had been intended to publish the information, but this was not pursued when it became evident that there were unexplained contradictions in the data and it could not be relied upon as either accurate or comprehensive. Because of this it would not be sensible to establish a national register as proposed.

We do, however, search the information if asked by individuals, local authorities or building contractors.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Security Situation

8. Mr. Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Belfast, North. [125483]

Mr. Ingram: During the period 1 January to 13 June this year one death, 36 shootings and two bombings were recorded by the Royal Ulster Constabulary's D Division which takes in North Belfast and includes Antrim and Carrickfergus. There were 54 casualties (31 shootings and 23 assaults) as a result of paramilitary style attacks.

15. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent progress has been made on creating a more normal security environment. [125490]

Mr. Ingram: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Hemel Hempstead (Mr. McWalter), Official Report, column 329.

Decommissioning

9. Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent representations he has received on decommissioning in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [125484]

Mr. Ingram: The Government continue to meet representatives of all the political parties to discuss all aspects of the Good Friday Agreement. The Decommissioning Commission continues its discussions with representatives of the various groups. All sides must honour all the commitments they have made.

10. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of when the decommissioning section of the Belfast agreement will be implemented. [125485]

Mr. Ingram: It is more important to get the process under way than to set a deadline for its end. We now have a firm commitment from the IRA to put arms beyond use, and a process of confidence-building measures with independent verification.

This is only the start. But it is better to start than to worry so much about when it will finish, lest you never start.

16. Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made towards the surrender and destruction of terrorist weapons in Northern Ireland. [125491]

24. Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on progress towards decommissioning of terrorist weapons. [125501]

Mr. Ingram: Now for the first time, the IRA have put in place a commitment to put their arms completely and verifiably beyond use, and have volunteered a confidence-building measure, to demonstrate that their arms remain silent and secure. We expect Mr. Ramaphosa and Mr. Ahtisaari to begin their work soon.

22. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many illegally held weapons have been inspected. [125498]

Mr. Ingram: The inspection of illegally-held weaponry is a matter for the independent inspectors and IICD.

Police Ombudsman

11. Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met the police ombudsman to discuss complaints. [125486]

Mr. Ingram: The ombudsman has not met directly with the Secretary of State to discuss complaints.

Paramilitary Violence

12. Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent discussions he has had with the IRA and Sinn Fein concerning the use of violence against Northern Ireland citizens. [125487]

Mr. Ingram: Ministers meet regularly with representatives of all the political parties in Northern Ireland where a range of issues including paramilitary assaults are discussed. We have consistently called upon those with influence over the paramilitary groups to call a complete cessation to these barbaric acts.

13. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the extent of (a) punishment beatings and (b) other terrorist activities by Republican paramilitaries since 22 May. [125488]

Mr. Ingram: From 22 May to 11 June this year there were two deaths, two bombings and 12 shooting incidents. In addition there were seven casualties as a result of paramilitary style attacks (three by Loyalists and four by Republicans).

23. Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many punishment beatings have taken place in the last month. [125500]

Mr. Ingram: During the month of May the number of casualties as a result of paramilitary style attacks were 14 shootings (nine by Loyalists and five by Republicans) and 14 assaults (six by Loyalists and eight by Republicans).

Job Creation

14. Mr. Savidge: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many jobs have been created in the last six months in Northern Ireland. [125489]

25. Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many jobs have been created in the last six months in Northern Ireland. [125502]

Mr. Mandelson: Responsibility for this subject has been devolved to the Northern Ireland Assembly and is therefore no longer a matter for the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Civic Forum

17. Mr. Pound: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when a civic forum is to be established in Northern Ireland. [125492]

Mr. Mandelson: Responsibility for this subject has been devolved to the Northern Ireland Assembly and is therefore no longer a matter for the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Military Structures and Installations

18. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent representations he has received concerning the dismantling of military and related structures and installations. [125493]

Mr. Ingram: The Government have received one recent written representation concerning the dismantling of military structures, which are the operational responsibility of the Chief Constable. All decisions with regard to normalisation of security are taken by the Chief Constable in the light of the current threat level.

Young Offenders

19. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the range of schemes available to deal with young offenders. [125494]

Mr. Ingram: The Criminal Justice Children (Northern Ireland) Order 1998 was introduced in January 1999 and brought in a new juvenile justice centre order of between six months and two years, half of which is spent in custody and half under close supervision in the community. The community element of the sentence is delivered by the Probation Board for Northern Ireland.

A range of programmes for young people, both in custody and in the community have been developed. Programmes such as cognitive behaviour training to tackle offending and the associated causes and problems such as drugs and alcohol misuse, car crime, aggressive behaviour and sex offending, have been developed on a multi-agency basis.

Peace Process

20. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the peace process. [125495]

Mr. Mandelson: The last few weeks have seen significant progress in the peace progress. On 27 May I signed an order restoring devolution to Northern Ireland with effect from midnight on 29 May. Northern Ireland now has a second opportunity for locally accountable government to take responsibility for building stability and prosperity for all the people of Northern Ireland.

Election Fraud and Malpractice

21. Mr. Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is taking, with what time scale, to prevent fraud and malpractice in elections in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [125497]

Mr. George Howarth: The Government have already introduced legislation to extend the time available to the Chief Electoral Officer to scrutinise absent vote applications, one of the main areas where it is thought that abuse of the system takes place. The provisions of the Representation of the People Act 2000 which makes provision for rolling registration will also be extended to Northern Ireland and hence will make the electoral register more accurate. The staffing and other resources of the Chief Electoral Officer are also kept under constant review to ensure they meet changing needs and circumstances. In addition, the Government intend to bring forward other measures which will require legislation by Bill. As already confirmed elsewhere, we hope to find parliamentary time for this before the General Election but the timing will of course depend on the timing of that election.

Police Service

26. Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the future of the police service in Northern Ireland. [125503]

Mr. Ingram: The Police (Northern Ireland) Bill lays the foundations for a new beginning for policing in Northern Ireland including a widely acceptable, effective and representative police service.

British-Irish Council

27. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the progress being made on the British-Irish Council. [125504]

Mr. George Howarth: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friends the Members for Glasgow, Maryhill (Mrs. Fyfe) and for Leeds, Central (Mr. Benn), Official Report, column 327.

Criminal Justice

28. Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the progress that has been made with the consultation phase of the review of the criminal justice system. [125505]

Mr. Ingram: We have received 60 written responses to the report of the review of the Criminal Justice System in Northern Ireland from members of the public. A number of seminars have been organised by the Government Department to facilitate consultation and we are aware that a number of other organisations plan to hold conferences to consider the report's recommendations before the consultation period ends on 29 September 2000.

Downpatrick Police Station

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made on the removal of the security fortifications at the Police Station in Downpatrick; and if he will make a statement. [125499]

Mr. Ingram: The security levels which exist at Downpatrick Royal Ulster Constabulary station are currently under review and any action recommended will be taken after this review is completed.

CABINET OFFICE

Pesticides Tax

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what (a) representations her office has received and (b) meetings she has held on the topic of the proposed pesticides tax with (i) the British Agrochemicals Association, (ii) UKASTA, (iii) NOAH, (iv) the National Farmers' Union, (v) the Country Landowners' Association and (vi) agrochemical companies, giving the name of each company, including the dates and duration of the meetings. [126899]

Mr. Timms: I have been asked to reply.

Ministers and officials have had numerous meetings with representatives of the agrochemicals industry, agriculture and environmental non-governmental organisations, and received a number of representations on a possible pesticides tax and on a voluntary package of measures to reduce the environmental impact of pesticides use.

The Government are currently consulting on a formal set of voluntary proposals which have been published by the British Agrochemicals Association. The Government welcome the views of all interested parties on these proposals and their effectiveness in tackling the environmental impacts of pesticide use.

HEALTH

Mead Webber Plant

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reason a Regulation 10 (Prohibition) Notice was served ordering Mead Webber immediately to cease slaughter operations. [122065]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 15 May 2000]: I am advised by the Food Standards Agency that the Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1995 (as amended) oblige the Meat Hygiene Service (MHS) to appoint one or more official veterinary surgeons (OVSs) at every licensed fresh meat slaughterhouse in Great Britain to be responsible for the ante-mortem and post-mortem inspection and other health inspection duties.

Following an alleged assault on an OVS by a member of Mead Webber plant management and ejection of the OVS from the premises on 21 April 2000, a notice was served on the plant occupier under regulation 10 of the regulations at 7.44pm the same day. Regulation 10(1)(b) of the regulations empowers the OVS to serve a notice on the occupier when it appears to the OVS that adequate health inspection in accordance with the regulations is being hampered. The notice was served to prevent operation of the plant in the absence of the OVS until such time as unobstructed access to the plant by the OVS was permitted by the occupier.

Council Grants

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the specific grants made by his Department, and the amounts allocated through each grant to (a) Westminster and (b) Kensington and Chelsea boroughs for each year since 1997–98. [125422]

Mr. Hutton: The table lists the specific and special grants available to councils since 1997–98 and the amount of grant paid to the London Borough of Westminster.

Meat Inspection

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which EU countries charge for meat inspection on a headage basis. [R] [126197]

Ms Stuart: According to information collected by British Embassies in other member states at the end of 1998, and by the Meat and Livestock Commission in May 1999, it is understood that the following countries charge for meat inspections either partly or wholly on a headage basis:

Austria
Belgium
Denmark
France
Germany
Italy
Luxembourg Portugal
Republic or Ireland Spain
Sweden.

Patient Rights

Mr. Patrick Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what work his Department is undertaking to examine the role of patient advocates, with particular regard to supporting complainants through the NHS complaints procedure; and what plans he has to consult community health councils about their role in assisting complainants; [126244]

(2) when he will respond to the report, "A New Life for Health", prepared by the Commission on Representing the Public Interest in the Health Service; [126245]

(3) what plans he has to consult on a new NHS Charter. [126246]

Ms Stuart: The Patient Care (Empowerment) Modernisation Action Team is considering the future roles for patient advocates and community health councils in assisting complainants, together with the format and content of a new National Health Service Charter.

Following publication of the national plan in July, the Department will begin work on implementing the recommendations of the modernisation action teams.

NHS Patients

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 13 June 2000, Official Report, column 586W, on NHS patients, if he will list by clinical specialism the number of patients treated and the amounts spent by the NHS on health care in the independent sector in each of the last three years. [126994]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 20 June 2000]: A breakdown by clinical specialty is not collected centrally. A breakdown of expenditure and activity by type has been placed in the Library in response to the hon. Member's question of 13 June 2000, Official Report, column 586W.

Dentists (Reciprocal Arrangements)

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what reciprocal arrangements exist to enable dentists trained in the UK to practise in India and dentists trained in India to practise in the UK. [126912]

Mr. Hutton: There are no reciprocal arrangements. Dentists registered in the United Kingdom who wish to practise in India have to satisfy the statutory authority that their qualifications, training and experience meet its requirements. Like other dentists from abroad, Indian dentists wishing to practise here may apply to the General Dental Council (GDC) to take its statutory examination. Those dentists who wish to undertake postgraduate training in the United Kingdom in a hospital post may apply to the GDC for temporary registration on the basis of evidence of acceptance for employment in that post. Temporary registration is granted for periods not exceeding 12 months up to an aggregate of four years.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many written parliamentary questions tabled to his Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000 have not received substantive answers on the grounds of (a) commercial and (b) other confidentiality. [127100]

Ms Stuart: There have been two Parliamentary Questions that have not been fully answered on the grounds of commercial confidentiality within the dates specified.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will make a substantive reply to the question from the hon. Member for Leyton and Wanstead tabled on 18 April relating to Zimbabwe (ref 120086). [125671]

Mr. Hain: The question was answered by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for International Development on 19 June 2000, Official Report, columns 20–21W.

International Investment Disputes

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is the policy of Her Majesty's Government to assist British companies to enforce judgments made against other Governments by the International Centre for the Settlement of Investment Disputes. [125037]

Mr. Hain [holding answer 12 June 2000]: We cannot comment on cases which are the subject of legal proceedings at the International Centre for the Settlement of Investment Disputes (ICSID). Her Majesty's Government expects any State with whom we have a Investment Promotion and Protection Agreement to take seriously its treaty obligations and, where such a State is involved in a dispute covered by that treaty, to co-operate fully with any international arbitration procedures and rulings.

Mitrovica

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what assessment he has made of the progress made in re-establishing a joint city administration in Mitrovica; [126644]

(2) what representations he has made to UNMIK regarding (a) establishment of local power-sharing arrangements for the Serbs in Mitrovica; and (b) re-establishing blocked trade ties between the southern and the northern parts of Mitrovica; [126645]

(3) what recent representations he has received from Mitrovica's regional administrator regarding additional human, financial and security resources for this town; [126643]

(4) what estimate he made of progress made by the Joint Interim Administrative Council for Mitrovica. [126646]

Mr. Vaz [holding answer 19 June 2000]: Measures to improve public order and to counter extremist activities in Mitrovica have continued to be a key focus of both UNMIK and KFOR. Working with the Joint Interim Administration Council (JIAC) they have implemented a strategy to stabilise the situation and to build confidence between the communities. UNMIK police and KFOR are taking steps to enhance joint security operations. The zone of confidence in central Mitrovica has been implemented.

Additional KFOR and UNMIK police and personnel have been deployed. Village employment and rehabilitation projects, funded by the EU, are being implemented around Mitrovica. New protected train and bus services have started allowing Serbs to commute to Mitrovica.

Bosnia-Herzegovina

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of the funds budgeted by the EU for 1999 has been spent on reconstruction in Bosnia-Herzegovina. [126642]

Mr. Vaz [holding answer 19 June 2000]: In 1999, the EU allocated 93.17 million euros to Bosnia and Herzegovina through its Obnova Programme, which is the main mechanism for reconstruction assistance in the Western Balkans. In 1999 the total Obnova budget was 284.39 million euros and Bosnia and Herzegovina received 32.8 per cent. of the total. The Obnova Programme is funded through the Community Budget.

Kosovo

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the progress made in establishing the criminal justice system in Kosovo. [126603]

Mr. Vaz [holding answer 19 June 2000]: Establishment of an impartial and effective judicial and penal system is a priority for the UN Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK). 400 judges, prosecutors and lay judges have been appointed and the capacity of the court system has been increased. However, as the UN Secretary-General's latest report noted, ethnic bias and the risk of intimidation continue to hamper the administration of justice. In order to strengthen the effectiveness and integrity of the justice system, the UN is recruiting international judges and prosecutors to work with their local counterparts, in particular to try war and ethnically related crimes. The UK has provided UNMIK with over 40 candidates for international prosecutors and UNMIK staff interviewed candidates in London last week. We also hope soon to be able to provide candidates for international judges and judicial support staff.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the progress made in establishing provisional institutions for democratic self-Government in Kosovo. [126604]

Mr. Vaz [holding answer 19 June 2000]: UNSCR 1244, which established the international presences in Kosovo, gave the international civil presence responsibility for development of provisional institutions for democratic and autonomous self-government. The UN Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK) is preparing a draft Regulation on establishment of municipal authorities in Kosovo, for discussion in the Joint Interim Administrative Structures (JIAS). UNMIK intends to hold elections for these authorities later this year.

The Contact Group is currently developing guidance for UNMIK on the possible structure and content of Kosovo-wide institutions for provisional self-government, taking into account the Rambouillet Accords. UNMIK's proposals for such institutions would also be for discussion in the JIAS. This is unlikely to start in earnest until after the municipal elections.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the US Government regarding the form that the provisional self-Government in Kosovo will take and its relationship to UNMIK and KFOR. [126605]

Mr. Vaz [holding answer 19 June 2000]: The US Government is working closely with the UK and our partners in the Contact Group in developing guidance for the UN Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK) on the possible form and content of provisional institutions for self-government in Kosovo. As required by UNSCR 1244, the development of these institutions will take account of the Rambouillet Accords, of which US officials were the principal architects. Under any proposals for provisional institutions UNMIK and KFOR would retain their overall responsibilities as set out in UNSCR 1244.

Generation Europe

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much funding the Generation Europe organisation has received from the (a) British Government and (b) European Union. [126596]

Mr. Vaz [holding answer 19 June 2000]: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office gave Generation Europe a one-time support of £10,000 to help fund the publication in 1999 of the Generation Europe student diary, 1999–2000. Generation Europe also received funding from the Community budget in 1999–2000 totalling 217,000 euro (£137,000).

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for how long the Generation Europe organisation has received funding from his Department. [126595]

Mr. Vaz [holding answer 19 June 2000]: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has made only one allocation of funds to Generation Europe. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office gave Generation Europe a one-time support of £10,000 to help fund the publication in 1999 of the Generation Europe student diary, 1999–2000.

Small Businesses (EU Legislation)

Mr. Rammell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the examples he provided, in response to the request from the right hon. Member for Horsham (Mr. Maude) on 15 June 2000, Official Report, column 1208, of improvements in legislation made to assist small businesses as a result of the Lisbon Special European Council. [127199]

Mr. Vaz: The right hon. Member for Horsham challenged me at 6.50pm on 15 June, to identify three improvements that the Lisbon Special European Council had introduced for business. I responded immediately that I would supply a list of 25 examples before 10 o'clock. I provided a list of no fewer than 35 examples, as follows, and it was faxed to the right hon. Member's office by 9.45 pm.

As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister told the House of Commons in his statement on 27 March 2000, Official Report, columns 21–23, Lisbon marked a sea change in European economic thinking. It pointed Europe in a new direction, towards a new approach based on enterprise, innovation and competition. A work programme is now in hand across the entire breadth of EU economic and social policy, to deliver the improvements that Lisbon called for. The list sets out examples of how much is being done, and the Feira European Council will mark a further step in the delivery of this agenda.

Economic Benefits for Enterprise from Lisbon

1. Charter for small firms already agreed, to be confirmed at Feira.
2. Clear set of principles to ensure small enterprise promoted as main driver for innovation, employment and social integration.
3. Concrete follow-up action e.g. national bankruptcy laws to be assessed, new regulations screened to assess impact on small business.
4. Progress to be monitored annually.
5. Work on structural indicators in hand to promote economic reform in order to benefit enterprise and SMEs, to be endorsed at Nice.
6. Agreement on improvements to the Broad Economic Policy Guidelines, in line with the Lisbon conclusions, to be endorsed at Feira.
7. Adoption of EU legal framework for electronic commerce reached in April 2000.
8. E-Europe action plan agreed, to be endorsed at Feira.
9. Focus on cheaper internet access, accelerating e-commerce and bolstering ICT skills.
10. Generalised electronic access to main basic public services by 2003.
11. All schools to have access to the Internet by 2001.
12. Teachers skilled in use of Internet and multimedia resources by 2002.
13. European diploma for basic IT skills.
14. Fully integrated and liberalised telecommunications markets by the end of 2001.
15. Competition in local loop to reduce substantial costs of using the Internet for business and consumers alike.
16. Single market strategy agreed (May).
17. Faster liberalisation of energy and transport. New targets will be established next year following a report from the Commission. Bodes well for forthcoming Gas Directive.
18. State aids to be reduced further.
19. EU strategy to remove barriers to services in hand, to be agreed at Nice.
20. New EU integrated regulation and simplification initiative in hand, to be agreed by June 2001.
21. Resolution on European Research Area agreed in June 2000. Boost to links between firms and research centres.
22. Increased mobility of researchers.

23. Proposal for regulation on community wide patent (June), to be agreed by 2001. To make patent protection in the EU as simple, inexpensive and comprehensive in scope as the protection granted by key competitors.

24. Interim review of Employment Guidelines—to include recognition that policies like welfare to work and lifelong learning have a key part to play to fight social exclusion and to ensure that the benefits of the knowledge-based economy will be for all.

25. Europe-wide database on jobs and learning opportunities, based on a UK idea.

26. Schools and training centres to be turned into multipurpose local learning centres accessible to all.

27. European award for firms committed to developing staff potential—a European "Investors in People".

28. Lisbon agreed to raise employment rate from average of 61 per cent. today to as close as possible to 70 per cent. by 2010.

29. Target to halve by 2010 the numbers of 18 to 24 year olds with only lower-secondary level education without further education and training.

30. High Level Group on social protection which was called for by Lisbon is now established. Working to modernise and re-orient EU social policy, away from a narrow focus on employee rights towards: active welfare state, not passive dependency; new focus on employability and life long learning; ensuring that work pays and that welfare systems are sustainable. Agreement to increase investment in human resources.

31. Political agreement on directive to counter racial discrimination.

To promote integrated European capital market.

32. EU action now in hand to lead to common international accounting standards.

33. Financial Services Action Plan in hand to be implemented in full by 2005.

34. EIB to make another billion euro available for venture capital for SMEs over the next three years. Tax policies, venture capital and EIB support for private research investments, R&D partnerships and hi-tech start-ups.

35. Work in hand on rapid adoption of new streamlined rules in the public procurement legislative package for June 2001. Procurement on line by 2003; procurement rules modernised and simplified by 2002. The system will be more accessible to SMEs.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Belgian Government on the regulation of the diamond industry in connection with Sierra Leone; and if he will make a statement. [126679]

Mr. Hain: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary and I have each raised the issue of conflict diamonds with the Belgian Foreign Minister, stressing the need for early international action to prevent revenue from illicit diamond trading fuelling conflict. Officials met with representatives of the Belgian Government and the Diamond High Council of Antwerp this month to discuss a draft United Nations Security Council resolution, proposed by the UK, which would ban trade in diamonds from Sierra Leone which were not certified as legitimate by the Government of Sierra Leone.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the strength and composition of the United Nations peacekeeping forces in Sierra Leone. [126681]

Mr. Hain: The strength of the United Nations Mission in Sierra Leone (UNAMSIL) now exceeds 12,500. Principal troop contributors currently include Bangladesh, Ghana, Guinea, India, Jordan, Kenya, Nigeria and Zambia. Her Majesty's Government continue to provide direct headquarters, intelligence and logistic support to UNAMSIL.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has made of the number of paramilitary activists in Sierra Leone who have voluntarily disarmed and entered into rehabilitation programmes. [126680]

Mr. Hain: Of the estimated total of 45,000 combatants in Sierra Leone, by the end of April, some 24,000 had entered the Disarmament, Demobilisation and Reintegration programme under the Lomé Peace Agreement.

One of the key priorities now is to establish a revised programme for those combatants willing genuinely to disarm.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Millennium Dome

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his answer of 5 June 2000, Official Report, column 93W, on the Dome sale, in what proportions the proceeds of the sale of the Dome will be split between the New Millennium Experience Company and English Partnerships. [125449]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 12 June 2000]: The proportion of the proceeds that will be split between the New Millennium Experience Company and English Partnerships is still under consideration. Any such decision depends, among other issues, on the precise content of any winning bid for the Dome's legacy.

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what legal technical and practical impediments exist to selling the Dome prior to 31 December. [125448]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 12 June 2000]: The handover of the Dome to the preferred bidder will take place on 1 January 2001. There are no plans to bring forward the competition timetable. While there are no legal reasons why the Dome could not be sold prior to 1 January, time constraints and issues surrounding planning permission could make handover prior to 1 January difficult for either of the two final shortlisted bidders.

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what bids he has received to site biotechnology industry in the Dome following its sale. [126044]

Mr. Chris Smith: No bids to site biotechnology industry in the Dome have been received by the Competition team. However, the final shortlisted bid by Legacy plc, which proposes a high technology industrial campus, could be capable of accommodating biotechnology industry occupiers.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) by what criteria the performance of Pierre-Yves Gerbeau will be judged for the purpose of bonus payment calculations; [125932]

(2) pursuant to the answer of 9 June 2000, Official Report, column 397W, regarding the Millennium Dome, if the target for visitor numbers which will be one of a range of measures used in any decision to award a bonus payment to the Chief Executive of the New Millennium Experience Company will be the stated target when P-Y. Gerbeau was appointed; and if he will make a statement. [126290]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 19 June 2000]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 4 February 2000, Official Report, column 771W, by my hon. Friend the Minister for Tourism, Film and Broadcasting.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport by what criteria the success of the Millennium Dome will be judged. [125933]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 19 June 2000]: The 2.7 million people that have visited the Millennium Dome have already judged the project to be a success. More than 85 per cent. of visitors come away from the Dome satisfied with their day and almost 80 per cent. say they will recommend a visit to family and friends. This is a higher satisfaction rating than for any other pay-to-visit attraction in Europe.

Lottery Grants

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Blyth Valley (Mr. Campbell) of 15 May 2000, Official Report, column 580W, on Lottery grants, what steps are proposed to increase the amount of Lottery money going to the constituency of Wirral South. [126955]

Kate Hoey: Following the publication on 5 June of a report on the impact of the National Lottery on coalfield and other areas of low take-up, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has set up an action team, involving representatives of both Government and Lottery distributors. The team will look into ways of ensuring that areas of low take-up such as Wirral South receive greater benefit from National Lottery money. Measures to be developed by the team include actively encouraging applications, reducing partnership funding requirements, making decision-making more transparent and a scheme where successful bidders teach other would-be applicants how to apply.

New Millennium Experience Company

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) if he will publish, on a case by case basis, the amounts disbursed to date by the New Millennium Experience Company in relation to litigation; [126464]

(2) what contingency exists in the budget of the New Millennium Experience Company to meet the cost of litigation; [126462]

(3) what assessment he made of the value of the New Millennium Experience Company's current and contingent liabilities in relation to litigation. [126463]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 19 June 2000]: The New Millennium Experience Company considers that publication of details of issues relating to litigation runs the risk of adversely impacting on its relationships with those organisations and companies it has entered into contract with and, therefore, on its ability to operate in an effective and commercial manner.

Hawksworth Hall

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received concerning Hawksworth Hall, near Leeds; and if he will make a statement. [126871]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 19 June 2000]: One such representation has been received by my Department and has been transferred to the Government Office for Yorkshire and Humberside.

I am aware that there are proposals to redevelop Hawksworth Hall. The issues currently being considered are a planning and listed building consent application. It would not be right therefore for me to comment on the case, since to do so could prejudice the position of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions in the event of the case being called in by him or becoming the subject of an appeal. However, arrangements are in place for this Department to be consulted where appropriate.

PRIME MINISTER

Special Advisers

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister what steps he takes to ensure that the work of special advisers does not compromise the political neutrality of civil servants. [127095]

The Prime Minister: The Ministerial Code and the Civil Service Code are clear that public resources must not be used for party political purposes and that the political impartiality of the Civil Service must be upheld.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if he will set a maximum limit of two special advisers per department. [127094]

The Prime Minister: Under the terms of the Ministerial Code, Cabinet Ministers may each appoint up to two special advisers. Where Ministers appoint two part-time special advisers this will normally be counted as one full-time equivalent. All appointments require my approval. Departures from the rule of two special advisers per Cabinet Minister are exceptional. These decisions are taken on the merits of the individual case.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Wednesday 21 June. [126581]

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I will have further such meetings later today.

Written Answers to Questions

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Chemical Weapons Act 1996

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the operation of the Chemical Weapons Act 1996. [127693]

Dr. Howells: In accordance with the Act, I have today laid a copy of the report on its implementation during 1999 before both Houses.

Corruption and Bribery (Lesotho)

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the loans underwritten by Her Majesty's Government to companies implicated in the current criminal trial concerning bribery and corruption in Lesotho. [127078]

Mr. Caborn [holding answer 20 June 2000]: Charges have been laid against various consortiums involved in the Lesotho Highlands Water Project. Kier International, Stirling International, Balfour Beatty, and Kvaerner Boving are UK members of consortiums involved in the project. All deny having been involved in any malpractice.

From records readily available the following loans have been underwritten by Her Majesty's Government through, ECGD, to these companies:

Inward Investment (Greater London)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action his Department is taking to encourage inward investment into the Greater London area. [127139]

Mr. Caborn: The DTI's Invest in Britain Bureau (IBB) provides grant in aid funding to the London First Centre (LFC) to promote London overseas as a location for inward investment. LFC received grant in aid of £1.015 million in 1999–2000, increased to £1,065 million in 2000–01.

LFC efforts are focused world-wide but investment is particularly encouraged, geographically from North America, and sectorally on functions such as European Headquarters, pan-European call centres and high value-added manufacturing. LFC is keen to emphasise London's position as the centre of European e-commerce and a leading destination for projects in knowledge driven sectors.

For the 12-month period ending 31 March 2000, LFC completed 115 projects resulting in 5,440 jobs created and 1,035 safeguarded.

From 3 July 2000, responsibility for inward investment in London will pass to the Mayor and the London Development Agency.

Maternity Pay and Parental Leave

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the terms of reference are for the review of maternity pay and parental leave. [127694]

Mr. Byers: The review will consider the steps needed to make sure that parents have choices to help them balance the needs of their work and their children so that they may contribute fully to the competitiveness and productivity of the modern economy.

The review will seek:

To examine how the economy is changing, particularly in relation to working patterns, and what the needs of the modern economy will be.

To identify how competitiveness and productivity in this context can be enhanced through giving families reasonable choices to help them to balance the needs of their children and work.

In doing so, it will take into account:

The impact of maternity pay and parental leave on business, particularly SMEs, and families including whether it is possible to simplify the implementation of existing legislation.

Best practice in business and its impact, including the extent to which employers currently offer additional entitlements or flexible arrangements.

Factors affecting women's decisions to return to work after childbirth.

Factors affecting the take up of parental and paternity leave.

Impact of returning to work part-time, from home or on flexible hours.

Reducing child poverty, including the particular problems faced by the workless and by parents receiving the Working Families Tax Credit.

I will chair a Ministerial Group to help co-ordinate the work of the review. Other members of the group are listed in the table:

Members
Baroness Jay	Leader of the House of Lords Lord Privy Seal and Minister for Women
Andrew Smith	Chief Secretary to the Treasury
Lord Falconer	Minister of State, Cabinet Office
Tessa Jowell	Minister of State, DfEE
Margaret Hodge	Parliamentary Under-Secretary, DfEE
Baroness Hollis	Parliamentary Under-Secretary, DSS
Alan Johnson	Parliamentary Under-Secretary, DTI
David Irwin	Chief Executive, Small Business Service

There will be extensive consultation and detailed research to back up the review.

Directors' Salaries

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to enable shareholders to vote on directors' salaries. [125853]

Dr. Howells: The Department of Trade and Industry published a consultation paper on directors' remuneration last year which put forward a number of proposals for improving disclosure of directors' remuneration and the board's accountability to shareholders. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry will make an announcement shortly on the Government's response to the consultation.

Aerospace Industry

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the use made by the United Kingdom aerospace industry of outsourcing to non-EU based companies and locations of items previously manufactured in the United Kingdom. [126833]

Mr. Alan Johnson: I have not made any specific assessment of changes in the sourcing of aerospace items. However my Department is working closely with the Society of British Aerospace Companies on competitiveness improvement programmes for the aerospace industry. DTI funding for this work is helping to improve productivity and other aspects of competitiveness of UK suppliers which should ensure that the outsourcing of aerospace items is kept to a minimum.

Export Promotion

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the status of the Joint Directorate. [126752]

Mr. Caborn: The Joint Directorate was renamed in 1994 as the Joint Export Promotion Directorate, which was run and staffed jointly by the DTI and the FCO. It was also charged with providing a general policy framework for the export promotion work of those two Departments, which was branded as the Overseas Trade Services.

My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary announced on 12 March 1999, Official Report, columns 399–400W, the Government's response to the Cabinet Secretary's Review of Export Promotion, the core of which was that all trade promotion development activities of the DTI and the FCO should be unified in a new joint operation, British Trade International, with a single Chief Executive, Sir David Wright. Copies of the report have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

The Joint Export Promotion Directorate and its responsibilities were subsumed in the restructuring of British Trade International.

Rogue Directors

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the DTI Hotline for reporting rogue directors is still operating; how many rogue directors have been reported on it since it was established; and what action has been taken and in how many cases as a result of reports received. [126047]

Dr. Howells: The Hotline continues to operate and, in the period from inception to 31 May 2000, it has received 2,067 inquiries either to its telephone answering machine, through correspondence or by the online submission of information via the Insolvency Service website. As a result, a total of 656 completed questionnaires/letters have been returned to the Insolvency Service concerning the activities of bankrupts and disqualified directors.

The Prosecution Section of the Insolvency Service considers all completed questionnaires, obtains additional information from Official Receivers and Insolvency Practitioners and, where appropriate, submits reports alleging specific offences to Department of Trade and Industry lawyers.

In the period to 31 May this year 181 cases have been referred to DTI lawyers and these have led to six convictions, the issue of 21 warning letters and a further seven defendants being charged with one or more offences. In 56 cases it was decided that no further action should be taken and the balance of the reports are still under consideration.

DEFENCE

Defence Evaluation and Research Agency

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the type of projects which (a) New DERA and (b) Retained DERA will undertake following the division of the organisation. [126937]

Mr. Hoon: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave my hon. Friend for Huddersfield (Mr. Sheerman) on 17 April 2000, Official Report, columns 366–67W, which outlined our proposals for the DERA public private partnership. These are described in more detail in the consultation document, a copy of which can be found in the Library of the House and on the internet at www.mod.uk/commercial/ppp/dera/.

Under our current proposals, we envisage that New DERA would continue to provide similar service to the Ministry of Defence (MOD) and other customers, working on a wide range of scientific and technical projects, providing advice, problem-solving, consulting, engineering and research services. It would, however, have much greater freedom to exploit its technology into broader markets, which in turn will have knock-on benefits for its core military business.

RDERA will focus on activities that must be carried out in government plus it will support MOD in its Department of State functions. It will ensure that MOD has an impartial source of advice and systems research capability, providing high level assessment, integration and management of the research programme and international research collaboration. This will include, for example, continued development of MOD's protection measures against chemical and biological weapons and the maintenance and employment of operational analysis models used to underpin policy, operational concept and procurement decisions.

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures he will take to ensure that at both Retained DERA and New DERA there is no diminution in (a) the scientific qualifications of staff and (b) the ability to provide impartial advice, once DERA is divided. [126931]

Mr. Hoon: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I have given to his earlier question on the DERA PPP project, in which I have outlined our proposals for the future of DERA.

(a) Under our preferred option, Core Competence, RDERA will focus on those activities that must be carried out by Government and to do so, we will need to retain those staff with the necessary expertise and qualifications to meet this role. The existing excellent system for recruiting, training and developing staff will be combined with a healthy interchange with industry, including NewDERA, and academia to give staff the opportunity for full and rewarding careers. Similarly, NewDERA will move into the private sector with the appropriate staff to maintain and, hopefully, develop its capabilities. NewDERA will have the freedom to attract and reward the best qualified staff to take it forward as a leading research and technology organisation.

(b) NewDERA will remain a significant supplier of science and technology to the Ministry of Defence (MOD) for the foreseeable future. Consequently we will be putting into place measures to ensure that it continues to be an organisation with which MOD customers are happy to do business. NewDERA itself will be keen to satisfy the needs of MOD, which will continue to be its most important single customer. The provision of high quality, impartial and high integrity advice and services will be at the heart of its business for all customers, including MOD. The proposed constraints described in the consultation document, which include features such as a special share, approval of Directors and contractual constraints, have been designed to provide a balance between allowing NewDERA the freedoms it needs to grow in the private sector and ensuring that access is preserved to those capabilities needed for the effective operation of our armed forces.

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the expected relationship between Retained DERA and New DERA. [126933]

Mr. Hoon: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I have given to his earlier question on the DERA PPP project, in which I have outlined our proposals for the future of DERA.

Under our preferred option, Core Competence, we expect that once bedded down, the relationship between New DERA and RDERA will be the same as the relationship between any private sector company and their main customer.

Contractual frameworks will naturally need to be established to govern relationships between RDERA and New DERA to reflect the changes brought about by the PPP. But this is no different from relationships that currently exist between the Ministry of Defence (MOD) and other private sector organisations. MOD through RDERA would take the lead on all Government to Government collaborations and where necessary, and with the agreement of the other Government or Governments involved, RDERA would sub-contract elements of the programme to New DERA.

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the consequences for the development of future generations of military aero engines of the closure of DERA Ryestock's aero engine testing facilities. [127090]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 20 June 2000]: On completion of the current engine programme for the Eurofighter project in 2002, there will be insufficient future work to justify the retention of the altitude test facilities at DERA Pyestock. There is no Ministry of Defence strategic requirement to retain the facilities. We are satisfied that there will be scope for engine suppliers to make appropriate alternative arrangements.

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations his Department has had with the United States Government on the proposed reorganisation of DERA; what the most recent response of the US Government has been; and if he will make a statement. [127091]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 20 June 2000]: Following the announcement in 1998 of a public-private partnership (PPP) for the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA), consultation has been an important and regular feature of the process. We have consulted with a wide range of key stakeholders, including international collaborative partners. Last year's consultation exercise on a potential PPP solution produced valuable responses, which have informed the most recent phase of work. The current consultation exercise, which I announced on 17 April 2000, Official Report, columns 366–67W gave all stakeholders the opportunity to submit their views on our revised proposals for the DERA public-private partnership.

Consultation with the USA has concentrated on discussions between MOD officials and Ministers with counterparts in the US Administration, the DoD and other US authorities. As would be expected with such a complex and important process, senior officials have held numerous detailed discussions with their US counterparts. Although it is not practicable for us to keep records of all discussions that take place at senior official level, we can confirm that the Principal Finance Officer, the Chief Scientific Adviser, the Deputy Under Secretary for Science and Technology, the Deputy Chief of the Defence Staff for Equipment Capability and the Chief of Defence Procurement have all been in consultation with their US colleagues.

Since the consultation was extended, as announced on 26 October 1999, Official Report, column 768W, discussions at ministerial level are recorded as follows:

Secretary of State for Defence, the right hon. Geoffrey Hoon, met the Hon. John Hamre, the Deputy Secretary of State for Defense 27–28 January 2000.

Minister for Defence Procurement, Baroness Symons, met the following US representatives to discuss the DERA public-private partnership proposals:

Dr. C. Dorman, the Chief Scientist of the Office of Naval Research (ONR), on 22 November 1999, in London.

Hon. John Hamre, the then Deputy Secretary for Defense in Washington on 29 February 2000, and then again in London on 22 March 2000.

Under Secretary of Defense (Acquisition and Technology) Jacques Gansler on 29 February, and then again on 22 and 23 May 2000.

Rudy de Leon, the Deputy Secretary for Defense in Washington on 2 May 2000.

Baroness Symons has also met senior National Security officials and had telephone conversations with John Hamre, and David Oliver, the Principal Deputy Under Secretary of Defense Acquisition and Technology, on this subject.

A team of UK Ministry of Defence officials led by the Director of the DERA Partnering Team, has completed a comprehensive series of briefings in the USA from 8 to 24 May 2000. This visit covered a wide range of US laboratories and sites as well as US officials from the US Department of Defense and the State Department.

Responses from the US and our other allies have been generally supportive of the Core Competence approach. They have made it clear that they wish to continue collaboration with the UK and see no reason why this should not be possible along the lines we are proposing. In common with all our collaborative partners, they have welcomed our willingness to listen to their views and engage in genuine consultation. Naturally, they have emphasised that they wish to ensure that government-only information provided under existing arrangements and as part of future collaboration will be adequately protected. Following any decision to proceed with Core Competence we would obviously take forward detailed work on this issue.

The current consultation period ended on 9 June. I can assure the hon. Gentleman that views expressed will be taken into account before a final decision is made.

DSA 2000

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the UK firms represented at DSA 2000 in Malaysia; what recent meetings Ministers or officials have had with such firms in respect of licensed production; and what products on display at DSA 2000 are (a) manufactured and (b) designed by UK firms. [126765]

Dr. Moonie: I will write to my hon. Friend and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Rifles

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what policy has been adopted with regard to the sale of self-reloading rifles no longer required by the British Army. [126461]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 19 June 2000]: Our policy is that small arms (other than automatic weapons which are routinely destroyed) which are declared surplus by the Ministry of Defence area available only to Governments, including acceptable military, paramilitary and police organisations (either directly or through duly licensed entities authorised to procure weapons on their behalf), to meet their legitimate defence and security requirements. All such transfers are assessed on a case by case basis against the UK national export licence assessment criteria and the EU Code of Conduct on Arms Exports.

In practice, few inquiries are received for the purchase of surplus small arms and the reality is that most are destroyed.

Civil Servants

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the further dispersal of MOD civil servants outside London to other parts of the United Kingdom. [126678]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 21 June 2000]: The following planned moves will result in civil service staff being relocated from London to other parts of the United Kingdom:

As part of the Head Office redevelopment the number of staff in London will reduce, fulfilling one of the aims of the Strategic Defence Review. Staff will move to a number of locations including York, Bath and Bristol;

As part of the integration of the former Army Technical Support Agency (ATSA) functions into the Equipment Support (Land) organisation in the Defence Logistics Organisation (DLO), many of the 216 civilian posts at ATSA Woolwich will move to Andover in late 2002;

48 civilian posts at the former Print and Distribution Function Woolwich are due to transfer to the Defence and Storage Distribution Agency (DSDA) at Llangennech.

Other moves may be planned but the details are not held centrally.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what reports he has received concerning the well-being of Major Andrew Harrison, serving in Sierra Leone, following his involvement with the RUF; what assessment he has made of threats to Major Harrison and the Ghurkha detachment being held hostage by the RUF; and if he will make a statement; [127310]

(2) what recent discussions he has had with the (a) UN peacekeeping force in Sierra Leone and (b) Revolutionary United Front concerning Major Andrew Harrison. [127311]

Mr. Hoon: I receive regular briefings on the situation regarding Major Harrison from civilian and military officials, who are in daily contact with him. I spoke to him myself by telephone on Monday 19 June. He is well and in good spirits, and is well protected by the Indian Gurkha forces at Kailahun. Although, because of the presence of RUF forces, the UN forces there are restricted in their freedom of movement outside the UN compound, they are not hostages and there is currently no direct threat to them or to Major Harrison. Although this is primarily a matter for the UN, we are liaising closely with them in Sierra Leone and New York in an effort to resolve the situation peacefully. I have not had any contact with the RUF.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many troops, and from which regiments, were affected by the failure to supply sufficient quantities of mefloquine in West Africa. [126054]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 15 June 2000]: The number of personnel who deployed to West Africa on Operation Palliser without supplies of anti-malarial tablets, and the reasons for this, are currently being investigated by my Department. Supplies of the tablets were readily available and there are no known problems with the supply chain.

Non-procurement Fraud

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate his Department has made of the cost to its budget in each of the last five years in relation to non-procurement fraud; and if he will make a statement. [126686]

Dr. Moonie: The reported estimated annual costs of non-procurement fraud for the financial years 1995–96 to 1999–2000 inclusive are as follows:

1995–96	217,000
1996–97	234,000
1997–98	98,000
1998–99	570,000
1999–2000	99,000

No abatement is made for subsequent recoveries. These figures relate to a combination of suspected and proven frauds with estimated values refined from time to time as investigations, sometimes lasting a year or more, reach a conclusion.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many written parliamentary questions tabled to his Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000 have not received substantive answers, citing as the reason commercial or other confidentiality. [127340]

Dr. Moonie: I will write to the right hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Trigat Programme

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of the medium-range Trigat programme. [125782]

Dr. Moonie: The MR TRIGAT Industrialisation and Production (I&P) Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) has been signed by Germany, France and the UK, but has not come into force because Belgium and the Netherlands have yet to sign. This has delayed the placing of the MR TRIGAT Industrialisation and Production contract by over 12 months. The situation has been further complicated by a request from Germany to reduce the number of equipments envisaged when that country signed the MOU. These uncertainties cast significant doubt on whether (and when) a contract based on the existing MOU will be possible.

Our priority must be to deliver a cost effective anti-tank guided weapon capability with the minimum delay. To this end, we continue to liaise with the participating nations to resolve the current uncertainty and to agree a way forward.

Arms Exports (Saudi Arabia)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the value of United Kingdom arms exports to Saudi Arabia in each of the past five years. [126251]

Dr. Moonie: I refer my hon. Friend to the 1997 and 1998 Annual Reports on Strategic Export Controls, which contain details of the value of arms exports to Saudi Arabia. Copies of these reports have been placed in the Library of the House. The 1999 Annual Report is due to be published shortly. Comparable information for other year could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

General Permitted Development Order

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to amend the General Permitted Development Order made under the Town and Country Planning Act 1995. [126284]

Ms Beverley Hughes: In February, my Department launched a research project which includes a review of the changes of use granted permission by the General Permitted Development Order 1995. In May, we announced in response to the report by the Independent Expert Group on Mobile Phones that the Government was minded to introduce a requirement for an application for full planning permission for all new telecommunications masts. However, we would need to consult widely on the principle and precise scope of any new arrangements, including the extent to which the existing permitted development rights in the Order might need to be amended. My Department also issued jointly with the Department for Culture, Media and Sport on 19 June a consultation paper which proposes that a planning application should in future be made for certain works within conservation areas that currently benefit from permitted development rights. Implementation of the proposal would require amendment of the Order.

Transport Plan

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make it his policy to publish an environmental appraisal alongside the Government's Ten Year Transport Plan. [126852]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The Ten Year Plan will contain an assessment of the Plan's impact on key environmental indicators.

Interactive Voice Response Systems

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many agencies of his Department use interactive voice response systems when dealing with telephone inquiries from the general public. [127113]

Ms Beverley Hughes: None of the Department's nine executive agencies currently offers telephone services that recognise and react to the spoken word.

Departmental Accounting Office

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what are the purpose and functions of his Department's additional accounting officer; and when this post was created. [127128]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The Department's additional accounting officer has direct responsibility for Class III Vote 4, Local government, England, and the White Paper account relating to the Pooling of Non-Domestic Rates and Redistribution to Local Authorities in England. This appointment was made following departmental restructuring on 1 April 1998. The Permanent Secretary, as principal Accounting Officer, continues to have personal responsibility for the overall organisation, management and staffing of the department.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many written parliamentary questions tabled to his Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000 have not received substantive answers, excluding those not answered on grounds (a) of disproportionate cost, (b) that the information is not available, not held centrally, or not held in the form requested and (c) of commercial or other confidentiality. [127098]

Ms Beverley Hughes [holding answer 21 June 2000]: I assume the right hon. Member is referring to parliamentary questions where Ministers indicate in their response that they will write to hon. Members to provide the information requested. If so, there have been 25 such cases, out of a total of 2,865 parliamentary questions answered by my Department in the period in question.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on how many occasions he has deposited papers in the Library in response to parliamentary questions tabled to his Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000. [127337]

Ms Beverley Hughes: For the period in question, my Department has deposited papers in the Library in response to parliamentary questions on 240 occasions.

Air Traffic Control

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what actions were taken by (a) his Department and (b) NATS between 9 June and 17 June in order to ensure that the breakdown on 9 June was not repeated. [127239]

Mr. Mullin: Following the computer problem at West Drayton on 9 June, the Department urgently requested: information from National Air Traffic Services Ltd. (NATS) on the nature and cause of the problem; and reassurance that immediate steps were being taken to rectify the fault to ensure that it would not happen again. When a further computer problem occurred on 17 June NATS contacted the Department with detailed information on this incident and the remedial action being taken.

NATS has advised that the causes of the failures were two unrelated application software design faults triggered in established and hitherto correctly functioning systems. The incident on 9 June was traced to an application code which failed to correctly process an unusual flight plan dealing with a flight to Hamburg which required complex co-ordination with an adjacent air traffic control centre (Copenhagen). Immediate action was taken to issue an operational procedure to all units affected not to file flight plans which could cause this problem.

The failure on 17 June resulted from a latent design fault in the flight strip printing system. The failure was cleared by reverting to a previous version of the software and as an additional precautionary measure a system message has been input which actively prevents the system from exercising the faulty code sequence.

As a permanent solution NATS is producing design fixes for both faults. These are currently undergoing test and assurance processes with NATS' operational engineering staff as a matter of high priority.

Mr. Leslie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when his Department's latest Air Traffic Forecasts will be published. [127814]

Mr. Mullin: The air traffic forecasts referred to are published by my Department every three years and reflect the intention to monitor air traffic developments and to keep assumptions and methodologies under review.

I have now approved the revised forecasts and agreed to their publication. Copies have been placed in the House Libraries and will shortly be on the DETR website.

Index of Local Deprivation

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State, for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the impact on the level of regeneration funding for London boroughs of the new index of local deprivation. [127161]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Decisions about the level of funding of domestic regeneration programmes is subject to the outcome of the spending review, which is expected to be announced next month. The index of local deprivation is still being finalised and is expected to be published later in the summer.

Birmingham Northern Relief Road

Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when work is to start on the Birmingham Northern Relief Road. [127787]

Mr. Hill: The Highways Agency is currently making progress with arrangements for the compulsory purchase of land. Work to clear the site will be undertaken in the autumn and will continue into next year in preparation for construction to start in the spring. A copy of an edited version of the Concession Agreement prepared in accordance with the judgment of the High Court has been placed in the Library.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Eurodac

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on planned UK participation in the Eurodac system. [127196]

Mrs. Roche: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary announced on 7 October 1999 that the United Kingdom was opting in the draft Regulation to establish Eurodac. The United Kingdom continues to play a full part in the discussion on this text, on which the European Parliament is now to be re-consulted.

Domestic Fires

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people (a) died and (b) were injured in domestic fires in each of the last five years, and, of these, what proportion of the fires occurred in houses in multiple occupation. [127008]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information is given in the table.

Number of fatal and non-fatal casualties and fires[1] in dwellings[2], 1994–98, UK

	1994	1995	1996	1997	1998[3]
Number of fatal casualties in dwellings	488	559	564	562	506
Number of non-fatal casualties in dwellings	12,916	13,108	14,189	14,896	14,970
Number of fires in all dwellings involving casualties	9,008	9,237	10,033	10,454	10,463
Number of fires in multi occupancy dwellings[4] involving casualties	3,861	3,997	4,551	4,716	4,724
Percentage	43	43	45	45	45

[1] Including late call and heat and smoke damage incidents (not recorded prior to 1994).
[2] Dwelling locations include caravans, houseboats and other non-building structures used as permanent dwellings.
[3] The 1998 casualty information is provisional and will be revised for later publication after death certificate information has been finalised.
[4] Multi occupancy dwellings are those in which the building has been subdivided into separate domestic living areas whether or not part of the building is used for a non-domestic purpose.

Hunting with Dogs

Mr. Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total cost of the Burns Inquiry into hunting with dogs. [126901]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as the final cost is known.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the (a) current strength and (b) number of officers actually available for duty in the Metropolitan Police Service. [127313]

Mr. Straw: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the strength of the force at the end of May was 25,484. This figure includes officers on secondment to The National Criminal Intelligence Service, the National Crime Squad and central services. When these are excluded the strength of the Metropolitan Police is 24,966. The number of officers available for duty at the end of May was 24,966.

These figures are not comparable with those for previous years because of changes to the boundaries of the Metropolitan Police District. Responsibility and resources for those parts of Essex, Hertfordshire and Surrey previously policed by the Metropolitan Police were transferred to the relevant county forces with effect from 1 April 2000.

Prisons

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) additional prisons and (b) additional prison places there were and what was their cost in each of the last five years; how many planned (i) additional prisons and (ii) additional prison places there are and what is their cost in the next three years; and if he will make a statement. [125322]

Mr. Boateng [holding answer 9 June 2000]: The information requested is set out in the table.

	Number of new prisons provided in each of the last five years	Number of additional uncrowded prison places provided in each of the last five years[1]	Cost of additional places in each of the last five years (£ million)[2,3]
1996–97	0	1,857	186
1997–98	4	4,635	211
1998–99	0	1,697	238
1999–2000	2	2,071	205
2000–01[4]	1	840	244

[1] The number of new places includes those at new prisons and places provided at existing prisons by building houseblocks and Ready To Use units. It is the total of new places and does not take into account places taken out of use, for example by the closure of Aldington.
[2] The total cost of new places includes new prisons provided under the Private Finance Initiative.
[3] This is an estimate of the total capital and current cost as the Prison Service does not record separately the running costs of added accommodation at existing prisons.
[4] The new prison in 2000–01 is called Rye Hill and will open in January 2001.
Note:
A new prison called Dovegate (800 places) is planned to open in July 2001. Plans for 2001–02 are currently being considered as part of the Spending Review 2000.

Global Cultural Diversity Congress

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of the report to Creditors prepared by the liquidator of Global Cultural Diversity Congress 2000 Ltd. [127355]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Disclosure of the Report of the Creditors is a matter for the liquidators of Global Cultural Diversity Congress 2000 Ltd. and so it is not my decision to do so.

Immigration Detention Centres

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the planned capacity is of each of the proposed detention centres at Thurleigh, Harmondsworth and Aldington; what criteria will be used to allocate (a) asylum seekers and (b) other immigrants to these centres; and if he will make a statement. [127354]

Mrs. Roche: It is proposed that there will be 900 places for immigration detainees at the detention centre at Thurleigh, 550 at Harmondsworth and about 300 at Aldington. People are detained under powers set out in the Immigration Act 1971. Although many have claimed asylum at some time they will be detained because of their status as inadmissible passengers, illegal entrants or people subject to deportation. The primary criterion is whether the person is unlikely to comply with conditions of temporary admission or their removal directions. No particular criteria will attach to these three new centres. The allocation of immigration detainees into a particular centre is primarily dependent on the availability of space and the location of the place of initial detention.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria will be used to select the asylum seekers to be detained at Lindholme; what his target is for the average length of time for which an asylum seeker will remain at Lindholme; and if he will make a statement. [127356]

Mrs. Roche: Lindholme will be used as part of the detention estate, housing, principally, those immigration detainees apprehended in the North of England. The criteria for the use of Lindholme will be the same as for other centres. It will be for illegal entrants, inadmissible passengers and those subject to deportation who are detained under powers in the Immigration Act 1971. Many of these people have claimed asylum at some stage. Detention is used where it is believed a person is unlikely to comply with conditions of temporary admission or their removal directions.

There is no target for the average length of time for which a detainee will remain at Lindholme. Detention must be proportionate and for the minimum period necessary.

Equal Treatment Directive

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which organisations attended his consultative meetings about the EC Directive on implementing the principle of equal treatment between persons irrespective of racial or ethnic origin. [127352]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: In addition to the organisations that were listed in the reply I gave the hon. Gentleman on 8 June 2000, Official Report, columns 377–78W, the Government had consultative meetings with the following representatives of organisations:

1. Sushi Sharma (Brent Council, Community Safety Team)

75. Victor Momodu
76. Elizabeth Kayembe (Abantu—for Development)
77. Gay Moon (Justice)
78. Noel James (Law Society)
79. Asad Rehman
80. Julia Hausermann (Rights Humanity)
81. Mrs. Couper (University de Paris 8)
82. Sanjiv Verdi (Unison).

Road Hauliers (Penalties)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what payments have been received by his Department in respect of civil penalties imposed on road hauliers under the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999; and if he will make a statement. [127353]

Mrs. Roche: As at midday on 20 June, a total of £24,000 had been received in respect of civil penalties imposed under the provisions of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999. In addition, a total of £137,829.70 had been received by way of payment as security in order to secure the release of vehicles impounded under the provisions of the Act, and a further £5,933.10 had been received in respect of detention of those vehicles and related expenses.

Spiritual Healers Charitable Trust

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with the Charity Commission about the proposed registration of the National Federation of Spiritual Healers Charitable Trust Ltd. as a charity; and if he will make a statement. [126472]

Mr. Boateng: None. The Charity Commission is answerable to the High Court for its legal decisions and its interpretation of charity law. Registration is not a matter for the Home Office.

Home Detention Curfew

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many category A prisoners were released on the home detention curfew scheme up to 31 May; what offences each committed and what was the (a) sentence received, (b) sentence served and (c) time spent on the scheme in each case; if any breached the conditions of the curfew, had their licence revoked or re-offended while on the scheme; and if he will make a statement. [126907]

Mr. Boateng [holding answer 20 June 2000]: As of 31 May 2000, no category A prisoners were placed on the home detention curfew scheme.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Winter Fuel Payments

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for what reasons 24 September was chosen as the cut-off for the winter allowance for 2000–01. [126045]

Angela Eagle: To ensure people receive their winter fuel payments in good time to contribute to winter fuel bills, the qualifying week must precede the onset of winter. The week of 18 to 24 September will be used as the qualifying week for the coming winter to ensure that the correct payments can be made before Christmas, in good time to contribute to winter fuel bills. The process for identifying eligible people and determining the amount payable takes around 10 weeks. This allows for completion of the enormous task whereby around 11.5 million people who are now eligible for winter fuel payments are either identified from our records or through a claims process.

If there were an entitlement provision for those people who had reached age 60 after the qualifying week, greater complexity would be brought to the scheme. The administration process of establishing the eligibility of all those who claimed, by checking age and household circumstances, would take a great deal of time and would add significant expense.

The current approach ensures all those eligible, particularly the oldest, get a significant and well timed payment. Clearly, there will be people who just miss out, but this would happen even if both a qualifying week and mop-up period were used, since the mop-up period would need to end at some point. We believe it has struck the right balance between providing help to the great majority of older people and ensuring that the payments can be made in time for the coldest weather.

Housing Benefit

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his Department's estimate of the annual costs of increasing the earnings disregard for Housing Benefit claimants by (a) £5 per week for a single person aged under 65 years and (b) by £10 for a household with children. [126435]

Angela Eagle: The information is in the table.

Estimated costs of increasing the earnings disregard for Housing Benefit claimants

£ million

	Cost in 2000–01
Increase the Housing Benefit earnings disregard by £5 per week for a single person aged under 65 years	15
Increase the Housing Benefit earnings disregard by £10 per week for a family with children	70

Notes:

1. Based on the 1997–98 Family Resources Survey and Housing Benefit administrative/forecast data.
2. Costs are rounded to the nearest £5 million.
3. The estimates do not take into account any behavioural effect that may be caused by these measures.

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the annual cost of disregarding child maintenance from housing benefit calculations (a) for all claimants and (b) for claimants also receiving working families tax credit. [126434]

Angela Eagle: We estimate that the cost of fully disregarding maintenance payments in Housing Benefit would be about £20 million a year. This includes an estimate for the cost for cases who would become newly entitled as a result of the full disregard.

The cost of fully disregarding maintenance payments in Housing Benefit (HB) for claimants who receive working families tax credit is also about £20 million a year.

Notes:

1. Cost for existing claims based on data taken from May 1998 HBMIS dataset, a 1 per cent. survey of HB claims.
2. Cost for cases who become newly entitled is calculated from data taken from 1996–97 Family Resources Survey uprated to 2000–01 prices, benefits and earnings levels.
3. Costs and Caseloads are calibrated to forecast caseloads for 2000–01. The cost has been rounded to the nearest £10 million.
4. This cost will include a small element of spousal maintenance.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 15 June 2000, Official Report, column 713W, on housing benefit, what average time is taken to process the housing benefit claims dealt with by Chelmsford Borough Council that are not dealt with within the 14 day guidelines. [127205]

Mr. Rooker: The information requested is not currently available. However, under the Best Value regime introduced from April 2000, local authorities are required to submit data on the average length of time taken to determine new claims. The first figures are expected to be available to the Department by autumn this year.

Single Payments

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out for each of the last three years before its abolition (a) the total amount spent on the single payments scheme and (b) the amount spent on each major category of item for which such grants were available. [125285]

Angela Eagle: Expenditure on the single payment scheme for the last three years before its abolition is given in the Annual Report on the Social Fund 1988–89.

Statistical samples of single payments, by item, are given in the Supplementary Benefit Annual Statistical Enquiries, 1986 and 1987.

The publications are available in the Library.

Benefit Information

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how he seeks to ensure easy access by all potential claimants to accurate benefit information; what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the complaints handling system in each division within his Department; and if he will make a statement. [125443]

Angela Eagle: We are modernising the way DSS services are delivered and restructuring the Department to provide a comprehensive, dedicated service focused on the needs of our key client groups: pensioners, working age people and children. Our programme includes initiatives to provide better information and effective systems for complaints and redress, if things go wrong.

Key improvements in quality and accessibility of information about benefits include:

Benefits Agency leaflets have been redesigned making them clearer, easier to follow and more tailored to customers needs;

information on benefits is now available in bilingual/Welsh, eight ethnic minority languages, large print, audiocassette and Braille;

the new Pensions Direct teleservice means we can take claims and deal with queries over the telephone;

through the New Deals and the ONE service we are providing one-to-one personal help and advice on jobs, training, child care and other services, as well as information on benefits; an improved Departmental website due to be launched shortly will provide customers with easy access to benefit information and in the future will enable them to contact us electronically.

We are reviewing our complaints and redress systems, in relation to our main client groups. Considerable work on this is already underway in the Department's current Agencies, most notably:

from July 2000 a new system will be introduced in Benefits Agency which will help us reduce complaints handling time; the Child Support Agency and War Pensions Agency have each recently introduced an independent body to review complaints.

In addition to the Department's own complaints procedures the Parliamentary Ombudsman investigates complaints of maladministration. Since 1997, the Ombudsman's reports show a 25 per cent. reduction in the number of complaints made to him about Departmental Agencies.

Income Support

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the characteristics of households with incomes below the level of Income Support. [127005]

Mr. Bayley: Research has been, and continues to be, commissioned by the Department to examine the characteristics of the poorest groups and, where appropriate, to explore the reasons for non-take-up of benefits.

A substantial programme of research was undertaken to examine the characteristics of the poorest pensioners and to explore their barriers to claiming Income Support. Ongoing surveys of low-income families with children also provide detailed information about Britain's poorest families. In addition, research was completed in 1999 that examined the circumstances of the lowest income households identified from the Department's Households Below Average Income (HBAI) series. This followed evidence that households reporting the lowest incomes in household surveys do not necessarily have the lowest living standards.

All findings from research undertaken by the Department are published and placed in the Library.

Expenditure

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the level of social security expenditure as a percentage of GDP is (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) on average in the other EU member states. [126978]

Mr. Darling: Comparative data across European Union member states are published by the Statistical Office of the European Communities. It produces comparisons of expenditure on social protection using a broader definition than Social Security alone. The definition includes spending on health, social services, active labour market policies and public sector occupational pensions. The most recent figures are for 1997 and show that UK spending on social protection represented 26.8 per cent. of Gross Domestic Product, compared with an EU average of 28.2 per cent.

Child Support

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to make it a criminal offence to give false information to the Child Support Agency. [126654]

Angela Eagle: Under proposals in the current Child Support, Pensions and Social Security Bill, we will introduce new criminal offences for providing false information in relation to child support and failing to provide information when required to do so. Any person who deliberately misleads the Child Support Agency or withholds information will be liable to a fine of up to £1,000 on conviction.

Average Incomes

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the average income from state benefits for (a) pensioners, (b) pensioners over 75, (c) single parents and (d) the disabled (i) in cash and real terms and (ii) as a percentage of average earnings for (1) 1979, (2) 1984, (3) 1989, (4) 1994 and (5) for each year from 1994. [126682]

Mr. Bayley: Information on components of pensioners' incomes is published in the annual statistical publication, The Pensioners' Incomes Series, copies of which are in the Library. The latest available figures are for 1997–78.

Benefits (Balkan Claimants)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many nationals of each of the successor republics to the former Yugoslavia who are residing in the United Kingdom are claiming social security benefits in this country. [127350]

Mr. Bayley: The information is not available as details of a claimant's nationality are not routinely recorded. Benefit entitlement is dependent upon a person's immigration status rather than nationality.

SCOTLAND

Caledonian MacBrayne

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last discussed issues relating to Caledonian MacBrayne with the European Commission; and if he will make a statement. [125723]

Dr. Reid: My hon. Friend the Minister of State, Scotland Office, recently met with representatives of the European Commission to discuss a wide range of issues affecting transport in remote and peripheral regions in Scotland and elsewhere in Europe including ferry services. Responsibility for issues affecting the operation of Caledonian MacBrayne ferry services is devolved and therefore rests with the Scottish Executive.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many of the written parliamentary questions tabled to his Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000 have not received substantive answers, citing as the reason that the information is (a) not held centrally, (b) not held in the form requested and (c) not available. [127333]

Dr. Reid: Four questions did not receive substantive replies because the information was not held centrally. Three questions could not be answered fully because some of the information requested was not held centrally.

No question did not receive a substantive reply because the information was not held in the form requested.

The information to answer one question was not available and some information requested was not available in respect of three questions

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Chevening Scholarships

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Chevening scholarships have been awarded to (a) Kazakhstan, (b) Uzbekistan, (c) Turkmenistan, (d) Tadjikistan and (e) Kyrgyzstan. [R] [126430]

Mr. Hain: In 1999–2000 there were 11 Chevening Scholars from Kazakhstan, 13 from Uzbekistan, five from Kyrgyzstan, two from Turkmenistan, and one from Tadjikistan.

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the criteria are on which the number of Chevening scholarships are made available to different countries. [126431]

Mr. Hain: Chevening Scholarships funding is allocated to different countries each year in line with FCO Objectives. As the cost of academic courses varies, it is not possible to make a precise correlation between the funding available and the number of scholarships.

Recruitment (Women Graduates)

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many female graduates were recruited by his Department, and, of these, how many are still employed by his Department, in each of the last 20 years. [126429]

Mr. Hain: The table shows the number of women recorded as having been recruited to the FCO through the fast stream competition where candidates are required to have a degree. The table also shows how many of these are still with the FCO for each of the last 20 years.

Women graduates may have been recruited into other grades but in these cases information on whether or not they had a degree was not systematically recorded as possession of a degree was not a requirement for recruitment in most cases.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many ministerial visits were made by United Kingdom Ministers to (a) Kazakhstan, (b) Uzbekistan, (c) Turkmenistan, (d) Tadjikistan and (e) Kyrgyzstan in each of the last three years. [R] [126428]

Mr. Vaz: The following Ministers have visited the countries of Central Asia in the last three years:

Foreign Office Minister of State, Doug Henderson MP, visited Turkmenistan in May 1998;

Doug Henderson's successor, Joyce Quin MP, visited Kazakhstan and Kyrgyzstan in October 1998; and the Minister for Construction (DETR), Nick Raynsford MP, visited Kazakhstan this month.

More ministerial visits to the region are planned for the coming months.

South Lebanon

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made on the protection of civilians in South Lebanon following the Israeli withdrawal. [126438]

Mr. Hain: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary and I have publicly called on all parties to exercise restraint. We have also, privately, raised our concerns with Lebanese, Syrian and Israeli leaders during recent visits to their countries. We continue to work hard with the UN to maximise calm and stability.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment the United Nations or its associated bodies have made of the role of Liberia in respect of the conflict in Sierra Leone; and what action is proposed as a result. [126771]

Mr. Hain [holding answer 21 June 2000]: The United Nations has made no formal assessment of Liberia's role in respect of the conflict in Sierra Leone. However, there is increasing international concern over reports of close links between RUF rebels in Sierra Leone and supporters in Liberia, and Liberia's alleged involvement in the illicit trade in Sierra Leone diamonds.

We will be taking forward our discussions with international partners on these issues over the coming period. Meanwhile, we welcome the EU's decision on 13 May to delay signature of the National Indicative Programme for Liberia in the light of concerns about Liberia's current activities.

Burma

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken to identify the location and value of assets held by the Burmese Government which have been frozen by the EU. [127160]

Mr. Battle: The Bank of England's Sanctions Emergency Unit, on behalf of HM Treasury, has issued a Notice to all financial institutions in the UK instructing them to freeze all funds belonging to those individuals subject to EC Regulation 1081/2000. UK financial institutions are required to report all such funds to the Bank of England.

The Burma (Freezing of Funds) Regulations 2000 makes breaches of the EC Regulation a criminal offence and provides penalties for such breaches.

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to introduce investment sanctions against Burma. [127159]

Mr. Battle: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave her on 20 June 2000, Official Report, column 156W.

HEALTH

MRSA (Netherlands)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment his Department has made of the incidence, control and reduction of MRSA in hospitals in the Netherlands. [126325]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 19 June 2000]: We are aware of the very strict protocols used for the management of MRSA in the Netherlands. Practice there and in other European Union countries is taken into account when formulating central policy. We have recently set national standards for the control of hospital acquired infections, including MRSA. These will be delivered locally and will be independently inspected and reviewed by the Audit Commission and the Commission for Health Improvement.

Administrative Costs

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the budget for hospital and community health services of (a) health authorities and (b) primary care groups and primary care trusts was spent on administrative costs in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [126916]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 21 June 2000]: In 1998–99 £420 million was spent on the cost of managing health authorities, 1.15 per cent. of the £36,612 million total National Health Service expenditure (net).

Primary care groups were not established until April 1999; therefore no figures on their management costs are yet available.

Hospital Cleaning

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the financial savings made by NHS trusts in (a) domestic services and (b) cleaning contracts in the last year for which figures are available. [126920]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 21 June 2000]: The information is not collected centrally.

Voluntary Sector

Dr. Desmond Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the voluntary sector organisations involved in (a) primary care groups and (b) healthy living centres. [126881]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 21 June 2000]: The names of all voluntary sector organisations currently working with primary care groups (PCGs) are not collected centrally. PCGs should work alongside voluntary organisations in identifying local priorities and developing the Health Improvement Programme (HImP).

The New Opportunities Fund (NOF) who are running a programme to support the development of a network of healthy living centres (HLCs) collect information about partners involved in bids as part of the application process. I have placed in the Library a list of those voluntary organisations involved at the bidding stage in the seven NOF funded HLCs.

Prescriptions (Incapacity Benefit)

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will estimate the cost of granting all those on Incapacity Benefit in the UK free prescriptions; [127240]

(2) if he will estimate the costs of giving free prescriptions to all those on Incapacity Benefit in Norwich, North. [127241]

Ms Stuart: In England, it is estimated that the cost of extending entitlement to free prescriptions to all recipients of Incapacity Benefit would be around £120 million per year. Information is not available on a constituency basis.

Repairs and Maintenance

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the outstanding repair and maintenance backlog at NHS facilities in each health authority in each year since 1995; and if he will make a statement. [127164]

Ms Stuart: The table provides the details requested.

Accident and Emergency

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many vacancies there were in medical posts in the specialty of accident and emergency in England in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [127163]

Ms Stuart: Information about consultant vacancies in accident and emergency medicine is contained in the Department of Health Recruitment, Retention and Vacancies Survey, March 1999. Data are only available for that year and only for consultants in that specialty. The survey does not include information about other grades of medical staff in accident and emergency medicine. Copies of the survey are available in the Library.

Spanish Medicines Law

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he (a) has made and (b) plans to make to the European Commission in respect of the December amendment to Article 100 of the Spanish Medicines Law. [126667]

Dr. Howells: I have been asked to reply.

We have made no representations to the European Commission in respect of the Spanish law, and currently have no plans to do so.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Running Costs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission, what the running costs of the House are on (a) sitting and (b) non-sitting Fridays. [126324]

Mr. Kirkwood [holding answer 19 June 2000]: It is not possible to distinguish running costs between sitting and non-sitting days because staff salaries are computed on an annual basis. Overtime figures for normal working days vary as a result of the unpredictability of adjournments; they are minimised wherever possible.

Heating, power and other services costs are substantially unaffected by a non-sitting Friday as normal departmental activities still have to be carried out. It is not practicable to calculate the small volume savings associated with the absence of Members, which in any case will be partly compensated for by increased visitor requirements.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Rwanda

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what proportion of her Department's bilateral country programme aid for Rwanda is spent by the Government of Rwanda. [126456]

Clare Short: Of the £30 million committed in December 1998, £10.6 million has been used to help Rwanda service multilateral debt and £15 million has been provided as budget support to underpin Government of Rwanda's commitment to increase spending on health and education as a proportion of GDP.

Nigeria

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what proportion of her Department's bilateral country programme aid for Nigeria is spent by the Government of Nigeria. [126453]

Clare Short: None of the bilateral programme is spent by the Government of Nigeria.

China

Mr, Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what proportion of her Department's bilateral country programme aid for China is spent by the Government of China. [126455]

Clare Short: Our programme in China is developed and implemented in full consultation with the Government of China. We do, however, work with and through a range of other actors, including non-governmental organisations and, increasingly, multilateral donors such as the World bank and the Asian Development bank.

We estimate that about 30 per cent. of our total programme resources are channelled through the Government of China, under the strict controls applicable under Financial Aid. A detailed list of our activities in China, together with our Country Strategy paper, will be placed in the Library of the House.

Departmental Publications

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the cost of her Departmental publications each year from 1992 to 1999. [126449]

Clare Short: The costs of Departmental publications since 1992 are as follows (costs are recorded on a financial year basis):

1992–93	252,175
1993–94	248,710
1994–95	318,596
1995–96	351,867
1996–97	374,651
1997–98	381,638
1998–99	537,007
1999–2000	657,801

Interactive Voice Response Systems

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many agencies of her Department use interactive voice response systems when dealing with telephone inquiries from the general public. [127392]

Clare Short: My Department has no interactive voice response systems that deal with telephone inquiries from the general public operational either within the Department or in use in any agencies thereof.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many parliamentary questions were tabled to her Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000 which requested information, pursuant to her previous answers. [127332]

Clare Short: Ten parliamentary questions were tabled to my Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000 requesting information pursuant to previous answers.

Ghana

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what proportion of her Department's bilateral country programme aid for Ghana is spent by the Government of Ghana. [126451]

Clare Short: In November 1999, we committed £40 million in flexible budget support to the Government of Ghana for 2000–02. We anticipate that the larger part of this (£25 million) will be disbursed in 2000 to help Ghana recover from the economic shocks of 1999.

Additionally, we anticipate that £7 million will be provided in flexible budget support specifically for social sectors in 2000–01. Up to £11 million is available for this purpose in 2001–02.

In total, flexible budget support represents 55 per cent. of the total bilateral commitment to Ghana over the next two years.

CABINET OFFICE

People's Panel

Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office when she will publish results from the People's Panel Ethnic Minority Booster Research; and if she will make a statement. [127382]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Initial research has now been carried out using the People's Panel Ethnic Minority Booster to find out more about the experiences of people from an ethnic minority background in using a range of public services. An extra 830 people from ethnic minority communities were recruited to the original People's Panel to ensure that views could be analysed in detail. Results have been published today, and I have placed copies in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will make a statement on the progress of the People's Panel. [126104]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Four major waves of quantitative research and several qualitative research projects using the People's Panel have been carried out since it was set up in the summer of 1998. Summaries of the research results have been placed in the House Library and published on the internet. A fifth wave of research, which will set a baseline for the new consumer focus for public services announced on 9 February, is under way. This will measure satisfaction with and expectations of key public services. The results are expected to be announced during the summer. An additional 830 people from ethnic minority communities have been recruited to allow us to examine their views in detail. The results from the first research using this group will be announced shortly.

An independent evaluation of the panel was published on 23 May 2000, Official Report, column 451W. Copies of the evaluation were placed in the Library of the House. The evaluation report concluded that the Panel had > proved its worth as a vehicle to promote greater understanding, within local and national government, of public views, and of the need to obtain these views, and that the Panel has proved a valuable asset.

The recommendations arising from the evaluation are in the course of being implemented.

Government Annual Report

Mr. Evans: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many copies of the Government Annual Report have been (a) sold at full price and (b) given away free of charge, to date. [125745]

Marjorie Mowlam: Over 10,000 copies of the Government Annual Report 1998–99 have been bought by members of the public at full price. No figures are kept for copies requested by and supplied to members of the public from Departments or otherwise given away without charge.

Government IT Projects

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what is her estimate of the total cost to public funds of the work of the Steering Committee and Review Team engaged upon the review of major Government IT projects. [126417]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The estimated total cost to the public fund of the review of Government IT projects is £290,000.

Expenditure in financial year 1999–2000 was £189,000 and in financial year 2000–01 it was £101,000.

Volunteering (Civil Service)

Dr. Desmond Turner: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what steps she will take to promote volunteering among civil service employees during the International Year of Volunteering 2001. [126880]

Mr. Stringer: Following on from the Prime Minister's recent initiative to promote voluntary activity in the community, the Cabinet Office has written recently to all Departments and agencies encouraging them to allow and support their staff to undertake voluntary work through the provision of designated paid leave for that purpose. We will continue to promote this initiative throughout the year and into 2001. We are currently in consultation with colleagues in other Departments over what we intend to do specifically during the International Year of Volunteering.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many written parliamentary questions were tabled to her Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000; and how many of them have not received substantive answers, with disproportionate cost cited as the reason. [127336]

Mr. Stringer: Between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000, 238 written questions were tabled to my Department, of which two were replied to by stating that the information was not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. A further 13 questions received partial answers, with disproportionate cost cited as the reason why a complete answer could not be given.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

LEA Funding

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what the value was of additional support to schools in (a) Westminster city council area and (b) the Royal boroughs of Kensington and Chelsea additional to revenue support grant since 1997 in respect of (a) the School Standards Fund, (b) section 11/ethnic minority achievement grant, (c) Excellence in Cities (d) education action zone and (e) other categories. [125417]

Ms Estelle Morris: The additional support provided for schools is contained in the table:

School Playing Fields

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many sales of school playing fields he has (a) approved and (b) rejected in each month since October 1998; [125928]

(2) what the acreage is of the school playing fields whose disposal he has (a) approved and (b) rejected in each month since October 1998; [125929]

(3) what has been the total sale value of school playing fields whose disposal he has (a) approved and (b) rejected in each month since October 1998. [125930]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 15 June 2000]: Before October 1998, there was no regulation of the sale of school playing fields whatever. If a local authority wanted to sell a school playing field, there was nothing to stop it and it could spend the proceeds as it wished.

To put a stop to the indiscriminate sale of school playing fields, the Government introduced Section 77 of the School Standards and Framework Act 1998. Section 77 requires a local authority, or the governing body of a maintained school, to obtain the Secretary of State's consent before disposing, or changing the use, of any school playing field. Local authorities are aware of the tough criteria against which their applications are considered and only put forward those applications they are confident will meet the criteria. The table shows the requested information.

1. All sale proceeds are used to provide new or improved sports or education facilities at maintained schools.
2. 40 per cent. of applications are in respect of sports pitches at closed or closing schools.
3. In 66 per cent. of cases at operating schools, the sale proceeds have been used to provide new or enhanced sports facilities, including sports halls, all-weather pitches or improved grass sports pitches.

Standards Fund

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list (a) the education authorities which did not accept Standards Fund grants available through the provision of matching funding in each of the last two years and (b) the amount of grant involved in each case; and how the undistributed funds were used. [126319]

Ms Estelle Morris: The tables show the sums initially surrendered for the main Standards Fund programme. We cannot separately identify where this was due to difficulty in finding match funding. Most authorities accepted allocations in full in both years. The requirement for authorities to contribute to the 2000–01 Standards Fund of over £1.6 billion supported expenditure was allowed for in the 5.4 per cent. increase in education Standard Spending Assessment for 2000–01. Surrendered sums are re-used in full for supporting education priorities, mainly within the Standards Fund programme.

School Instructors

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what guidance he gives to local education authorities on ensuring that instructors in maintained secondary schools have the same basic numeracy and literacy skills as those with qualified teacher status; and if he will make a statement. [126783]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Education (Teachers' Qualifications and Health Standards) (England) Regulations 1999 provide that it is for governing bodies acting with the consent of local education authorities to satisfy themselves as to the qualifications and experience of prospective instructors. This would include satisfying themselves as necessary that instructors whom they wish to employ have the requisite literacy and numeracy skills.

Unit Costs

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the average cost of educating (a) a primary and (b) a secondary school pupil in (i) 1970, (ii) 1980, (iii) 1990 and (iv) 1999; and what was the cost of educating a pupil excluded from school in each of those years. [126785]

Ms Estelle Morris: Unit costs based on net institutional expenditure for primary and secondary pupils in English maintained schools for the financial years 1979–80, 1989–90 and 1998–99 are set out in the following table. Figures on the same basis for 1969–70 are not readily available. Information about the cost of educating pupils excluded from school is not collected centrally.

	Primary	Secondary
1979–80	430	610
1989–90	1,210	1,860
1998–99	1,882	2,450

Under this Government, funding per pupil has increased by over £300 per pupil. In this year alone it has risen by £180. And that does not even include capital expenditure. Under the last Government, spending per pupil fell by £60 in real terms between 1994–95 and 1997–98.

Teachers (Absence and Resignations)

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many teachers resigned from teaching in (a) 1970, (b) 1980, (c) 1990 and (d) 1999 citing stress-related reasons; [126786]

(2) what the most frequently cited reasons were for teacher absence giving rise to the need for supply teachers in each of the last five years; [126788]

(3) how many teaching days were lost at schools in England and Wales owing to absence of teachers because of stress-related illness in (a) 1970, (b) 1980, (c) 1990 and (d) 1999. [126787]

Ms Estelle Morris: This information is not held centrally.

Teacher Training

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the total level of Government funding the current financial year for higher education institutions to support the training of teachers on PGCE courses in a subsidiary subject; and if he will make a statement. [126965]

Ms Estelle Morris: There is no separately identified funding for subsidiary subjects within initial teacher training (ITT) courses. The level of funding for individual courses, which varies between primary and secondary and between individual secondary subjects, depends only on the main subject of study. In 1999–2000 public expenditure to higher education institutions in England for secondary Post Graduate Certificate in Education (PGCE) courses was some £58.6 million, of which £46.5 million was distributed by the Teacher Training Agency (TTA) and £12.1 million paid through LEAs to cover tuition fees.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to offer financial support to higher education institutions that train teachers in a subsidiary subject; and if he will make a statement. [126964]

Ms Estelle Morris: Government funding covers all aspects of initial teacher training (ITT) courses. The level depends on the main subject of study. There are no plans to include any subsidiary subjects that providers might offer in determining the level of funding ITT providers receive. The Government pay the fees for home and European Union students on Post Graduate Certificate in Education courses irrespective of their subject of study.

Special Educational Needs

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what action his Department has taken to help LEAs increase the percentage of statements of special educational needs issued within 18 weeks of application; and which LEAs have received specific support on this matter. [127141]

Jacqui Smith: In 1998, my Department provided good practice guidance to LEAs which were not producing at least 60 per cent. of their draft statements within 18 weeks. We have followed this up by asking for evidence of improved performance, and we are currently considering what action to take in relation to continuing poor performers as identified in the Audit Commission's performance indicators for 1998–99, the most recent available. We will continue to keep LEA performance in this area under review. It is encouraging to note that the Audit Commission's figures show a continuing improvement, with English councils overall preparing 67 per cent. of draft statements within 18 weeks in 1998–99, compared to 54 per cent. in 1997–98 and 48 per cent. in 1996–97.

School Repairs

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list for (a) England and (b) each local education authority, the number and value of funding bids made to his Department in each financial year since 1995–96 for the repair of school buildings. [126846]

Early Years Education

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list for (a) the United Kingdom and (b) each local education authority, the number of three-year-olds with free early years education places providing five or more session of education per week in (i) 1979, (ii) 1990 and (iii) each year since 1992. [126845]

Ms Hodge [holding answer 21 June 2000]: The information is not available in the form requested. Up to September 1999, 'free' places for three-year-olds were only available in maintained nursery and primary schools funded by local education authorities from their own budgets. Since September 1999 specific funding by the Government for three-year-olds has been introduced and is available to both maintained and private, voluntary and independent providers via the Early Years Development and Childcare Partnerships. From summer 2000 this extra funding will be available in all local authority areas.

The available information on the numbers of three-year-olds in early-years provision for England and in each local education authority is contained in tables, copies of which have been placed in the Libraries. Table 1 gives the number of children in free early-years education places from 1996 to 2000. Table 2 shows the number of new funded places for three-year-olds being created in all sectors over the next year, including newly projected figures for summer 2000, autumn 2000 and spring 2001.

The new places this year are supported by £100 million of funding. Half of all three-year-olds will have access to a free place by spring 2001, and the Government are well on track to meet the 2002 target of expanding overall nursery provision to 66 per cent. of three-year-olds.

For information on three-year-olds with free early years places in Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland, I refer the hon. Member to the Ministers in the Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland Executives respectively.

Paddy Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the number of free places available in early years education for three-year-olds in each year from 1996–97 to 2000–01, in each county and local eduction authority; and if he will make a statement. [126583]

Employment Action Plan

Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will place copies of the United Kingdom's Employment Action Plan in the Library. [127788]

Ms Jowell: I have today placed in the Library copies of the UK Employment Action Plan, which sets out the Government's policies for implementing the 2000 Employment Guidelines agreed at the European Council held in Helsinki in December 1999. The Plan contains the latest information on policies for employment and employability, encouraging entrepreneurship and labour market adaptability, lifelong learning and equal opportunities.

Child Care

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the relationship between the costs of child care in London and the child care component of the Working Families Tax Credit. [127004]

Dawn Primarolo: I have been asked to reply.

The child care tax credit within the Working Families Tax Credit is designed to help working families who incur eligible child care costs by providing a credit worth 70 per cent. of eligible child care costs of a maximum of £100 for families with one child and £150 for families with two or more children. Like all the other elements of the Working Families Tax Credit it is available at the same rates throughout the UK for to all families who qualify.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

New Millennium Experience Company

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if the payment of the additional aid to the New Millennium Experience Company has been authorised by the European Commission. [124133]

Mr. Chris Smith: No. The funding of the New Millennium Experience Company is not considered to be State Aid and therefore does not require notification to the European Commission.

Digital Television

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what proportion of homes in (a) Wales, (b) England and (c) Scotland receive digital television; and what his target is for increasing these figures. [126074]

Mr. Chris Smith: Most homes in Wales, England and Scotland are able to receive digital television through terrestrial, satellite or cable delivery platforms. The Government's policy is that all viewers who receive analogue television should be able to receive the main free-to-air channels digitally before the analogue transmissions are fully switched to digital. At present, over 4 million people have subscribed to digital television.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what was the total cost to public funds of the recent visit of the Minister for Tourism, Film and Broadcasting to Las Vegas. [127307]

Janet Anderson: I visited Las Vegas as part of a wider visit to North America on official business as the Minister for Tourism, Film and Broadcasting. In Canada I represented the Government at the Banff International Television Festival, met the British Columbia Minister for Film to discuss current revisions to the film co-production Treaty between the UK and Canada, and undertook several engagements for the British Tourist Authority. In Nevada I made the Keynote Speech at the opening of the Annual Conference of the Institute of Travel and Tourism, had meetings with the Lt. Governor of Nevada, the Mayor of Las Vegas and with the Aladdin Project, the first major UK investment in the Las Vegas tourist industry. I attended 22 official engagements during my visit which was arranged jointly by my Department and the Foreign Office.

I will write to the hon. Member shortly with details of the costs of the visit.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Committees (Evidence)

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his policy on (a) ministers and (b) officials from his Department giving evidence to committees of the Northern Ireland Assembly in relation to the impact of reserved matters on devolved policy areas. [126690]

Mr. Mandelson: The Government's approach on such matters is set out in Devolution Guidance Note 12 which is published by the Constitution Secretariat in the Cabinet Office.

It is available on the internet at:

www.cabinet-office.gov.uk/constitution/2000/devolution/guidance/dgn12.htm

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the occasions on which (a) ministers and (b) officials have been invited to give evidence to Northern Ireland Assembly committees; how many have been (i) accepted and (ii) refused, indicating the reasons for refusal; and what was the subject matter to be discussed in each case. [126691]

Mr. Mandelson: To date no NIO Ministers or officials have been invited to give evidence to Northern Ireland Assembly Committees.

TREASURY

Pensioners (Tax)

15. Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many pensioners were sent a self-assessment tax form and were subsequently assessed as having no income tax liability in 1998–99. [125840]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 5 June 2000, Official Report, column 81W.

Inflation Forecasts

16. Mr. Michael Jabez Foster: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the inflation forecasts set out in the Red Book. [125841]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Latest RPIX inflation outturns are in line with the Budget forecast. The monetary policy framework set up by this Government is delivering low and stable inflation. It is because of this that interest rates are historically low—less than half the level seen in the late 1980s and early 1990s.

Married Couples (Taxation)

17. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on taxation of married couples. [125842]

Dawn Primarolo: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor has affirmed our commitment to the principle that the tax system should treat people as individuals, each entitled to their own personal allowance.

28. Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on the abolition of the married persons tax allowance; and if he will make a statement. [125854]

Dawn Primarolo: The Chancellor regularly receives representations on all aspects of the tax system.

We have introduced a package of reforms designed to make work pay better and focus resources on families with children. As part of the package, we have increased Child Benefit to record levels of £15 a week for the first child and £10 for subsequent children from April 2000, and it will rise further to £15.50 and £10.35 respectively from April 2001. We are increasing the Working Families Tax Credit by £4.35 a week from this month for children under 16. And in April 2001 we are introducing the Children's Tax Credit which will be worth up to £442, over twice as much as the old married couple's allowance which it replaces. By 2001, personal tax and benefit changes in this and previous Budgets will mean that 1.2 million children will be lifted out of poverty.

Landfill Tax

18. Mr. Luff: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with other Departments on the impact of the landfill tax on fly-tipping. [125843]

Mr. Timms: Treasury and Customs officials work closely together with those other departments that have policy interests on matters relating to waste disposal and landfill tax. All evidence suggests that the majority of fly-tipping is by householders, who are not directly affected by the tax.

Hypothecated Taxation (NHS)

19. Tony Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he is undertaking studies on the role of hypothecated taxation as part of the Government's review of the NHS. [125844]

Mr. Andrew Smith: No such studies are being undertaken as part of the current review.

Corporation Tax

20. Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the level of UK corporation tax in (a) the current financial year and (b) in 1997. [125845]

Dawn Primarolo: Corporation tax rates in the UK are at their lowest ever levels. The main rate of corporation tax for the current year is 30 per cent., and the small companies' rate is 20 per cent. Since 1997, the Government have cut these rates from 33 per cent. and 23 per cent. respectively. In addition, a new starting rate of 10 per cent. was introduced from April 2000.

Climate Change Levy

21. Mr. Brooke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received from businesses on the climate change levy. [125846]

Mr. Timms: The Government have developed climate change levy in an open and consultative way. Firstly through the work of Lord Marshall's Task Force and then through the extensive consultation exercises which followed the announcement of the levy in Budget 99. More recently the Government have consulted on the draft legislation underpinning the levy, on the support for energy efficiency measures under the levy package, and on the definition of "good quality" Combined Heat and Power plant.

During this process, the Government have received many representations from business and other interested parties and these views have helped to refine the design of the levy.

Working Families Tax Credit

22. Mr. Russell Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the impact of the changes to the Working Families Tax Credit announced in the Budget. [125847]

Dawn Primarolo: The impact of the changes to the Working Families Tax Credit, and the increase of the national minimum wage from October 2000 to £3.70 per hour announced in the Budget, will guarantee a family with children, with someone working at least 35 hours a week, a minimum income of £208 a week from October 2000 and £214 from April 2001. These, together with other measures the Chancellor announced in Budget 2000, will lift 1.2 million of the children out of poverty this Parliament.

32. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect on family incomes of the changes to the Working Families Tax Credit he announced in his Budget. [125858]

Dawn Primarolo: The introduction of the Working Families Tax Credit, together with other measures announced in the Budget, means that from October 2000 the minimum income guarantee for a family with children and someone working at least 35 hours a week will be £208 a week. This figure will rise to £214 a week from April 2001. These measures, together with the other measures the Chancellor announced in Budget 2000 will lift 1.2 million children out of poverty this Parliament.

Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the cost to public funds of the Working Families Tax Credit advertising campaign in (a) 1999–2000 and (b) 2000–01. [126179]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 19 June 2000]: The total cost of the Working Families Tax Credit advertising campaign in 1999–2000 was £13.8 million. To date, the cost for 2000–01 has been £2 million.

The freephone response line and the Tax Credits Office helpline have both performed extremely well and have now received over 3 million calls since September 1999.

Drugs Seizures

23. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the value of drugs originating in South American countries seized by Customs and Excise in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [125848]

Dawn Primarolo: Customs do not have a comprehensive record of the origin of all drugs seized. Evidence shows cocaine is the drug most frequently seized from South America and that most of the cocaine seized by Customs is from there. In 1999, the estimated value at street price of Customs cocaine seizures amounted to over £250 million.

ECOFIN

24. Sir David Madel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many meetings of ECOFIN there have been since 2 May 1997; and how many he has attended. [125849]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Since 12 May 1997, there have been 32 meetings of the Economic and Finance Council of Ministers, of which the Chancellor of the Exchequer has attended 26. On other occasions Treasury Ministers and officials have represented the Government.

Venture Capital

25. Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the increase in the availability of venture capital in the United Kingdom from 1997 to 2000. [125850]

Mr. Timms: According to statistics published by the British Venture Capital Association, the amount of venture capital invested in the United Kingdom increased from £3,066 million in 1997 to £6,169 million in 1999, the latest year for which data are available. The fastest growth sector was investment in management buy-outs and buy-ins, which now account for around three quarters of total venture investment in the UK. Start-up and other early stage investments grew strongly, but still account for only some 6 per cent. of total venture investment in the UK. The Government are concerned to improve the availability of small scale and early stage venture capital in the UK, as well as addressing access across the UK's regions and across technology sectors. To this end, the Department of Trade and Industry, through the Small Business Service and a new Small Business Investment Taskforce, is working to stimulate the creation of new public-private partnerships, within the framework of a new £1 billion target "umbrella" fund, to increase the supply of small scale venture capital. To better understand the factors affecting the UK institutions' decisions on investing in venture capital and other asset classes, the Chancellor has also commissioned Paul Myners, chairman of Gartmore investment managers, to conduct a review and report with recommendations in time for the Budget in 2001.

Savings Ratio

26. Mr. Collins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what projection he has made for the savings ratio in the next quarter. [125851]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Treasury do not publish quarterly projections of the saving ratio. Estimates for 2000 Q1 will be published by the Office for National Statistics on 29 June.

Income Redistribution

27. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his policy is towards use of the tax system for the redistribution of income. [125852]

Dawn Primarolo: Budget 2000 builds on the success of the last three years. It supports work, families and enterprise and it cuts poverty, helps pensioners, and delivers substantial new resources for schools and hospitals. By 2001, personal tax and benefit changes mean that a single earner family with two children on £12,500 will be £2,600 a year better off. On £25,000, they will be £370 better off.

Environmental Targets

29. Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the contribution his Department is making to efforts to ensure that Britain meets its national and international environmental targets. [125855]

Mr. Timms: Recent Budgets have introduced many measures to help the UK to achieve its national and international environmental goals. Measures to tackle climate change include the climate change levy and reforms to vehicle excise duty (VED). They put the UK on track to meet its legally binding Kyoto target for a 12.5 per cent. reduction in greenhouse gas emissions and move towards its own more challenging domestic goal of a 20 per cent. reduction in carbon emissions. Measures to improve air quality, to help meet targets in the Air Quality Strategy, include cutting and freezing duty on road fuel gas, introducing a duty differential to encourage ultra-low sulphur petrol, and extra incentives within the new graduated VED and company car tax systems for cars which use less-polluting fuels.

Fuel Duties

30. Mr. Paterson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact of increases in fuel duties since May 1997. [125856]

Mr. Timms: Revenues from fuel duties are set out in table 2.1D of Financial Statistics and table K2 in the Customs and Excise Annual Report 2000.

The Government are committed to appraising the environmental impact of all Budget measures and these assessments are published in Chapter 6 of the Economic and Fiscal Strategy Report 2000.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how standard temperatures are applied in the determination of volume on which motor fuel duty is paid. [127362]

Mr. Timms: When motor fuel passes the duty point both its actual volume and its temperature are recorded. Using internationally agreed conversion tables the volume of the oil, had it been at a temperature of 15°C, is calculated. These are the "standard litres" on which excise duty is charged and paid by the oil companies.

Single Currency

31. Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received about joining the single currency. [125857]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Government's policy on membership of the single currency remains as set out by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in October 1997, and restated by the Prime Minister in February 1999. The Government have said they will recommend joining a successful single currency only if it is in our national economic interest to do so.

Disadvantaged Areas

33. Mr. Bradshaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures he proposes to promote enterprise among disadvantaged groups and in disadvantaged areas in the south-west. [125859]

Mr. Timms: The Government's aim is to help create a supportive environment for entrepreneurial activity in all sections of society. Long-term unemployed people who want to move into self-employment are being helped with support under New Deal options nationally; while the Employment Zone pilot in Plymouth has been helping long-term unemployed adults aged 25 plus to get back into work, including the opportunity to pool benefits, training and job search funds to help with business start-up costs, since April 2000. We will also be offering New Entrepreneur Scholarships in high unemployment areas, to equip potential entrepreneurs with the management and business skills needed to turn their aspirations into successful businesses. A pilot programme will be running in Cornwall (and London and Manchester) later this year, before a national roll-out in September 2001.

Moreover, the Government announced in November 1999 the creation of a new Phoenix Fund, with £30 million to invest over three years in promoting better access to business support and finance in deprived areas. This includes:

- a development fund to promote innovative enterprise support in deprived areas, including incubator units;
- a national challenge fund to help resource community finance initiatives, and to evaluate the variety of approaches and distil best practices;
- loan guarantee support for community finance initiatives borrowing from wholesale sources of finance, so that they can on-lend in deprived areas; and
- a network of mentors to pre and early phase business start-ups through a new Business Volunteer Mentoring Association, being run on a pilot basis until April 2001.

The Department of Trade and Industry has lead responsibility for the Phoenix Fund, including the disbursal of funding and business support in the South West.

The Government have also instigated a range of measures in recent Budgets, including cuts in capital gains tax and corporation tax, and enhanced capital allowances, which will benefit many of the 65,000 small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) in disadvantaged areas and the wider South West region. Moreover, the Government are currently financing a network of regional venture capital investment funds for early-stage SMEs, and contributing to a regional target of £85 million for the South West. The first steps towards this target are being taken now with the regional venture capital competition being run by the DTI.

The Small Business Service is also tasked with the brief of reaching-out to start-up and existing enterprises in disadvantaged communities, to increase accessibility of business support.

We are also bringing schools and businesses closer together, particularly those in high unemployment areas. We have already provided an extra £10 million nationally to boost enterprise skills in our schools. The new National Enterprise Campaign, launched this month, includes a particular focus on our high unemployment areas.

Taxation

34. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent estimate he has made of the net increase in the amount of tax that will be paid in the current financial year as a result of his Budget. [125860]

Dawn Primarolo: Details of the Budget measures can be found in Table A.13 of the March 2000 Financial Statement and Budget Report.

Employment Support

35. Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his policy is on supporting (a) manufacturing and (b) service employment in the UK economy. [125861]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Government are pursuing a comprehensive range of policies which are helping to support both manufacturing and service sector employment, including the Welfare to Work programme and tax and benefit reform. Since May 1997 UK employment has increased by over 900,000.

Small Businesses

36. Ms Keeble: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what fiscal measures he has taken to encourage small businesses. [125862]

Mr. Timms: The Government have dramatically improved the fiscal environment for investment in and by small businesses.

Since May 1997, the smaller companies Corporation Tax rate has been reduced from 23 to 20 per cent., and a new starter rate of Corporation Tax has been introduced which benefits companies with profits of up to £50,000. Small and medium sized companies have also benefited from the abolition of Advance Corporation Tax and the payment of CT in arrears.

To encourage investment by small and medium sized enterprises, the Government have now made permanent at 40 per cent. the enhanced first year capital allowances for plant and machinery, first introduced in the July 1997 Budget. This year the Government are also introducing a 100 per cent. first year allowance for small firms' investment in information and communication technology. This measure is designed to accelerate the take up of new e-commerce practices, and will operate for three years.

To encourage small and medium sized companies to invest in innovation through research and development, this year's Finance Bill introduces a new R&D tax credit. This provides cash flow support to companies investing in R&D even before they are paying CT, and increases the tax allowance for current spending on R&D from 100 to 150 per cent.

To encourage investment in the growth of small businesses, the Government have significantly enhanced the incentives for individuals to make such investments via reforms to Capital Gains Tax. Gains on any shareholdings in unquoted companies will now be taxed as business assets on a shorter four year taper, with the final effective rate for higher rate taxpayers now down to 10 per cent. This year's Finance Bill also introduces improvements to the operation of the Enterprise Investment Scheme and Venture Capital Trust scheme (notably reducing from five to three years the minimum holding period for access to income tax reliefs). These changes will further enhance the incentives for individuals to invest in smaller higher risk trading companies.

The Government are also creating new fiscal incentives for UK companies to invest as corporate venturers in smaller growing companies. This year's Finance Bill introduces a new Corporate Venturing Scheme, which provides relief against Corporation Tax for minority equity investments made in eligible higher risk companies for a minimum of three years.

Finally, to enable smaller higher risk trading companies to recruit and retain more easily the key employees which they need to deliver their growth potential, this year's Finance Bill introduces a new Enterprise Management Incentive scheme. Under this measure, eligible companies will be able to offer tax-advantaged options over shares worth up to £100,000 (at the time of option grant) to up to 15 employees.

Economic Convergence

37. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his forecast for economic convergence of the British economy with that of those nations in the eurozone. [125863]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Chancellor of the Exchequer has said we will make another assessment of the five economic tests early in the next Parliament.

NMB Group

Mrs. Gordon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many of the secured loans made by NMB Group plc's fully-owned subsidiary, Consumer Loans Company Limited, were redeemed during the Bank of England's ownership of NMB Group plc from 1994 to February 2000; in what proportion of the redeemed loans a charge for early settlement equal to six months' interest was levied; and in what proportion of the redeemed loans the charge for early settlement was calculated by reference to the Rule of 78. [125946]

Miss Melanie Johnson: During the period of the Bank of England's ownership, NMB was run on an arms length basis under its own board of directors. The overall policy was to run down the business. The Bank does not have details of loans and repayments, but asked NMB to responded positively to any approach by individual borrowers who wished to refinance their loan.

Scottish Parliament Committees

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will outline his policy on (a) Ministers and (b) officials from his Department accepting invitations to give evidence to committees of the Scottish Parliament in relation to the impact of reserved policy matters on devolved policy areas; and if he will make a statement. [126674]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 20 June 2000]: Decisions on whether Ministers or officials should accept invitations to give evidence to committees of the Scottish Parliament in relation to the impact of reserved policy matters on devolved policy areas depend on the circumstances of the case.

Voluntary Giving

Dr. Desmond Turner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress he has made following his announcement at the National Council for Voluntary Organisations conference on 9 February concerning the Government's intention to initiate a national campaign to promote the giving of time and money in partnership with the voluntary sector. [126877]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 21 June 2000]: When the Chancellor addressed the NCVO conference on 9 February, he said that he wanted to bring together all relevant parties to examine proposals for a national campaign based on a partnership with the voluntary sector. The NCVO and the Charities Aid Foundation have made some proposals on a possible campaign, which we are discussing with them.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many parliamentary questions were tabled to his Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April which requested information, pursuant to previous answers. [127343]

Mr. Timms: Seventy seven.

PRIME MINISTER

Chief Press Secretary

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister under what circumstances the Chief Press Secretary is authorised to speak on his behalf when dealing with ministers. [126503]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 20 June 2000]: The Chief Press Secretary always acts in accordance with the Prime Minster's wishes.

Charter of Fundamental Rights

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the factors determining the number of delegates each political party was asked to provide for the drafting of the Charter of Fundamental Rights. [127184]

The Prime Minister: For the 30 national parliamentary delegates to Charter Convention, most parliaments, including the United Kingdom's, have selected one representative from each chamber and from each of the main political parties. The 16 members of the European Parliament were selected on a pro rata basis from among the European political groupings.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to veto the inclusion of the Charter of Fundamental Rights in any treaty base. [127197]

The Prime Minister: The Government have made clear their view that the Charter should be a declaratory document, not incorporated into the EU Treaties. That position is shared by a significant number of our EU partners.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list by political party the number of UK delegates to the drafting body on the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights. [127190]

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom delegates to the drafting body of the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights are:

Lord Goldsmith QC (Labour)—Prime Minister's representative

Win Griffiths MP (Labour)—Parliamentary representative

Lord Bowness (Conservative)—Parliamentary representative

Andrew Duff MEP (Liberal Democrats)—European Parliament representative

David Martin MEP (Labour)—European Parliament representative

Timothy Kirkhope MEP (Conservative)—European Parliament representative.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Young Offenders

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what the length of time taken for young offenders' cases to reach a conclusion was in the courts in each metropolitan police authority area in the last year for which figures are available; and what the corresponding figures were for 1997. [126963]

Jane Kennedy: The exact information requested is not available. Information on the time taken in magistrates' courts proceedings is collected by the Lord Chancellor's Department's Time Intervals Survey. Figures on the timeliness of cases dealt with at the Crown Court are not however available separately for adult and youth defendants.

The table shows the average number of days from first listing to case completion at Youth Courts in Metropolitan Police authority areas from June 1997, February 1999, June 1999, October 1999 and February 2000 Time Intervals Surveys. The only survey to cover all Youth Court defendants in 1997 was the June survey, and the most recent results available are from the February 2000 survey. A degree of seasonal variation is believed to affect the figures shown in the table and therefore comparisons over time are best made between figures from surveys which are whole years apart, for example June against June.

Average number of days from first listing to case completion at youth courts[1]

Survey[2]	Greater Manchester	Merseyside	Metropolitan[3]	Northumbria	South Yorkshire	West Midlands	West Yorkshire
June 1997[4]	62	67	50	47	50	72	55
February 1999	47	62	35	48	43	86	55
June 1999	48	53	40	43	37	68	39
October 1999	45	53	48	51	49	75	45
February 2000	49	54	51	44	50	74	46

[1] From the start of 1999 analysis of the Time Intervals Survey has included certain longer cases lasting over a year that were previously excluded from the calculations. In this table however the results presented are calculated on the pre-1999 basis for comparability. On the new basis of calculation many of the figures for the February 1999 to February 2000 surveys would be a few days higher.

[2] The first listing to completion period for all youth cases is believed to show some seasonal variation making figures from June surveys slightly lower than the underlying trend, and figures from February surveys a little higher than the trend. For this reason comparisons across time for figures in this table are best made between surveys a whole number of years apart, for example February against February or June against June.

[3] Based on youth courts in the London area. Excludes cases dealt with at youth courts within the Metropolitan Police authority area but outside the London Boroughs. Includes youths apprehended by City of London Police and proceeded against in London Youth Courts (Youth Courts are not held at the magistrates' courts in the City of London).

[4] In the June 1997 survey the sample sizes for Youth Court cases were less then 100 in Merseyside, South Yorkshire and West Yorkshire and due to the small sample sizes these figures should be treated with added caution.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many written parliamentary questions tabled to his Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000; have not received substantive answers, with commercial or other confidentiality cited as the reason. [127339]

Mr. Lock: In the relevant period, there was one written answer which withheld information requested by an hon. Member on the grounds that it was commercially sensitive.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Non-departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the (a) budgeted and (b) actual expenditure of each of the non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department for each of the last three years, and the (i) budgeted and (ii) projected expenditure for this year and each of the next three years. [121423]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 9 May 2000]: The information requested has been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Irish Milk Quota

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his oral statement of 11 May 2000, Official Report, column 1031, concerning the Irish milk quota, if he will identify the agreement cited by the Irish Government; and on what basis it bound British negotiators, and those of other parties, to accept Irish demands on milk quota. [122971]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 22 May 2000]: The agreement that the Irish Government used in the Agenda 2000 negotiations was reached in the Agriculture Council of March 1984. This agreement stated that when distributing quota from the reserve, priority will be given to Ireland.

Ireland was able to cite this agreement, to which the UK Government of the time had been a party, in its argument to negotiate an additional allocation of quota.

Farm Incomes

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what effect the funding arrangements for the expansion of the agri-environment schemes will have on overall farm incomes. [122968]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 22 May 2000]: Section 7 of the England Rural Development Plan describes the economic impact on farmers of the Rural Development Regulation and the mechanism for funding the measures. Copies of the Plan were placed in the Library of the House.

Rural Development Scheme

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his oral statement of 11 May 2000, Official Report, column 1028, concerning the redistributive effects of the England rural development scheme, if he will provide estimates of the projected redistribution in each English region. [122967]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 22 May 2000]: Each English region is being allocated funds for the Rural Enterprise Scheme, Training measure and processing and Marketing Grants to enable them to identify projects which meet regionally identified priorities. Funds are being apportioned on the basis of objective criteria such as agricultural productivity and labour force.

Crop Contamination

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the advice he received about the contamination by GMOs of rape seed together with a list of all those who were consulted and the dates on which he first contacted them after 17 April. [123832]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 25 May 2000]: Since 17 April Ministers have sought advice on this matter from the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment (ACRE), the Food Standards Agency (FSA) and the Advisory Committee on Animal Feedingstuffs (ACAF). Ministers initially received informal advice from ACRE and the FSA, which was subsequently confirmed in formal advice. That advice has been published. Informal advice has been received from ACAF and formal advice is awaited. This will be published when it is received.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the Government will restrict the import of crop seeds described as GM-free from countries in which separation distances between GM crops and GM-free crops are less than in the United Kingdom. [124157]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 22 June 2000]: The marketing of seeds imported into the EC from non-EC countries is governed by EC equivalence arrangements.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information the Government have obtained from parties other than Advanta UK on the contamination of conventional Advanta rapeseed with genetically modified rapeseed; and when such information was received. [124148]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 5 June 2000]: Apart from that supplied by Advanta, we have received information on the GM rapeseed inadvertently planted in the UK from the Canadian authorities. On 25 May the Canadian Food Inspection Agency provided preliminary information about the production of the relevant seed in Canada. A Ministry official went to Canada on 26 May to liaise further with the Canadian authorities, who are still investigating how the conventional rapeseed came to be affected. We remain in close touch with them on this.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his oral statement of 18 May 2000, Official Report, columns 473–74, what data he has collated on distances between fields that had been used to produce conventional Advanta rapeseed and the GM crops responsible for the cross-pollination of the conventional crop. [124163]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 5 June 2000]: The Government have no data yet on distances between fields used to produce the conventional Advanta oilseed rape seed stocks and possible sources of cross-pollination. The Canadian authorities are currently investigating which fields were used in the production of the affected Advanta seed. My Department aims to obtain the results of these investigations at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the crop sites now growing GM oilseed rape as a result of the contamination of Advanta rapeseed with GM rapeseed will be subject to the same controls as crop sites intentionally sown with GM rapeseed for the purposes of a licensed crop trial. [124160]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 5 June 2000]: All releases of GMOs, whether deliberate or inadvertent, are subject to the provisions of Part VI of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had about liability in cases where (a) conventional crop seed is contaminated with GM crop seed, (b) conventional crops are cross-pollinated by GM crops and (c) conventional crops are contaminated with genetic material from GM crops as a result of other forms of gene flow. [124161]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 5 June 2000]: I have had discussions recently on various issues relating to GM crops. The question of liability is a matter of civil law and liability will depend on the specific circumstances of each case, including where relevant the contractual arrangements that have been entered into by the parties concerned.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans the Government had in place before 18 May to inform farmers of the contamination of conventional Advanta rapeseeds with GM rapeseeds; and what changes have been made to those plans since 18 May. [124167]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 5 June 2000]: After learning of the problem Ministers established the factual background and took advice on the health, environmental and legal implications, in order to be able to publish appropriate information. This was published on 17 May. Further information was published as soon as we were in a position to do so.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 8 June 2000, Official Report, column 359W, which Canadian seeds authority was responsible for ensuring the purity of the rapeseed involved in the Advanta GM contamination incident. [126854]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 22 June 2000]: Responsibility for the purity of certified seed exported from Canada to the UK rests with the Canadian Food Inspection Agency, reporting directly to the Minister of Agriculture and Agri-food.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 8 June 2000, Official Report, column 359W, if he will list the seeds authorities that have a legal responsibility for ensuring the purity of seeds exported from the UK; and which Government Department is responsible. [126853]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 19 June 2000]: The following departments are responsible for ensuring the certification of seeds, including those for export, as prescribed by the seeds regulations. The regulations do not prescribe purity standards for the presence of GM material.

For England and Wales—the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (acting in relation to Wales on behalf of the National Assembly for Wales)

For Scotland—the Scottish Executive Rural Affairs Department

For Northern Ireland—the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development.

British Cattle Movement Service

Mr. Todd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what the average (a) telephone response time and (b) failure rates were of calls to the British Cattle Movement Service in each month of this year to date. [125674]

Ms Quin: The average amount of time that callers to the BCMS helpline have had to wait between making a call and speaking to a operator, and the number of abandoned calls are as follows:

	Average response time (seconds)	Number of abandoned calls
January	70	3,210
February	42	1,638
March	36	2,132
April	76	2,967
May	99	4,549

The number of abandoned calls equates to about 15 per cent. of all calls received by the helpline. Most of these calls would have been made during peak periods.

The increase in May corresponds with the Spring calving peak. In addition, some experienced call centre staff have recently had to be re-deployed to other priority work and new staff are currently undergoing training.

The BCMS is considering an industry request for changes to the call centre work patterns with a view to increasing the number of staff during peak hours. This would result in off-setting reductions in opening hours at night and weekends.

Vessels Satellite Monitoring

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what the compliance rates are of vessels registered in other EU member states which are obliged to carry operational satellite monitoring equipment. [125699]

Mr. Morley: The Ministry does not have detailed information about the compliance rates of vessels registered in other member states obliged to carry satellite monitoring equipment. Such information would be held by the relevant flag state authorities. However, we understand that the position in other member states is similar to the UK. Compliance by vessels from other member states operating in British Fishery Limits has been good. Action will, and already has been taken against EU vessels fishing in UK waters that are not complying with the directive on satellite monitoring equipment.

Water Level Management

Mr. Brake: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which completed Water Level Management Plans include actions to enhance biodiversity on sites of special scientific interest. [125780]

Mr. Morley: MAFF encourages flood and coastal defence operating authorities to enhance biodiversity where possible when preparing Water Level Management Plans (WLMPs). Operating authorities have not hitherto been required to report biodiversity gains.

MAFF is aware of biodiversity gains at a number of sites where WLMPs have been implemented, but information is not generally available on the sites where there has been a gain.

The High Level Targets issued in November 1999 require operating authorities to report biodiversity losses and gains annually from 1 April 2001. Further information should then be available.

Organophosphates

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his Department has (a) undertaken and (b) evaluated on the relationship between arhythmic heart conditions and the use of organophosphates in sheep dip. [126822]

Mr. Nick Brown: [holding answer 19 June 2000]: As research relevant to OP sheep dips is published, it is evaluated by the Medical and Scientific Panel, a sub-committee of the Veterinary Products Committee. The Panel considered evidence that exposure to OPs could cause heart problems but concluded that such problems were unlikely to occur at the levels of exposure to OPs experienced during dipping operations. Following a Scientific Workshop on 28 March 2000, which was organised by the Government, we hope shortly to call for proposals for further research which could include the effects of OPs on the heart.

Fur Farming

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what definition he uses of public morality in his policy on banning fur farming in this country. [126862]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 19 June 2000]: "Public morality" is not susceptible to an absolute definition: it inevitably involves subjective judgment. The expression is relevant to consideration of the proposed ban under Community law. The European Court of Justice has held that in principle it is for each member state to determine in accordance with its own scale of values the requirements of public morality in its territory.

In the Government's view, fur farming is not consistent with a proper value and respect for animal life. Animal life should not be destroyed in the absence of sufficient justification in terms of public benefit. The Government believe that the rearing of animals solely or primarily for slaughter for their fur fails this test. The position of fur farming is quite distinct from that of food production. Where the primary purpose of keeping an animal is the production of food, that purpose provides a sufficient public benefit to justify breeding the animals for slaughter. This is so even where the production of fur or hide is a secondary purpose of keeping the animal.

For the reasons set out, the Government believe that a total ban on fur farming is justified.

Land Drainage

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on charges for land drainage. [124141]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 5 June 2000]: Within their districts, internal drainage boards require the payment of (a) drainage rates by occupiers of agricultural land (including buildings) and (b) special levies by local authorities in respect of developed areas and other non-agricultural land.

The income from the general drainage charge contributes to the costs of the Agency's flood defence functions in the area concerned.

The Environment Agency charges a fee of £50 to persons applying for land drainage consents under section 109 of the Water Resources Act 1991, the sum being prescribed under section 110 of that Act.

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on how many occasions since 31 March 1999 (a) departmental and (b) non-departmental special advisers have travelled abroad in an official capacity. [124110]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 5 June 2000]: Departmental special advisers have travelled abroad in an official capacity on eighteen occasions since 31 March 1999. There has been no occasion when non-departmental advisers have accompanied me on visits abroad.

Farm Production

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment the Government have made of the relationship between level of production per unit of area and farm size in each of the major livestock and arable sectors. [126864]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 19 June 2000]: The relationship between production per unit area and farm size is monitored through the annual Farm Business Survey. Detailed results of the survey are published in "Farm Incomes in the United Kingdom", available on the Internet at www.maff.gov.uk/esg/.

Interactive Voice Response Systems

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many agencies of his Department use interactive voice response systems when dealing with telephone inquiries from the general public. [127121]

Mr. Morley: As far as I am able to ascertain, without an expensive investigation, no agency of this Department uses interactive voice response systems in their dealings with the public.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many telephone lines to his Department used by the general public are responded to by interactive voice response systems. [127120]

Mr. Morley: As far as I am able to ascertain, without an expensive investigation, none of the telephone lines in the Ministry that are used by the public are equipped with interactive voice response systems.

Fisheries

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the capacity of EU institutional structures to accommodate regional fisheries councils. [127001]

Mr. Morley: The capacity of the EU institutional structure to accommodate regional fisheries councils will depend on the role and powers envisaged for such bodies.

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has held with representatives of the European Commission on initiating consideration at EU level of proposals for zonal fisheries management. [126926]

Mr. Morley: My officials and I regularly discuss with the European Commission and colleagues from other member states ways of improving fisheries management at the regional and zonal level. Most recently, I made clear at the Fisheries Council on 16 June that we welcomed recent moves to enhance the regional dimension of the Common Fisheries Policy through, for example, the extension of regional workshops and the regional consultations on the Irish Sea cod recovery programme. These helpfully bring together fishermen, scientists and administrators to consider together improvements in the management of specific stocks in particular areas.

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has held with the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations and the Scottish Fishermen's Federation on the Hull University report, "Regional Management of European Fisheries". [126924]

Mr. Morley: Neither my right hon. Friend nor I have met the NFFO or SFF to discuss the Hull University report. Officials are to have an initial meeting with the NFFO and SFF on 29 June to discuss their joint document, "Zonal management: a new vision for Europe's fisheries".

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of zonal fisheries management in relation to (a) overfished stocks, (b) excess fishing capacity and (c) discard. [126927]

Mr. Morley: The National Federation of Fishermen's Organisation and the Scottish Fishermen's Federation (NFFO/SFF) document, "Zonal management: a new vision for Europe's fisheries", is now being studied and officials will be meeting the NFFO and SFF on 29 June to discuss it.

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further meetings he has planned with (a) the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations and Scottish Fishermen's Federation, (b) European Commission officials, and (c) representatives of EU member states to discuss regionalisation of fisheries policy. [126928]

Mr. Morley: Officials will be meeting the NFFO and SFF on 29 June to discuss their joint document, "Zonal management: a new vision for Europe's fisheries".

My right hon. Friend expects to meet Commissioner Fischler shortly to discuss the 2002 CFP review, in the course of which we will make clear the Government's desire to secure a stronger regional dimension for the CFP and to involve fishermen more fully in fisheries management. We will also continue to make the same point in our regular contacts with colleagues in other member states.

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the state of preparations for the 2002 CFP Review; and if he will identify the key issues for the UK. [126925]

Mr. Morley: The European Commission has indicated that it will shortly begin preparing a Green Paper on the 2002 review, to be issued early in 2001. My right hon. Friend expects to meet Commissioner Fischler in the near future to discuss this matter. He will emphasise that the UK wishes to maintain key features of the present arrangements such as national quotas based on relative stability and access restrictions within national 6/12 mile limits; and that we wish to secure improvements to make the CFP a more effective instrument for conserving fish stocks, including enhancing the regional dimension and integrating environmental considerations more fully.

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from relevant parties on treaty changes required for zonal fisheries management; and if he will publish the external legal opinion he has received in respect of these matters. [126923]

Mr. Morley: Neither my right hon. Friend nor I have received any such representations or external legal opinion.

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of trends in the fishing industry with regard to (a) recruitment and retention of staff, (b) profitability and (c) employment levels. [126930]

Mr. Morley: The Sea Fish Industry Authority published in 1999 a Labour Market Survey National Report, which evaluates employment trends, skill shortages and training needs. The Authority also publishes periodically data on the costs, earnings and profitability of a number of categories of vessels in the UK fishing fleet. Each year, MAFF publishes the United Kingdom Sea Fisheries Statistics, which contains information on numbers of fishermen.

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he intends to reply to the letters dated 3 February, 9 March and 13 April from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Ms R. Barraclough. [124465]

Mr. Nick Brown [holding answer 5 June 2000]: I replied to my right hon. Friend on 21 June, and apologise for the delay.

WALES

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many of the written parliamentary questions tabled to his Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April have not received substantive answers, excluding those not answered for reasons of (a) disproportionate costs, (b) information not available, not held centrally, or not held in the form requested and (c) commercial or other confidentiality. [127342]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Five. 97.5 per cent. of written PQs tabled to this Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000 have received substantive answers.

Written Answers to Questions

SOCIAL SECURITY

Social Fund

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the administration cost of recovering (a) budgetary loans and (b) crisis loans for each year from 1996–97 to 2001–02 shown as (i) total expenditure and (ii) percentage of total expenditure on those benefits. [125288]

Angela Eagle: The administration of the Social Fund is a matter for Alexis Cleveland, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Alexis Cleveland to Mr. Steve Webb, dated 22 June 2000:

I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking the Secretary of State for Social Security, if he will estimate the administration cost of recovering (a) budgetary loans and (b) crisis loans for each year from 1996–97 to 2001–02 shown as (i) total expenditure and (ii) percentage of total expenditure on those benefits.

The total Social Fund administration costs for 1999–2000 are not yet available but will be given in the Departmental Report in spring 2001.

It is not possible to provide a projection for future years as administration costs are based on the level of expenditure in that year.

The breakdown of information requested is not available for earlier years as the cost of some parts of the recovery process were included with other unrelated processes.

I hope this is helpful.

Television Advertisements

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many television advertisements have been commissioned by his Department since 1 May 1997; and, of these, how many were provided with closed caption subtitling. [126896]

Mr. Rooker: There have been 20 television commercials commissioned by the Department since 1 May 1997. All were provided with closed caption subtitling (teletext).

State Pension

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would have been the difference in cost to the Exchequer if the state pension had been linked to earnings since 1 May 1997. [127618]

Mr. Rooker: The information requested is in the table.

£ million

	Gross	Net of income-related benefits
1998–99	220	160
1999–2000	790	600
2000–01	2,150	1,640

Notes:

1. Costs assume earnings uprating begins at the next uprating date following 1 May 1997 (April 1998).
2. Figures are rounded to the nearest £10 million and are in 2000–01 price terms.
3. Gross costs estimated by the Government's Actuary's Department. Costs net of income-related benefit savings are estimated using the Policy Simulating Model.
4. Average earnings assumptions are based on an average of seasonally adjusted figures for the three months to July of the previous year, as originally published.

Stakeholder Pensions

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much money was paid by his Department to the Financial Services Authority for its work on stakeholder pension decision trees. [127416]

Mr. Rooker: None.

Written Questions

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of the written parliamentary questions tabled to his Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000 have not received substantive answers, excluding those not answered for reasons of (a) disproportionate cost, (b) information not available, not held centrally or not held in the form requested and (c) commercial or other confidentiality. [127442]

Mr. Rooker: None.

CABINET OFFICE

Agenda Computer System

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what were the annual running costs of the Agenda computer system for each year from 1 May 1997 to date. [126505]

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what has been the cost so far of the Government's new Agenda computer system. [127420]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The annual IT running costs of the Agenda computer system, excluding manpower costs, since it became operational in February 1998 are as follows:

Financial Year	Cost[1]

Written Questions

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many of the written parliamentary questions tabled to her Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000 have not received substantive answers, excluding those not answered (a) citing disproportionate cost, (b) stating that the information is not available, not held centrally or not held in the form requested and (c) citing commercial confidentiality or other confidentiality. [127441]

Mr. Stringer: I refer to the answer I gave to the right hon. Member on 22 June 2000, Official Report, columns 267–68W.

No other written questions tabled between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000 did not receive a substantive reply.

HEALTH

Digital Hearing Aids

Mr. Collins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many digital hearing aids are currently available on the NHS. [126750]

Mr. Hutton: There are currently no digital hearing aids available via the National Health Service Logistics Authority or any contract arranged by the NHS Purchasing and Supply Agency.

However, all NHS trusts throughout England are free to prescribe the most clinically appropriate product that best meets an individual patient's circumstances and need. Therefore, trusts are free to purchase any digital product that is available from hearing aid suppliers. There are no centrally held figures for the number of digital hearing aids purchased through this route.

In order to evaluate the benefits of digital hearing aids we have recently announced a two-year project involving twenty NHS trusts to evaluate the costs and benefits of digital hearing aids and associated service delivery changes. £4 million is available for the project in 2000–01.

Dental Services

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS dentists were registered in Shrewsbury and Atcham in (a) May 1997 and (b) for the last available date; and if he will make a statement. [126592]

Mr. Hutton: The number of General Dental Service principals on Shropshire Health Authority's list for the Shrewsbury and Atcham Local Authority District was (a) 35 on 31 March 1997 and (b) 45 on 31 March 2000. There were no assistants or vocational dental practitioners working in the Shrewsbury and Atcham Local Authority District at these points in time.

Our strategy for National Health Service dentistry was originally proposed in 1998. The current intention is to publish it this summer, in conjunction with the National Plan for the new NHS. It will contain proposals for improving both the availability and quality of NHS dentistry, including the introduction of clinical governance to dentistry and strengthened professional self-regulation.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reason patients registered with an NHS dentist are struck off the list by the health authority if they do not visit their dentist for 15 months; for what reason this period was reduced; and if he will make a statement. [127013]

Mr. Hutton: Patients who are registered with a National Health Service dentist are not struck off a list by the health authority. Dentists are paid a monthly sum for 15 months for each registered patient. If a patient does not visit their dentist within 15 months of their last attendance to renew their registration, their registration automatically lapses. Also, dentists may themselves terminate a registration arrangement at any time after giving due notice. Dentists are free to re-register their patients who have lapsed. It is up to dentists to decide whether they wish to accept any patient onto their list.

From 1 September 1996, the registration period for both adults and children was harmonised at 15 months to provide a period of continuing dental care following each course of treatment. This streamlined administrative procedures and reduced bureaucracy for dentists. It was also intended to improve value for money by focusing payments on those patients receiving active care.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Milk

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much milk was consumed in the UK in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [126953]

Ms Quin: 1999 is the latest year for which United Kingdom milk production and consumption figures are available. The figures are as follows:

United Kingdom milk production, supply and utilisation: 1999 (provisional)

	Million litres
Gross production of milk	14,594
Imports of raw milk[1]	111
Exports of raw milk[1]	465
Total supply	14,241
Utilisation by dairies for drinking milk[2]	6,854
Utilisation by dairies for manufacturing dairy products[3]	6,988
Dairy wastage and stock change	56
Other uses[4]	343
Total domestic use	14,241

[1] Milk imported or exported as packaged drinking milk is excluded.
[2] Closely represents consumption of drinking milk in the UK as little drinking milk is imported or exported.
[3] A proportion of dairy products manufactured will be exported and not consumed in the UK.
[4] Includes farmhouse consumption, milk fed to stock and on farm waste. Excludes suckled milk.

Subsidies

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the effects of subsidies in the past 30 years on agricultural innovation, competitiveness and diversity; and if he will make a statement. [126321]

Ms Quin [holding answer 19 June 2000]: Agricultural innovation, competitiveness and diversity have undoubtedly been affected by the levels of subsidy, support and protection offered by the Common Agricultural Policy. The Government are therefore continuing to press for production-related subsidies to be reduced and to seek reforms which will bring about a more market-orientated Common Agricultural Policy, as well as promoting the Rural Development Regulation as a more effective way of promoting competitive agriculture.

Dairy Farmers (East Sussex)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to help dairy farmers in East Sussex. [126296]

Ms Quin [holding answer 20 June 2000]: Following the Prime Minister's Action Plan for Farming, dairy farmers in East Sussex will share in the £22.1 million in agrimonetary compensation being paid to UK dairy farmers in the autumn. Dairy hygiene inspection charges, worth almost £1 million for English dairy farmers, were abolished in the spring. Last autumn's deferral of cattle passport charges was worth some £12 million to dairy farmers.

The Government also facilitated the generic milk promotion campaign. The abolition of the OTMS weight limit also is a significant benefit to dairy farmers.

Organic Farming

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total amount of money paid under the Common Agricultural Policy to farmers in the UK in the last financial year; and what percentage of this money was paid to organic farmers. [127018]

Ms Quin [holding answer 20 June 2000]: Forecast UK and EU expenditure under the CAP and on national grants and subsidies for 1999–2000 was £3,172 million. Most but not all of this sum will be transferred to the farming industry. The farming industry also benefits from higher food prices as a result of the CAP, which are paid for by consumers.

£11.35 million was spent under the Organic Aid Scheme in 1999–2000. However, organic farmers may also benefit from other aid under the CAP, including the following direct aid premium schemes:

Suckler Cow Premium;

Beef Special Premium;

Sheep Annual Premium;

Extensification Premium;

Arable Area Payments.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Best Value

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what representations have been made to his Department on the compliance costs associated with the implementation of Best Value by local authorities; and what account he will take of such representations in deciding funding allocations for local authorities; [126757]

(2) what annual incremental costs he estimates will be incurred over the next five years by local authorities (a) on average and (b) in total in ensuring compliance with the Best Value programme. [126756]

Ms Armstrong: A minority of local authorities, mostly smaller District councils, have made direct representations about the estimated costs of implementing best value. In any particular case, the actual costs will depend on the existing performance of an authority and the arrangements that are already in place to secure year-on-year improvements. Such costs are being considered as part of the current Spending Review, as are the potential benefits arising from the fundamental reviews of performance which best value requires.

For 2000–01, the Government provided an additional £40 million to cover the costs of audit and inspection, £24.25 million of which was provided through Revenue Support Grant (RSG) and £15.75 million in grant to the Audit Commission. In setting their fees for 2000–01, the Audit Commission were asked by the Government to use grant to equalise the impact on different classes of authority, taking into account average predicted levels of RSG, and the Commission consulted on this basis.

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate his Department has made of the average start-up costs for a local authority of implementing Best Value. [126758]

Ms Armstrong: The start-up costs of best value will depend on local circumstances, including current levels of performance, as well as on authorities' own judgments about the management arrangements needed to support it. The Government will commission a programme of independent research later this year designed to measure the full impact of the new policy, including the subsequent savings on service provision and the improvements to service quality.

West Coast Main Line

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what recent representations he has received with regard to fare increases on West Coast mainline services between Liverpool Lime Street and Euston Station; [127204]

(2) what discussions he had with the Rail Regulator with regard to fare increases on West Coast mainline services between Liverpool Lime Street and Euston Station. [127202]

Mr. Hill: The Franchising Director, not the Rail Regulator, is responsible for fares regulation. The Secretary of State has not had any discussions with the Franchising Director about fare increases on West Coast

Main Line services between Liverpool Lime Street and Euston station, nor has he received any representations about fare increases on these services. On InterCity routes the Franchising Director regulates the Saver fare which between Liverpool and London has fallen from £48.30 in September 1999 to £45 from May 2000. All other fares between these two points are unregulated.

Regional Development Agencies

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what has been the total cost to his Department of the setting up of the Regional Development Agencies. [127432]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The Regional Development Agencies (RDAs) spent £5.138 million in the four months before they were established on 1 April 1999. Some additional set-up costs may have arisen, but these are not separately identified in RDA's administration budgets.

NATS

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with (a) Lockheed Martin and (b) the New Zealand air traffic control system, Airways Corporation, on the future of air-traffic control; and if he will make a statement. [127213]

Mr. Mullin: The Department has held discussions with a number of companies in connection with the NATS PPP on the future of air traffic control. In accordance with our agreements with those companies, their identities cannot be revealed. Furthermore, in order to maintain a competitive and level playing field, the Department does not intend to release the identities of bidding companies and consortia in future stages of the PPP process.

School Travel Resource Packs

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much his Department has spent on the school travel resource packs launched in May; and what budget is allocated for this publication. [127593]

Mr. Hill: The Department spent £13,500 researching the content of the resource pack and has so far spent £46,500 on production and distribution. The budget allocated for the publication (excluding research) is £110,000.

Transport Plan

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the level of funding necessary to meet the requirements of the 10-year transport plan. [127594]

Mr. Hill: The Ten Year Plan, including the levels of funding, will be published after the Spending Review.

Written Questions

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many written parliamentary questions were tabled to his Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000; and how many have not received substantive answers, citing disproportionate cost as the reason. [127433]

Ms Beverley Hughes: For the period in question, there have been 36 occasions where my Department has cited disproportionate cost as the reason for not providing substantive answers out of a total of 2,865 parliamentary questions.

British Airways

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the reasons which caused him to overturn the CAA's Decision 4/99 of 23 December 1999 in favour of British Airways. [127366]

Mr. Mullin: The Secretary of State's reasons were set out in full in my Department's Decision Letter issued on 5 April this year, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the occasions, since 1 May 1997, on which he has upheld an appeal by British Airways against a CAA route licence decision, setting out, in each case, the route involved and the original CAA decision. [127365]

Mr. Mullin: The only occasion on which the Secretary of State has upheld an appeal by British Airways against a CAA route licensing decision since 1 May 1997 was in respect of CAA Decision 4/99 of 23 December 1999 on the appointment of scarce bilateral capacity between the UK and South Africa. The CAA originally decided in favour of Virgin Atlantic Airways, but the Secretary of State overturned its decision on appeal and directed it to award the available capacity to British Airways.

Correspondence

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire will receive a reply to his letter of 10 May on behalf of his constituent Mr. Page. [127367]

Ms Armstrong: I have now responded to the right hon. Member's letter.

Director General of Water Services

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has for the post of Director General of Water Services. [127959]

Mr. Prescott: Sir Ian Byatt steps down on 31 July 2000, after 11 years of distinguished service as Director General of Water Services, the head of Ofwat.

Following an open competition, and after consultation with the First Secretary of the National Assembly for Wales, I am pleased to announce I intend to appoint Philip Fletcher as the new Director General with effect from 1 August 2000.

Mr. Fletcher is currently the Receiver for the Metropolitan Police District.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Post Office Users National Council

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of each of the options outlined in the consultation document on the structure of the Post Office Users National Council. [127614]

Dr. Howells: Peter Carr, the new Chair of the Post Office Users National Council, has been asked to consider what structure will best allow the Consumer Council for Postal Services being established under the Postal Services Bill to champion the interests of consumers. The consultation document was issued to help him formulate his recommendations, which I expect to receive shortly. It would not be appropriate to comment until these have been received.

Written Questions

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many written parliamentary questions tabled to his Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000 have not received substantive answers on the grounds that the information is (a) not held centrally, (b) not held in the form requested or (c) not available. [127096]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 21 June 2000]: We have answered 1,707 written parliamentary questions between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000. The information requested is as follows: (a) six, (b) 12 and (c) 23.

In some of these answers we were in fact able to provide part of the information requested, while citing the above reasons for not providing all of the information requested.

Low Pay Commission

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the Low Pay Commission has been given its new terms of reference; and if any new members have been appointed. [127856]

Mr. Byers: The Government sent new terms of reference to the Low Pay Commission on 15 May and asked it to report by July 2001. I am also pleased to announce the appointment of two new members of the Commission: David Coats and Ian Hay are replacing Bill Callaghan and Laurie Dewar. David Coats is Head of the Economic and Social Affairs Department at the TUC and Ian Hay is the Chief Executive of the Scottish Association of Master Bakers.

Under its new terms of reference, the Commission is asked to:

(i) continue to monitor and evaluate the impact of the National Minimum Wage, with particular reference to:

the effect on pay, employment and competitiveness in low paying sectors and small firms; the effect on particular groups of workers, such as young people, women, ethnic minorities, homeworkers, people with disabilities and voluntary sector workers;

the effect on pay structures, including the effect on differentials and different pay systems, and the impact of the special rules for output work, unmeasured hours work and salaried hours work;

the interaction between the national minimum wage and the tax and benefit systems; and the interaction between the national minimum wage and the New Deal 18–24 and the New Deal 25 plus

(ii) recommend whether there is a case for increasing the main national minimum wage rate and the development rate, and if so, by how much, and whether there is a case for making any change to the maximum accommodation offset. In reaching views on these matters, the LPC should take into account movements in earnings and the actual and likely future impact on the economy, on employment and on training, with particular attention on the youth labour market. The recommendations on the rates may include a further examination, in the light of fuller evidence, of the case for changing the age at which workers become entitled to the adult rate.

In making its recommendations, the Commission should have regard to the wider economic and social implications; the likely effect on employment and inflation; the impact on the costs and competitiveness of business, particularly the small firms sector, and the potential costs to industry and the Exchequer.

The Commission is asked to report to the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry by July 2001.

Ministerial Cars

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many cars are used by ministers and officials in his Department and its non-departmental public bodies; and how many of those cars are Rovers. [125690]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 12 June 2000]: In line with the policy of successive Administrations, contracts for Ministers' cars are entered into with the Government Car and Dispatch Agency. 26 cars are used by Ministers and officials in my Department. Two are presently Rovers, including my own car.

I am currently reviewing this whole area, including the option of giving preference to UK-built cars when this is consistent with securing value for money and meeting our legal obligations.

Gas and Electricity Consumers Council

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the regional organisation of the proposed Gas and Electricity Consumers Council. [127855]

Dr. Howells: Following extensive consultation and discussion, I can announce the future organisation of the Gas and Electricity Consumers Council. It will have a head office based in London. It will have offices in Glasgow serving Scotland, in Cardiff serving Wales, and further offices in Manchester, Birmingham, London, Newcastle and Bournemouth serving England.

Single Currency

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the costs to his Department of switching from the pound to the euro. [126400]

Mr. Byers: Should the UK decide to join the euro, the cost of a changeover would depend on the detailed approach taken to a changeover.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Indonesia and the Moluccas

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to offer (a) assistance for managing peacekeeping operations in Indonesia and (b) funds for emergency relief assistance to the Moluccas. [126281]

Mr. Battle: We fully support President Wahid in his efforts to bring a peaceful resolution to the conflict in Maluku and other regions. As part of the international effort through the United Nations Development Programme, we have already funded two conferences on reconciliation in Maluku and a BBC seminar on objective conflict reporting for journalists there. We stand ready to help with further conflict prevention projects.

The Department for International Development is helping the United Nations Development Programme to promote reconciliation in Maluku and other areas of conflict in Indonesia. It has also seconded a specialist to work with UNDP to establish mechanisms to manage the UN humanitarian response and that of the international community, within a framework agreed by the Indonesian Government.

Sanctions (Iraq)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of recent research published in The Lancet on the number of babies and young children dying in Iraq following the Gulf conflict and the initiation of the United Nations sanctions; and if he will make a statement. [126277]

Mr. Hain: We remain extremely concerned by reports of high rates of infant and child mortality in central and southern Iraq. But we welcome the fact that in northern Iraq—where Saddam Hussein's writ does not run—child mortality rates are now lower than they were before the Gulf War. The UK has always advocated and supported initiatives aimed at better targeting the humanitarian efforts to help the most vulnerable. We led the way over the last year in introducing significant changes to the UN humanitarian programme in Iraq, through the adoption of Security Council resolution 1284 and 1302. Those changes mean that there will be an estimated $10 billion this year alone for the programme. As the UN Secretary-General has concluded, this will put the Government of Iraq in a position to reduce malnutrition levels and to improve the health status of the Iraqi people.

Appearance Bail Guarantees

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions in the last two years appearance bail guarantees have been given by the British Embassy to the Saudi authorities in respect of Britons detained in that country. [126250]

Mr. Hain: The British Embassy in Riyadh has given no appearance guarantees on behalf of Britons detained in Saudi Arabia during the past two years. A locally engaged member of staff gave his personal guarantee on one occasion on 8 December 1999 to enable a British Citizen to be released from prison. This was a personal act on the part of the individual and not an official act by the Embassy.

United Nations (Preventive Diplomacy)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much the United Kingdom's financial contribution to the UN was in each of the last five years; and what proportion of this was spent on preventative diplomacy. [126249]

Mr. Hain: The United Kingdom's total financial contribution (ie comprising total assessed contributions and total voluntary contributions) to the United Nations organisations and peacekeeping for the calendar years 1994 to 1998 has been:

1994	304,969,947
1995	328,855,981
1996	304,577,521
1997	309,260,413
1998	330,058,906

A breakdown of these totals appears in the Departmental Reports of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office from 1995 to 2000, copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Due to difficulties in extracting from the overall budget figures which may be attributed to preventive diplomacy, the United Nations Secretariat has been unable to estimate the proportion of UK contributions that has been spent in this area.

Coptic Christians

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Egyptian authorities about the rights under Egyptian law of the Coptic Christian minority. [126492]

Mr. Hain: The Egyptian Constitution provides for equal public rights and duties without discrimination because of religion or creed and guarantees the freedom of belief.

We regularly discuss inter-faith issues with the Egyptian authorities; indeed this was one of the focuses of my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary's discussions when he visited Cairo in January this year.

Kashmir

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Governments of India and Pakistan on Kashmir; and if he will make a statement. [126849]

Mr. Hain: We regularly raise the issue of Kashmir with the Governments of India and Pakistan. Both Governments are well aware of our concerns over human rights and external support for terrorism in Kashmir. We have also made clear our view that progress on the issue will only be made through dialogue. Most recently, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State discussed Kashmir with the Indian Government during his visit to India in April.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the (a) powers and (b) resources made available to the Chairman of the Board of the Commission for the Management of Strategic Resources, National Reconstruction and Development under the Lomé Agreement; and what assessment he has made of the relationship between that appointment and the funding of the Revolutionary United Front. [126889]

Mr. Hain: The Commission for the Management of Strategic Resources, National Reconstruction and Development was created to help the Government of Sierra Leone exercise full control of the exploitation of gold, diamonds and other resources for the benefit of the people of Sierra Leone.

Under the Lomé Peace Agreement, the Chairmanship of the Commission was offered to the leader of the Revolutionary United Front, Foday Sankoh. The Board of the Commission was to comprise two representatives of the Government of Sierra Leone, two from the Revolutionary United Front party, three representatives from civil society, and two representatives from other political parties appointed by Parliament.

Under its bilateral aid programme, the Department for International Development provided the Commission with three Land Rover vehicles, a computer, some office equipment, a satellite telephone and some items of furniture.

We have seen no evidence that any funds which may have been provided to the Commission were used by the Revolutionary United Front party, or that Sankoh's position as Chair of the Commission gave him access to new sources of funding for the Revolutionary United Front.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what training of Revolutionary United Front officials took place as a result of Article III of the Lomé Peace Agreement; and if he will make a statement. [126885]

Mr. Hain: Article III of the Lomé Peace Agreement provides for the transformation of the Revolutionary United Front into a political party, and for training for the RUF in party organisation and functions, in order for it to enter the democratic process in Sierra Leone. No training of officials of the Revolutionary United Front has yet taken place. The holding of free and fair democratic elections remains an essential part of Sierra Leone's efforts to achieve lasting peace and stability.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he made (a) to and (b) via the Commonwealth Secretariat regarding the release of prisoners and award of amnesty during the period of negotiations of the Lomé Peace Agreement on Sierra Leone. [126891]

Mr. Hain: We remained in regular touch with the Commonwealth Secretariat throughout the Lomé peace negotiations.

The Commonwealth is one of several international moral guarantors of the Lomé Peace Agreement.

FCO Management Board

Ms Ryan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on new appointments to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office Management Board. [127854]

Mr. Robin Cook: The Board of Management is chaired by the Permanent Under-Secretary and oversees the administration of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and all its resources at home and overseas. It has in the past been composed of Senior FCO officials together with the Chief Executive of British Trade International. They will now be joined by two non-executive members, Mr. Alan Gormly, Chairman of BPB Industries, and Ms Lucy Neville-Rolfe, Director of Corporate Affairs of Tesco plc. I am sure that the Board will benefit greatly from their experience of private sector management practice.

DEFENCE

SA80

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current status of the programme to make modifications to the SA80; when he plans to award a contract; if the modifications will be carried out in the United Kingdom; what is the value of contracts to modify the SA80; how many SA80 rifles have been modified to date to correct identified faults; and when the planned modification work to the SA80 will be complete. [126425]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the current status is of the upgrade programme for the SA80 and the LSW. [127324]

Dr. Moonie: The SA80 is an effective weapon system, we plan to retain in service until 2020. There has, however, been concern expressed over its reliability in certain circumstances. We therefore commissioned Heckler and Koch (H&K), a subsidiary of Royal Ordnance, to assess its reliability and to design potential modifications. H&K identified a number of design problems that affected the weapon's performance, especially in extremes of climate. Their proposed modifications were subjected to extensive trails in Alaska and Kuwait. The final report from H&K demonstrated that significant improvements in the reliability of the SA80 could be achieved to make this weapon system among the best in the world.

Having considered all options, including the procurement of a new weapon system, we have concluded that the modification of the SA80 represents the most cost effective solution to the provision of reliable weapons in all climatic conditions. The Secretary of State has, therefore, approved, subject to satisfactory contractual negotiations, the award of a contract to H&K to modify some 200,000 SA80 weapons, including both the Individual Weapon and the Light Support Weapon. The overall cost of the modification programme is estimated at around £80 million, taking account of the cost of trials and support. The contract will provide for numbers to be varied, up or down, as our assessment of the overall final requirement for modified weapons evolves over the next few years.

We will apply the principles of Smart Procurement to achieve the earliest possible in-service date. The first modified weapons will be produced next January, with a total of 22,000 weapons to be delivered by the end of next year. The modified weapons will be subject to a rigorous testing and acceptance programme in the hands of troops to ensure that the production weapons are both effective and reliable.

The Ministry of Defence is exploring with the company the scope to maximise the number of UK jobs involved in the modification programme. Early indications are that work on the stripping and refurbishment of weapons prior to modification will be done in the UK. The modifications package itself was designed by H&K at Oberndorf in Germany and it is likely to make sense to conduct most of the modification work there.

Suicides

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the annual suicide rate is of active service members of (a) the Army, (b) the Royal Navy and (c) the Royal Air Force in each year since 1989, stating in each case (i) the number of suicides and (ii) the number of attempted suicides recorded classified by rank; what measures have been taken to improve the armed forces' approach to preventing suicide; and if he will make a statement. [126902]

Dr. Moonie: Since 1 January 1989 there have been 285 recorded suicides in the Armed Forces. A breakdown of this number by Service and rank is given in the tables[1]. Information on the number of attempted suicides is not recorded.

[1] The information is as recorded up to 16 June 2000. Figures are for those cases of self-inflicted death recorded as suicide by a Coroner's Court. The information covers regular Armed Forces personnel including Gurkhas. It does not include Territorial Army, Reserve forces, Foreign Service personnel or the Gibraltar Regiment.

For most age groups (including the vulnerable group of single males below the age of 25) rates of intentionally self-inflicted death (ISID) are no higher than in the civilian population. All three Services take the problem seriously and have measures in place, both within and independently of the chain of command, to enable vulnerable individuals to seek help. These include procedures for putting people in touch with voluntary organisations and access to help lines (including the Samaritans). Service personnel can also seek help and advice from unit welfare officers, the Defence Medical Service, and from their chaplain.

Commanders and managers are provided with awareness training, so that they are aware of the various sources of advice and help available for vulnerable people under their command. All three Services convene formal Boards of Inquiry following self-inflicted deaths to examine the circumstances and to assess whether steps can be taken to prevent similar occurrences in the future.

Compensation

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money he has paid in compensation to service personnel in each of the last five years; how many personnel received payments; and if he will make a statement. [127175]

Dr. Moonie: The amount and number of common law compensation paid to Service personnel or their dependants for injuries sustained or death during service in each of the past five financial years is as follows:

Year	£ million	Cases settled
1995–96	12.1	235
1996–97	14.5	348
1997–98	25.3	369
1998–99	26.7	412
1999–2000	31.0	490

In addition to the increase year on year in the number of claims settled, the general level of payments has increased in accordance with case law above the rate of inflation.

Departmental Land

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to open up his Department's land for recreational use by the general public. [127230]

Dr. Moonie: There is already a presumption in favour of public access to the Defence Estate, subject to operational safety, security and conservation considerations. The recently published Defence Estate Strategy, "In Trust and on Trust", which was launched by the Secretary of State for Defence on 7 June, both reiterates this presumption and our commitment to future public access. Furthermore, it includes an assurance that the byelaws in force under the Military Lands Act 1892 and 1900 will be kept under review to ensure that access opportunities are not restricted unnecessarily. A copy of the strategy was placed in the Library of the House. The Ministry of Defence has also published a booklet entitled "Walks on MOD Land". This has recently been revised, and I anticipate that an expanded edition will be issued around the end of this year.

Written Questions

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many written parliamentary questions were tabled to his Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000; and how many have not received substantive answers, citing disproportionate cost as the reason. [127440]

Dr. Moonie: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Millennium Dome

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will publish the correspondence between the Millennium Commission and his Department relating to the latest grant of additional funds to the Millennium Dome. [124386]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 5 June 2000]: I wrote to the hon. Member on 7 June in my capacity as Chairman of the Millennium Commission on this issue. Copies of the letter have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Television Licences

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the television licence (a) schemes and (b) fees that are available to retired people. [125984]

Mr. Chris Smith: Under the Accommodation for Residential Care concessionary licence scheme, pensioners and disabled people living in residential homes and in qualifying sheltered accommodation are entitled to a £5 television licence. In order to qualify for the concessionary scheme, sheltered accommodation must.

(a) form part of a group of at least four dwellings within a common and exclusive boundary (though up to 25 per cent. of units in a scheme can be properties purchased under the 'right to buy' legislation);

(b) be specially provided for occupation by disabled people or retired people aged 60 years or over.

(c) be provided or managed by a local authority, a housing association or a development corporation; and

(d) have a person (e.g. a warden) whose function is to care for the needs of the residents and who either lives on site or works there for at least 30 hours a week.

Approximately 650,000 people qualify for the £5 concessionary licence. From November this year, people aged 75 or over will be entitled to a free television licence. Approximately 3.5 million households will benefit from this concession.

Mr. Hurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what estimate he has made of the number of pensioners who will be eligible for the concessionary free television licence. [127611]

Janet Anderson: Everyone aged 75 or over will be eligible for a free television licence from 1 November this year, but television licences cover households rather than individuals. Approximately 3.5 million households will benefit from the concession.

BBC (Advertisements)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if it is his policy to prohibit the introduction of commercial advertisements on BBC1 and BBC2. [126301]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 20 June 2000]: Under the Charter and Agreement the BBC is unable to introduce commercial advertisements on any of its public services without my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's approval. We would not permit commercial advertisements on licence fee-funded services.

Television Arts

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what steps he is taking to encourage national training schemes for television and film scriptwriters; [127107]

(2) if he will make a statement on the future funding of the Television Arts Performance Showcase. [127108]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 21 June 2000]: I am aware of the work of the Television Arts Performance Showcase and the significant contribution to television and film by writers who have participated in the scheme. It is at present largely for the industry to determine which training schemes to support and we have asked the Audio-Visual Industries Training Group, which we established to consider how to meet broadcasting industry skills needs to include scriptwriting in its considerations. The Group is due to report towards the end of the year. The new Film Council has identified training for scriptwriters as a priority area for funds which will be available from the autumn to support training.

Dunkirk (Little Ships)

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received concerning proposals to preserve for posterity a number of the little ships which took part in the Dunkirk evacuation in 1940; and if he will make a statement. [127305]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 22 June 2000]: My Department has received a number of letters about the Dunkirk Little Ships Restoration Trust's application to the Heritage Lottery Fund (HLF) for support of a project involving the restoration of four vessels and the acquisition of a fifth for use as a visitor centre. The application was rejected last October, but the HLF has since then been in discussion with the Trust to offer advice on how best to submit a further application. I understand that the Imperial War Museum and the National Maritime Museum are prepared to offer professional support to the Trust with a view to ensuring a viable future for these historic vessels.

Battle of Britain Memorial

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received concerning proposals to erect a Battle of Britain memorial on the Thames Embankment; and if he will make a statement. [127304]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 22 June 2000]: My Department has received correspondence about the proposal to erect a memorial on the Thames Embankment by the Battle of Britain Historical Society, though matters have yet to reach a stage where we are officially involved. Westminster City Council has identified a potential site for a monument but as yet no application for planning permission has been received from the Society. Large outdoor monuments to the Battle of Britain already exist in Folkestone and Croydon, and the Imperial War Museum last week opened a major permanent exhibition at Duxford which will educate and inform future generations and act as a continuing commemoration of The Few.

Interactive Voice Response Systems

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many agencies of his Department use interactive voice response systems when dealing with telephone inquiries from the general public. [127549]

Mr. Chris Smith: The only agency of my Department is the Royal Parks Agency, who do not use any interactive voice response systems for public telephone lines.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many departmental telephone lines used by the general public are responded to by interactive voice response systems. [127550]

Mr. Chris Smith: My Department does not use any interactive voice response systems for public telephone lines.

Written Questions

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many written parliamentary questions were tabled to his Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000; and how many of them have not received substantive answers, with disproportionate cost cited as the reason. [127335]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 22 June 2000]: 1,044 written parliamentary questions were tabled to my Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000.

Seven questions were answered in which disproportionate cost was cited as the reason for not providing all the information requested.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Magistrates

Dr. Cable: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the (a) ethnic background and (b) gender of (i) lay magistrates, (ii) stipendiary magistrates and (iii) recorders in (1) numerical and (2) percentage terms. [127144]

Jane Kennedy: The following tables set out the ethnic background and gender of (i) lay magistrates (ii) stipendiary magistrates and (iii) recorders. The trends are changing, however. For example, the table shows that 4.5 per cent. of lay magistrates are of ethnic minority origin. In 1997 and 1998, however, 6.5 per cent. of new appointments were of ethnic minority origin and in 1999 7.6 per cent. of new appointments were of ethnic minority origin.

The information on lay magistrates is held on a relatively new database. The information on ethnic origin was taken from a survey conducted in 1997 and, since then, from declarations made by new appointees. The information held in the database has not yet been validated. It is expected that this will take place in the autumn.

Post	Total	Of ethnic minority origin	Percentage
Lay magistrates	25,917	1,157	4.5
Stipendiary magistrates	96	2	2.1
Acting stipendiary magistrates	146	4	2.7
Recorders	1,352	35	2.6

Post	Total	Male	Female
Lay magistrates	25,917	13,218 (51.0%)	12,699 (49.0%)
Stipendiary magistrates	96	82 (85.4%)	14 (14.6%)
Acting stipendiary magistrates	146	121 (82.9%)	25 (17.1%)
Recorders	1,352	1,188 (87.9%)	164 (12.1%)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many magistrates have been recommended for removal from sitting on the bench by a local advisory committee and how many have been removed in each of the last three years. [127146]

Jane Kennedy: No information is kept on the number of recommendations for removal received from Advisory Committees. In each of the last three years the numbers of magistrates removed from the bench were as follows:

Year	Number
1997	13
1998	11
1999	15

Dr. Cable: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what information he collates on the number of magistrates referred to local advisory committees for failing to attain required competencies. [127145]

Jane Kennedy: Since the Magistrates New Training Initiative came into force in 1998 there have been no such referrals.

Warrants of Possession

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many warrants of possession were issued in respect of residential properties in (a) Great Britain and (b) each county court, in each year since 1990 to date. [127206]

Jane Kennedy: The Lord Chancellor's Department is responsible for the courts in England and Wales. The number of warrants of possession issued on residential properties in each year since 1990 is as follows:

Year	Number of warrants issued
1990	106,980
1991	133,101
1992	124,209
1993	124,271
1994	115,577
1995	117,301
1996	111,473
1997	115,646
1998	129,961
1999	136,718

A table, setting out, for each county court, the number of warrants of possession issued on residential properties in each year since 1990, will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

PRIME MINISTER

Performance and Innovation Unit

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the topics which have been considered by the Performance and Innovation Unit since its inception. [126501]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 20 June 2000]: The PIU has published the following project reports:

Encryption and Law Enforcement (May 1999);

e-commerce@its.best.uk (September 1999);

Rural Economies (December 1999);

Wiring it up: Whitehall's Management of Cross-cutting Policies and Services (January 2000);

Adding it up: Improving Analysis and Modelling in Central Government (January 2000);

Reaching Out: The role of Central Government at Regional and Local Level (February 2000);

Winning the Generation Game: Improving Opportunities for People aged 50–65 in Work and Community Activity (April 2000); Recovering the Proceeds of Crime (June 2000).

The Unit has also considered the key long-term Strategic Challenges that government will have to face. A Paper on "The Future And How To Think About It" has been published on the PIU website.

The following projects have been announced, but have not yet published their reports:

The future of the Post Office Network;

Trade, Social, Health and Environmental Objectives on the Global Stage;

Electronic Delivery of Government Services; and Effective Leadership in Delivering Public Services.

The PIU is also providing support to the Prime Minister's current review of adoption.

Ministerial Residences

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 5 June 2000, Official Report, column 50W, if he will list in respect of council tax liabilities for each residence (a) which Ministers have council tax paid for them from Government funds and (b) which Ministers declare these properties to be their (i) main and (ii) secondary residence. [126467]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 20 June 2000]: The Deputy Prime Minister, the Chancellor, the Foreign Secretary and the Secretary of State for Education and Employment have the council tax on their official residences paid for by their Departments, as their primary residences are elsewhere.

The Minister for the Cabinet Office and myself declare our official residences as our main residences.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister how many times he met President Clinton outside the UK and the United States of America between 1 May 1997 and 1 July 1998; and what were the (a) dates, (b) locations and (c) purpose of each meeting. [127129]

The Prime Minister: On 26–27 May 1997 I attended the NATO/Russia summit in Paris at which President Clinton was also present, although no formal meeting took place.

Neill Committee's

Mr. Baker: To ask the Prime Minister for what reason he has not yet responded to the Neill Committee's Sixth report into Standards in Public Life. [127093]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 21 June 2000]: The Government response to the report has not been delayed. The report deals with serious issues across a wide range of subjects, some with constitutional implications. The Government intend to respond to Parliament by the summer recess.

Official Spokesmen

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the role of his Official Spokesman in relation to party political activities. [127428]

The Prime Minister: Alastair Campbell is the Government's Chief Press Secretary. He does this on my behalf and on the Government's behalf. He is bound by the Model Contract for Special Advisers and his role is entirely in accordance with that contract.

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Prime Minister if he plans changes to the (a) contract and (b) salary of his Chief Press Spokesman. [127429]

The Prime Minister: No.

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Prime Minister what changes have been made to the duties and responsibilities of his Chief Press Secretary. [127421]

The Prime Minister: None.

Strategic Communications Unit

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Prime Minister to whom the Strategic Communications Unit is answerable. [127423]

The Prime Minister: The Strategic Communications Unit is managed by the Chief Press Secretary and is answerable to me.

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if the Strategic Communications Unit has the power to veto announcements from Government Departments; [127424]

(2) if he will make a statement on the work of the Strategic Communications Unit; and what plans he has to review its work. [127422]

The Prime Minister: The background to the decision to establish the Strategic Communications Unit was set out in my answer to my right hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett), on 14 January 1998, Official Report, columns 233–34W. Since its inception, the Strategic Communications Unit has provided general advice to me and is responsible for the co-ordination of announcements across government. It has also worked on specific projects such as preparing the Government's Annual Reports and is responsible for the No.10 website.

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Prime Minister what safeguards have been put in place to ensure that the Strategic Communications Unit is not engaged in party political activities. [127427]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to his hon. Friend the Member for Worthing, West (Mr. Bottomley) on 15 June 2000, Official Report, column 701W.

Prisoners of War

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if he will have another meeting with the Royal British Legion over compensation for former prisoners of war held by the Japanese; [127626]

(2) if the final decision to pay compensation to former prisoners of war held by the Japanese will be made by him; [127629]

(3) which Departments are involved in considering whether compensation should be paid to former prisoners of war held by the Japanese; [127628]

(4) when he will make a decision concerning compensation to former prisoners of war who were held by the Japanese. [127627]

The Prime Minister: No further meetings with the Royal British Legion are anticipated at this stage, as a decision is expected shortly. The final decision will be taken in consultation with colleagues in the Departments listed in the answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence to the hon. Member for Winchester (Mr. Oaten) on 13 June 2000, Official Report, column 568W.

SCOTLAND

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many parliamentary questions were tabled to his Department between the 19 October 1999 and the 20 April 2000 which requested information, pursuant to his previous answers. [127443]

Dr. Reid: Six, of which three were from the right hon. Member.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

University Admissions

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many pupils on assisted places at independent schools have obtained places at (a) Oxford University, (b) Cambridge University, (c) universities which are members of the Russell Group and (d) other universities, in each year for the last five years; and, in each case, what proportion this number represented of all pupils obtaining places at those institutions. [125303]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 9 June 2000]: The information requested on pupils on assisted places is not centrally available.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of candidates obtaining places at (a) Oxford University, (b) Cambridge University and (c) universities which are members of the Russell Group came from (i) grant-maintained and former grant-maintained schools and (ii) grammar schools in each of the last five years. [125304]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 9 June 2000]: The available information is given in the following table, based on students gaining places on full-time and sandwich undergraduate courses through UCAS. Because of a change in classification of school types in UCAS statistics in 1998, comparative figures for Grant-Maintained schools and grammar schools are not available for earlier years.

Connexions Service

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what safeguards will be put in place in respect of the new Connexions Service to ensure that personal advisers, learning mentors and Connexions advisers will provide impartial advice and guidance to learners to the standard and level of competence of careers service organisations. [125866]

Mr. Wicks: The Connexions Service will offer at least the same level of impartial careers information, advice and guidance for 13 to 19 year olds as is currently provided by careers services. Local managers from the Connexions Service will agree with schools how personal advisers operating on their premises will be deployed and managed. This agreement will show how careers advice and guidance will be delivered in the institution, and ensure that students know which individuals can offer advice which is impartial. However, in order to remove the significant barriers to learning that many young people face, the range of information, advice and guidance provided by the Connexions Service will be extended to cover matters relating to, for example, housing and health.

Learning Mentors and personal advisers will work side by side in schools in order to provide coherent advice, support and guidance to pupils.

Learning Mentors will work closely with the pastoral and other staff of the school with the individual achievement of the pupil as the common focus. They also provide one stop access to specialist support services where necessary.

Mr. Prior: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what safeguards will be in place to ensure that personal advisers in schools with sixth forms, appointed and managed by headteachers, will deliver impartial, independent careers advice to pupils. [125867]

Mr. Wicks: The provision of impartial careers information, advice and guidance will be a core function of the Connexions Service. Connexions Service Personal Advisers will bring essential knowledge of the range of post-16 and career opportunities to school pupils, their parents and teachers. Local managers from the Connexions Service will agree with schools how personal advisers operating on their premises will be deployed and managed. This agreement will show how careers advice and guidance will be delivered in the institution, and ensure that students know which individuals can offer advice which is impartial.

University Funding

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment which universities have received support from the (a) Higher Education Reach Out to Business and Community Fund, (b) the University Challenge Fund and (c) Science Enterprise Challenge Initiative; what is the value of each award; and for what period of time each award has been allocated. [126585]

Mr. Wicks: The following tables provide details of support universities and colleges have received from the (a) Higher Education Reach Out to Business and Community Fund, (b) the University Challenge Fund and (c) Science Enterprise Challenge Initiative.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what criteria are used to assess the success of the Higher Education Reach Out to Business & Community Fund awards. [126586]

Mr. Wicks: The Higher Education Reach Out to Business and the Community Fund is a new fund. The first activities supported under the fund started in January this year. Annex B of the Higher Education Funding Council for England's invitation to bid (HEFCE Circular 99/40) provided details of the monitoring and evaluation arrangements. This document is available in the Library and on the Council's website.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he will reply substantively to the question from the hon. Member for Dudley, South (Ref. 122261). [126598]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 19 June 2000]: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer of 22 May 2000, Official Report, columns 332–33W.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many parliamentary questions were tabled to his Department between the 19 October 1999 and the 20 April 2000 which requested information, pursuant to his previous answers. [127444]

Mr. Wills: Thirty questions were tabled to the Department between these dates requesting information pursuant to replies given to Parliamentary questions.

Student Support (Disregards)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the disregard for bursaries and other payments for students against their assessment of income for the purpose of student support; and what plans he has to amend them. [126769]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 20 June 2000]: For the 2000–01 academic year, students can receive bursaries of up to £1,025 a year, plus any amount of other payments that are made for specific educational purposes, such as books and other equipment, before entitlement to support is affected. For most younger students other income of up to £840 a year is also disregarded. The sum disregarded is higher for most mature and independent students at £7,500 a year.

From 2001–02 we plan to change these arrangements to enable low-income students to retain in full the higher bursaries which some colleges are now intending to award, without losing any part of the support they receive for fees and the loan to which they are entitled. Further details will be announced in the Autumn.

Vocational Training

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will take steps to compensate students for the loss of tax relief on the costs of vocational training. [126807]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 21 June 2000]: The Government aim to widen participation in work-related learning by helping people overcome the financial barriers. New financial benefits for adult learners have been introduced through Individual Learning Accounts which will become available on learning starting from September. Individual Learning Accounts provide discounts of 20 per cent. on a wide range of work-related learning and discounts of 80 per cent. on a number of specified key courses in Information Technology and Maths. There is also a contribution of £150 towards the cost of learning for the first million people to use their Individual Learning Accounts. At the same time employers will receive tax relief on their contributions to their employees' learning costs and employees will not have to pay tax or national insurance on their employees' contributions.

Sure Start

Dr. Desmond Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the voluntary sector organisations involved in trailblazer Sure Start areas. [126878]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 21 June 2000]: I have been asked to reply.

Eleven of the 60 trailblazers are led by voluntary organisations. A total of 51 voluntary organisations are members of local Sure Start partnerships. Several of these are members of more than one local partnership. The organisations are as follows:

Class Sizes

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what the average class size was for classes taught by one teacher in (a) 1979 and (b) 1992, for (i) pupils in Key Stage 1, (ii) pupils in Key Stage 2, (iii) primary schools and (iv) secondary schools in each parliamentary constituency. [127211]

Ms Estelle Morris: The information is not held in the form requested. Information on class sizes by Parliamentary constituency is only available from 1996 onwards. Class size figures by key stage in maintained primary schools have only been collected since 1996.

Information on class sizes by Parliamentary constituency for January 2000 has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many children have been turned down for their first choice of school, as a result of the limit on infant class sizes set out in the School Standards and Framework Act 1998, who (a) have applied for a place at a denominational school, (b) have a sibling in that school, (c) are new to the area and (d) are in any other category. [127487]

Ms Estelle Morris: The Department does not hold this information. The admissions framework we have established aims to ensure that local admission arrangements accommodate parental preference wherever possible, but there have always been cases where this cannot be met. Our infant class size initiative, which is being pursued in such a way that popular schools are able to expand, enables more parents to obtain a place for their child at their preferred school. A net gain of 12,000 places at popular schools is being provided as a result of the policy.

We are well on course to deliver our pledge to limit infant classes to 30 pupils. £620 million is available to support the pledge, and allocations so far to Trafford LEA amount to some £2 million. This has helped to reduce the size of the average Key Stage 1 class in the Altrincham and Sale, West parliamentary constituency to 25.9. The figure in January 1997 was 29.6.

Correspondence

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire will receive a reply to his letter of 11 May on behalf of his constituent Mrs. Morgan. [127371]

Mr. Wills: A reply to the right hon. Member's letter was issued on 21 June.

Agricultural Wages Board

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received in favour of retaining the Agricultural Wages Board; and if he will make a statement. [127070]

Ms Quin: I have been asked to reply.

I refer to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Kettering (Mr. Sawford) on 12 June 2000, Official Report, column 456W.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Sex Offenders

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners subject to the provisions of the Sex Offenders Act 1997 have been released on the Home Detention Curfew Scheme to date; what offences they committed; what was the sentence (a) received and (b) served in each case; and if he will make a statement. [117718]

Mr. Straw [pursuant to his reply, 6 April 2000, c. 599–600W]: I stated that as of 3 April 2000, only one prisoner subject to the provisions of the Sex Offenders Act 1997 had been granted Home Detention Curfew. I was recently informed on 20 June that a second sex offender subject to the 1997 Act has been placed on the scheme.

The offender—a female aged 18 with no previous convictions—was convicted of indecent assault against a 14-year-old, and was sentenced to 12 months' imprisonment. She was considered as a candidate for Home Detention Curfew in view of the exceptional circumstance that she was imminently due to give birth. She had a suitable address with her mother and was judged at an enhanced risk assessment board to pose a low risk of reoffending. She was placed on the scheme on 5 August 1999 until her conditional release date of 30 August. She successfully completed the curfew and is not known to have been arrested, charged or convicted of any further offence since.

Under existing arrangements, sex offenders subject to the 1997 Act may be released only in exceptional circumstances and then only with the personal authorisation of the Director General of the Prison Service. In this case, as in the other case previously notified, I regret that this requirement was not followed by the establishment. Although I am satisfied in this particular case that there was no risk to the public, I have asked the Director General for a report into the circumstances of the release.

The original Prison Service Instruction which set out the Home Detention Curfew policy and procedures did not contain the requirement to seek the Director General's consent. Establishments were first informed of the requirement just before the scheme commenced, in a letter of 26 January 1999 from the then Director of Regimes. In October 1999, the Director General wrote to remind all establishments of the requirement, and in January 2000 a consolidated Prison Service Order which incorporated and highlighted the requirement.

In both these cases, the releases occurred last August, before the Director General's letter of reminder and the consolidated Prison Service Order. No sex offenders subject to the 1997 Act have been placed on the Home Detention Curfew scheme since, and I am confident that all establishments are now fully aware of the requirement to seek the consent of the Director General before allowing any such offender onto the scheme.

Under the amendment to the Criminal Justice and Court Services Bill, which the Government brought forward on 12 June 2000, sex offenders subject to the Sex Offenders Act 1997 will be excluded from the Home Detention Curfew scheme altogether.

Asylum Seekers

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what specifications have been drawn up to identify accommodation for asylum seekers under the Government's dispersal policy. [126436]

Mrs. Roche: Contracted providers from both the private and public sector were and are responsible for identifying suitable accommodation for asylum seekers. They work to specifications drawn up by the National Asylum Support Service (NASS) in consultation with other organisations, including the Refugee Council.

The requirements for the provision of accommodation are set out in model contracts for the provision of accommodation and related services to asylum seekers—one for private sector providers and one for local authority regional consortia. I am arranging for copies of these to be placed in the Library.

Criminal Injuries (Compensation)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many victims of crime have been paid compensation by the Criminal Injuries Board (a) in 2000 and (b) in 1999; and how many suffered deductions because they sought to defend themselves when assaulted and were thereby deemed to have contributed to their injuries. [126569]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The figures relate to awards made by both the Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority (which administers the tariff-based scheme effective from 1 April 1996) and the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board (which administered the old scheme effective prior to 1 April 1996).

Awards under the schemes are unlikely to be reduced in the case of a blameless victim who acted entirely in self-defence. A reduction on grounds of conduct is made when it is considered that the applicant's own behaviour contributed to the incident in which he or she was injured.

	1998–99	1999–2000
Total cases settled	74,859	75,917
Total money awards	40,164	39,700
Total cases rejected	34,695	36,217
Total reduced awards	2,453	2,711
Reduced due to conduct	732	792
Rejected due to conduct	4,123	3,838

The reductions and rejections due to conduct are included in the totals. The total number of reduced awards is also included in the money awards total.

Anti-social Behaviour

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what response he has received from Gedling Borough Council on improvements to the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 following his letter to local authorities on 15 October 1999 and subsequent requests for councils' views on tackling anti-social behaviour. [126789]

Mr. Charles Clarke: None.

Immigration

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in the case of Mr. A. S. A (reference A1012793/8(s)). [126962]

Mrs. Roche: Mr. A. S. A.'s application has now been resolved and the Integrated Casework Directorate wrote to him on 20 June.

Written Questions

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many written parliamentary questions tabled to his Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000 have not received substantive answers on the grounds that the information is (a) not held centrally, (b) not held in the form requested and (c) not available. [127099]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 21 June 2000]: My Department answered a total of 2,751 written parliamentary questions between 19 October 1999–20 April 2000. Sixty non-substantive replies were given to hon. and right hon. Members where information was 'not held centrally', one where the information was 'not held in the form requested' and 20 where the information was 'not available'.

It is my practice to provide as full a reply as possible to all parliamentary questions, and to provide all relevant information even where that specifically requested is not available.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions he has deposited papers in the Library in response to parliamentary questions tabled to his Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000. [127438]

Mr. Straw: I deposited papers in the Library in response to parliamentary questions on 150 occasions between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000.

Humberside Police

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the 5,000 extra police he has announced will be allocated to Humberside Police Force; and how many are already in post in Humberside. [127393]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Humberside have been allocated 74 additional recruits from the Crime Fighting Fund: 47 in 2000–01 and 27 in 2001–02.

All forces in England and Wales have been asked to profile their planned recruitment over the 12 months of 2000–01. Based on the profile provided by Humberside police, the table shows the number of officers recruited, or planned to be recruited, by Humberside police that will be deemed to be Crime Fighting Fund officers.

[1] 1979 to 1997 figures are for calendar years, and 1997–98 and 1998–99 are years ending 31 March.
[2] Figures up to 1997–98 are based on the recorded crime counting rules in use up to 31 March 1998. They also exclude offences of criminal damage under £20.
[3] The figures are based on the number of crimes recorded in the financial year using the expanded offence coverage and revised counting rules which came into effect on 1 April 1998, and including all offences of criminal damage. Owing to these changes, these clear-up rates cannot be compared directly with previous years.

Police Officers

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of police officers in each police force in England and Wales and in total on (a) 31 March 1979, (b) 31 March 1987 and (c) 31 March in each year since 1992. [127212]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information requested for March 1979 and March 1987 is set out in the table. For 1992 and subsequent years, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Ryedale (Mr. Greenway) on 10 November 1999, Official Report, column 590W.

Compulsory Voting

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received concerning the introduction of compulsory voting; and if he will make a statement. [127831]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We have recently been sent a copy of a Fabian Society pamphlet making the case for compulsory voting. In addition, we continue to receive a small number of letters both in favour of and against compulsory voting.

We have no plans to introduce compulsory voting.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Public Lending Right

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what recent representations he has received concerning the level of remuneration received by authors through public lending right. [127824]

Mr. Chris Smith: I have seen the case for increased funding produced by the Public Lending Right Advisory Committee; I have also received around 160 letters, mainly from authors via their MPs. I am considering these representations carefully as part of the Department's current spending review.

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what was the value of his Department's funding of public lending right in (a) 1983 and (b) 2000 in (i) cash and (ii) real terms. [127828]

Mr. Chris Smith: Public Lending Right (PLR) received grant-in-aid funding of £2 million in 1983–84, which would equal £3.921 million in real terms. My Department provided funding of £5.15 million for PLR in 2000–01.

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what proportion of library book withdrawals is represented by children's books; and if he will make a statement. [127826]

Mr. Chris Smith: Information about the number of book withdrawals is not collected centrally. The annual CIPFA Public Library Statistics, which are held in the House Library and are likely to be available in the larger public library reference libraries, provide information about the total bookstock, including children's books, at 31 March each year. At 31 March 1999, children's bookstock was 19.3 million compared with 19.2 million at 31 March 1998.

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what proportion of his departmental budget was spent on Public Lending Right in (a) 1997, (b) 1998, (c) 1999 and (d) 2000. [127827]

Mr. Chris Smith: The following table shows the proportion of the Department's budget allocation to Public Lending Right as grant-in-aid:

Financial year	DCMS PES total £000	Public Lending Right grant in aid £000	PLR grant in aid as a proportion of DCMS PES total Percentage
1997–98	904,790	4,921	0.54
1998–99	924,478	5,000	0.54
1999–2000	1,002,139	5,051	0.50
2000–01	1,014,886	5,150	0.50

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much Public Lending Right money was paid to authors of children's books in the last year for which figures are available; and what proportion this represented of total spending on Public Lending Right. [127825]

Mr. Chris Smith: The Public Lending Right (PLR) computer system does not break down payments to authors by the type of book that they write. However, children's books represented 28 per cent. of registered books borrowed last year, an increase of 30 per cent. in the last ten years. It is therefore estimated that 28 per cent. of payments went to children's writers, which in the last payment round would have amounted to £1.2 million—23 per cent. of the whole PLR fund.

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what recent discussions he has had with the Chancellor of the Exchequer regarding the level of funding available for Public Lending Right payments. [127823]

Mr. Chris Smith: We have no scope at present to raise further the allocation to Public Lending Right (PLR) beyond the increases already announced as part of PLR's current three-year funding agreement. However, we have agreed to consider the case for an increase in funding as part of our current Spending Review which will deal with funding for the next three years.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Debt Relief Programme

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the countries which have had their debts to the United Kingdom cancelled as part of the debt relief programme for the poorest countries; and what the cost of the programme to the UK has been to date. [126970]

Clare Short: To date, the Government have provided approximately £450 million on export credit debt relief to the following countries, which are classified as Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC):

Benin;
Bolivia;
Burkina Faso;
Central African Republic;
Cameroon;
Cote d'Ivoire;
Ethiopia;
Guyana;
Mali;
Mauritania;
Mozambique;
Nicaragua;
Niger;
Senegal;
Sierra Leone;
Tanzania;
Togo;
Uganda;

Vietnam;
Yemen; and Zambia.

These countries, along with the rest of the HIPC countries, will have the majority of their debt cancelled when they qualify under the revised HIPC framework. In addition, the Government are unilaterally providing 100 per cent. relief for qualifying HIPCs on any remaining export credit debt.

So far, Bolivia, Mauritania, Mozambique, Tanzania and Uganda have reached Decision Point, the first milestone under the enhanced HIPC framework at which debt relief starts to flow. Between them, these countries still owe the Export Credits Guarantee Department some £140 million. This will be cancelled when they complete the HIPC process.

Aid debts to the poorest countries have already been cancelled.

Sexual and Reproductive Health Projects

Ms McCafferty: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to her answer of 23 May 2000, Official Report, column 408W, on sexual and reproductive health projects, what proportion of the UK bilateral aid contributions for reproductive health care for the years (a) 1997, (b) 1998 and (c) 1999 were for (i) HIV/AIDS and (ii) family planning and reproductive health. [127214]

Clare Short: In many cases it is not practical to distinguish between the sexual and the reproductive health/family planning elements. There is also often no clear distinction between assisting with work in HIV/AIDS and in other sexual health issues. However, the following is an approximate breakdown of my Department's bilateral contributions to health/family planning and HIV/AIDS in 1997–99:

£ million

	Reproductive health/ family planning	HIV/AIDS
1997	38	15
1998	42	16
1999	40	17

SOCIAL SECURITY

Vibration White Finger

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many men in South Wales were diagnosed by his Department and agencies as suffering from vibration induced white finger in (a) 1997, (b) 1998, (c) 1999 and (d) 2000 to date. [126655]

Mr. Bayley: I refer my hon. Friend to the written answer I gave my hon. Friend on 14 June 2000, Official Report, column 651W.

Winter Fuel Payments

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how he identified the two million men aged between 60 and 64 years whom he deemed likely to be newly eligible for winter fuel payments resulting from the European Court ruling. [126875]

Angela Eagle: We do not hold up to date records for all of those who do not receive any pension or benefit at the moment—especially men aged 60–64 who have no need to contact the Department. Therefore, to ensure that the right money is paid to the right person in respect of each year a Winter Fuel Payment is due, it was necessary to develop a claims process.

We wrote to around 24,000 people in April who had already registered their details with the Department, enclosing a claim form for completion. During May and early June we also wrote to around 1.7 million newly eligible people who we could identify through the departmental central index. Again, in each case we enclosed a claim form and invited a claim.

For those who we are not able to identify, our information and advertising campaign will continue to help ensure that they are fully aware of how to claim. In addition, people can download claim forms from the Department's own website www.dss.gov.uk or they can obtain claim forms on request from the Winter Fuel Payment helpline.

Pensions

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the amount of pension which would be received on retirement by (a) a person who leaves school in 2000–01, who earns average earnings throughout their working life and who remains a member of the state pension scheme throughout, and (b) a man and (c) a woman, who leaves school in 2000–01, who earns average earnings through his or her working life, and who immediately takes out a stakeholder pension into which he or she puts only the value of the National Insurance rebates. [126628]

Mr. Rooker: The information is in the table. The figures are in 1999 earnings terms. In 1999 price terms the figures would be more than double the amounts shown.

Estimated basic and compulsory second tier pension for someone on average earnings throughout their working life and who reaches pensionable age in 2050

	Basic pension	Additional pension	Total pension
All—State scheme (a)	31.00	56.00	87.00
All—Stakeholder	31.00	71.00	102.00
Man—State scheme	31.00	57.00	88.00
Man—Stakeholder (b)	31.00	73.00	103.00
Woman—State scheme	31.00	55.00	86.00
Woman—Stakeholder (c)	31.00	67.00	98.00

Notes:
1. Figures, which are in 1999 earnings terms, are rounded to the nearest £ and may not sum as a result.
2. The estimates are based on average earnings of (i) all full-time employees; (ii) all male full-time employees; and (iii) all female full-time employees (whose average earnings are 74 per cent. of the average earnings of male employees).
3. The estimates are based on a person beginning work at 16 and working for 49 years until age 65.
4. The estimates for stakeholder pension schemes are based on the amount of state scheme pension foregone, which determines the level of at which the National Insurance rebates are set by the Government Actuary's Department. However, when the State Second Pension becomes a flat-rate scheme for those who remain in it, the rebates will continue to be earnings-related, and so will be based on the state scheme pension which would be foregone if the scheme were fully earnings-related.

5. The final amount from a funded stakeholder pension will depend on investment returns, market performance and annuity rates oat pensionable age, together with the value of any voluntary contributions. (Annuity rates for a rebate-only stakeholder pension will be the same for both men and women).

6. The estimates are based on the Department's Lifepen model and the following assumptions:

Stakeholder pensions state April 2001; State Second Pension starts April 2002; State Second Pension becomes flat-rate from April 2006; earnings grow 1.5 per cent. a year faster than prices; basic State pension is uprated in line with prices.

Widows' Benefit

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many widowers have applied for compensation following the recent European Court of Human Rights ruling on Widows' Benefit. [127325]

Angela Eagle: We are aware of 13 such applications including the two cases on which the European Court of Human Rights have published judgments. These two cases have been struck out following acceptance of the Government's offer by way of friendly settlement.

Recycled Waste

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 19 June 2000, Official Report, column 87W, on recycled waste, what plans he has to increase the percentage of paper waste recycled; and what percentage of non-paper waste produced by his Department is (a) re-used and (b) recycled. [127687]

Mr. Bayley: The Department in conjunction with its estates partners is working towards recycling all recyclable paper. Information on non-paper waste is not available but waste baselines are being developed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Administrative Services Vote

Mrs. Roe: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will make a statement on the proposal to set up an Audit Committee for the Administrative Services Vote. [127789]

Mr. Kirkwood: Among the conclusions of the Braithwaite Review of Management Services which reported to the Commission in June 1999 was a recommendation (paragraphs 15.69 to 15.75 of the Braithwaite Report) that the House should establish an Audit Committee with the aim of improving the process of internal audit and review, and providing support to the Clerk of the House in his responsibilities as Accounting Officer.

As part of their continuing consideration of Braithwaite recommendations, on 15 May 2000 the House of Commons Commission formally constituted the Audit Committee, with the following terms of reference:

to have general oversight of the work of internal audit and review, with particular emphasis on promoting economy, efficiency and effectiveness, on value-for-money studies, and on risk assessment and control assurance;

to receive and consider reports from the Internal Review Service, together with management letters and other external audit material;

to advise the Accounting Officer in the exercise of his responsibilities; to consider and recommend to the Accounting Officer the internal review programme; to encourage best financial practice, use of resources and governance in the House administration; and to report annually, the report to be published with the Commission's Annual Report.

The Commission also appointed members of the Committee, along the lines recommended in the Braithwaite Report, as follows:

Two Members of the Commission:

The right hon. Member for North-West Hampshire (Sir G. Young) (Chairman)

The hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood)

The Clerk of the House:

Mr. William McKay, CB

The Director of Finance and Administration:

Mr. Andrew Walker

A member from outside the House:

Sir Thomas Legg, KCB, QC, formerly Permanent Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department.

The Committee held its first meeting on 20 June. Its annual Report will be published with the Annual Report of the House of Commons Commission.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Police Service

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what contacts he has had with the Quebec authorities on instances of a police service changing its name for operational purposes, but retaining its previous name in the description of the police service. [127662]

Mr. Ingram: None. Neither the Secretary of State nor I have had any contact with the Quebec authorities regarding police name changes. But I have made inquiries through the British High Commission in Ottawa as a result of the contribution made by the right hon. and learned Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard) during the Opposition Day debate on 6 April. A copy of my resulting letter of 9 May to the right hon. and learned Gentleman was placed in the Library of the House.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

New Technologies

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if it is his policy that the legal framework of internet transmission and caching services for new technologies, with particular reference to Wireless Application Protocol and web TV, will be protected in the UK legislation incorporating the EU Electronic Commerce Directive by ensuring that, in addition to the limitations specified in Articles 12 to 15, the intermediary only becomes liable for illegal material selected or modified during the transmission process when the said transmission alters the integrity of the material in question, in line with recital 43 of the Directive. [125365]

Ms Hewitt: National legislation implementing the E-Commerce Directive will ensure that the liability of intermediaries is limited in accordance with Articles 12 to 15 of the Directive, and takes account of the Recitals of the Directive. The Government intend to consult widely on the options for implementing the directive later in 2000.

Mobile Phone Transmitter Masts

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many mobile phone transmitter masts there are in the UK; how many carry equipment from more than one mobile phone company; and how many are used exclusively by one company. [126411]

Ms Hewitt: This information is not held centrally. I shall write once the necessary information has been obtained.

Cryptography

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many times (a) ministers and (b) officials in his Department have held meetings with the United States Special Envoy for Cryptography since 20 October 1999 on (i) encryption and (ii) other issues; what were the dates and locations of each of these meetings; and what other (1) British and (2) United States Government departments took part in each meeting. [127130]

Ms Hewitt: Since October 1999 neither Ministers nor officials have met the United States Special Envoy for Cryptography on encryption or other issues.

Corruption and Bribery

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what formal procedures the ECGD has for screening for evidence of corruption when underwriting contracts. [127081]

Mr. Caborn [holding answer 20 June 2000]: ECGD requires applicants for cover to provide details of the amount of commission payable under their contracts including to whom the repayment arrangements are made. Cases are investigated where the level of commission appears excessive for the particular contract or the payment procedures appear unusual. Cover can be refused where the exporter cannot provide proper justification for the levels of commission involved.

Nuclear Safety (Transfrontier Co-operation)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what actions he has taken in respect of recommendation 71 (1999) on model agreements on transfrontier co-operation in the field of nuclear safety, agreed by the Congress of Local and Regional Authorities in Europe in November 1999. [127571]

Mrs. Liddell: The Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe considered Recommendation 71 (1999), "Model Agreements on Transfrontier Co-operation in the Field of Nuclear Safety", at its meeting on 3 May. It concluded that nuclear power-related issues did not fall within the competence of the Council of Europe and that Model Agreements in this field should therefore not be appended to the European Outline Convention on Transfrontier Co-operation between Territorial Communities or Authorities.

Energy Policy

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will publish a draft of the Renewables Obligation statutory instrument. [127478]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government plan to publish the details of a proposed Order in the autumn, as a basis for consultation.

Internet Access

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the measures the Telecommunications Regulator has taken to reduce the cost of internet access. [127630]

Ms Hewitt: The Government believe that the best way to ensure sustainable lower costs for internet access is through promoting competition. Through measures such as the introduction of an effective Calls & Access product and Carrier Pre-Selection Oftel is promoting competition to drive down general call charges. For narrow band internet access Oftel has promoted greater flexibility in internet tariffing through the introduction of the Number Translation Service (NTS) formula that allowed the call origination charged to be shared with other operators who also carry the call. Oftel has recently made a determination that requires BT to provide a flat rate internet interconnection product to competing operators. Oftel has negotiated a range of schemes offering reduced price internet access for schools.

For broadband access, Oftel is requiring BT to open up its local loop to other operators so that they can compete in the provision of broadband access. Also, once BT has installed ADSL on local lines, it will be required to give other operators access to its upgraded system on non-discriminatory terms. A recent study produced for Oftel showed that of the five large markets studied the UK had on average the lowest prices for residential access at both peak and off-peak times.

Community Finance Initiatives

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the community finance initiatives operating in England and Wales; what consultation has taken place regarding the Phoenix fund; what criteria must be met for CFI's applying to administer the funds that make up the Phoenix fund; and if he will make a statement. [127839]

Ms Hewitt: There is no single definition of CFIs and therefore no comprehensive list of those operating in England and Wales. CFIs can take a variety of forms, including community loan funds, community investment trusts and micro-finance providers. The largest category of CFIs presently operating in the UK is credit unions, of which there are over 450.

The Phoenix Fund addresses certain recommendations of the Policy Action Team Report on Enterprise and Financial Exclusion, which was the subject of widespread consultation. Although no formal consultation has taken place on the Phoenix Fund, officials did hold extensive discussions with interested parties before drawing up the recently published bidding guidance for organisations wishing to apply for Phoenix Fund Support.

Copies of the bidding guidance are held in the Library of the House.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many of the written parliamentary questions tabled to his Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April have not received substantive answers, for the reason that the information is (a) not held centrally, (b) not held in the form requested and (c) not available. [127679]

Mr. Caborn: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave on 23 June 2000, Official Report, column 313W.

Organisation Internationale de Métrologie Légale

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what standard for the determination of hydrocarbon oil bulk volume is recommended by the Organisation Internationale de Métrologie Légale; [127363]

(2) if the recommendations of the Organisation Internationale de Métrologie Légale for standard temperature measurement are adopted throughout the marketing chain for the sale of petrol and diesel. [127364]

Mrs. Liddell: OIML publishes documents which mainly take the form of International Recommendations which cover many aspects of measurement of hydrocarbon oil bulk volume, and in particular Recommendation R117 covers Measuring Systems for Liquids other than Water. They do not lay down requirements for standard temperature measurement. They do (as appropriate to the context) specify provisions for conversion devices for temperature compensation. However, these are for optional application, as OIML member states may decide. They have not been made a requirement of weights and measures legislation in the UK.

Standard temperature accounting is not adopted throughout the marketing chain for sales of petrol and diesel. The National Weights and Measures Laboratory commissioned a study on the Temperature Compensation of Liquid Fuels which produced several recommendations. These recommendations have been made the subject of an industry consultation. The responses to this consultation are currently being analysed by NWML.

Assisted Areas Map

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much money has been received by the Highlands and Islands as a result of being included on the Assisted Areas Map in each of the last three financial years; and what proportion of this funding has been received by Inverness. [127012]

Dr. Reid: I have been asked to reply.

Responsibility for aid provided to areas as a result of being included on the Assisted Areas Map in Scotland is a matter for the Scottish Executive.

HEALTH

Hospital Cleaning

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure that hospital wards are kept clean and tidy at all times and that bed linen is changed frequently and whenever soiled. [124219]

Mr. Denham: National Health Service trust chief executives are responsible for standards of cleanliness in hospitals. All acute trusts have the assistance of an infection control team. The Infection Control Nurses Association and the Association of Domestic Managers have published "Standards for Environmental Cleanliness in Hospitals" which NHS Estates has distributed to NHS trusts.

In wards it is for the qualified nurse responsible for the patient's care to decide when a linen change is necessary, but this should occur whenever it is soiled.

The NHS controls assurance framework published in November 1999 includes a standard on infection control in NHS trusts. A section on cleanliness is being developed.

Both clinical and organisational systems for monitoring and assuring standards of care will be looked at annually as part of NHS performance monitoring arrangements. The standards for hospital cleanliness and infection control will be subject to independent inspections by the Commission for Health Improvement and the Audit Commission.

National Duplicate Registration Initiative

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the work of the National Duplicate Registration Initiative; and what his estimate is of the number of ghost patients in each health authority area removed from local medical lists since its establishment and the consequential saving to the NHS. [125665]

Mr. Denham: The National Duplicate Registration Initiative exercise is being carried out as part of the annual audit of health authorities, under statutory powers available to the Audit Commission. To date some 16,000 duplicate registrations have been identified and removed from general practitioners' lists. There are no consequential savings to the NHS because the payment

GPs receive per patient (capitation fee) comes from within the profession's total pay entitlement. Removing list inflation means that payments will be redistributed within the profession on a more legitimate basis but there will be no overall saving.

Clinical Waste Disposal

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to implement a London-wide strategy for clinical waste disposal. [126083]

Mr. Denham: There are no plans, at present, for a London-wide strategy for clinical waste disposal. However, I am informed that this will be reviewed by National Health Service Estates, as part of their facilities management agenda.

Meat Inspection

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans he has to meet Commissioner Byrne regarding the future basis of meat inspection; [R] [126195]

(2) what discussions he has had with his counterparts in other EU countries regarding the future basis of meat inspection; [R] [126194]

(3) what representations he has made to the European Commission regarding the future basis of meat inspection. [R] [126196]

Ms Stuart: My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture met Commissioner Byrne on 6 March and pressed hard for a change in meat inspection arrangements to one based on risk assessment. The Commissioner acknowledged that a review of the legislation was overdue. The subject was also raised last year at a number of European Union Agriculture Councils. Since then this has become a matter for the Food Standards Agency and the chairman of the agency has also had a meeting with Commissioner Byrne.

In line with the recommendations of the Pooley report and the Government's action plan for farming, we are continuing to press the Commission to bring forward proposals for updating Community legislation on meat hygiene to bring in a risk-based system of controls. I understand that the first of these, a new Regulation on hygiene, is expected to be issued later this month. This will set out operator responsibilities, including the implementation of hazard analysis and critical control points in abattoirs.

Percutaneous Vertebroplasty Operation

Ms Atherton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the effectiveness of the percutaneous vertebroplasty operation; and if he will make a statement. [126266]

Mr. Denham: The Department is not funding any research into the effectiveness of the percutaneous vertebroplasty operation. Priorities for departmental research and development support for the development of policy are determined through discussion with policy colleagues, the Departmental Research Committee and Ministers. In the National Health Service research and development programme, priorities take account of widespread consultation with those using, delivering and managing services, within a framework overseen by the Central Research and Development Committee for the NHS. In all cases, priorities for our budgets reflect analysis of the burden of disease, potential benefits, our priorities and take account of the responsibilities and work of other funders.

General Medical Council

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce legislation to remove from the General Medical Council its current responsibilities for regulating the conduct and monitoring the competence of members of the medical profession. [126414]

Mr. Denham: We have no plans at present to remove functions from the General Medical Council. Indeed, we have recently consulted on proposals to strengthen its fitness to practise procedures and the Order amending the Medical Act 1983 will be laid before Parliament soon.

The General Medical Council is undertaking a "Structural and Legal Review" of its fitness to practise procedures. The GMC must not delay in publishing its proposals for modernisation. We will need to consider how far they meet the rising expectations of the public and Parliament for fundamental changes to the way the GMC deals with doctors who do not meet the expected standards of conduct and performance set by the profession.

TV Advertisements

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many television advertisements have been commissioned by his Department since 1 May 1997; and, of these, how many were provided with closed caption subtitling. [126897]

Ms Stuart: The Department has commissioned 35 advertisements which have been transmitted on television since 1 May 1997. 29 of these have been provided with closed caption subtitling.

Information Campaigns

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what national health information campaigns his Department (a) ran in (i) 1997–98, (ii) 1998–99 and (iii) 1999–2000 and (b) will run in 2000–01; and what issues have been covered by, and what the costs are, for each campaign. [126101]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 19 June 2000]: The Department runs a number of publicity campaigns which have provided information for all. The table shows the areas covered, financial years and the expenditure to date.

Expenditure

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for (a) Great Britain and (b) each health authority area, the expenditure on health per head of population, expressed in real terms, for (i) 1979, (ii) 1990 and (iii) each year since 1995; and if he will make a statement. [126588]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 19 June 2000]: Expenditure on health per head of population for England from 1995–96 to 1998–99, and for each health authority area in England from 1996–97 to 1998–99, expressed in real terms, is shown in the tables. Information relating to Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland is a matter for the devolved Administrations.

Information on a comparable basis is not available for England in 1979 and 1990 and by health authority area for 1979, 1990 and 1995–96.

1. Figures for 1996–97 and 1997–98 have been shown in real terms, with 1998–99 as the baseline, using the GDP deflator.

2. Expenditure is taken from HA Annual Accounts which are prepared on a resource basis and therefore differ from cash allocations in each year (These are not the total amounts spent on healthcare. General Dental Services expenditure is separately accounted for and cannot be analysed by health authority over the three years). Since 1997–98 drugs expenditure has been mainly accounted for by the Prescription Pricing Authority. For consistency figures have been reduced by the amount of non-cash limited prescribing expenditure accounted for by the health authority in each year.)

GPs

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what the average cost was of one hour of a GP's working time, excluding seniority payments but including supporting staff and premises, in (a) 1970, (b) 1980, (c) 1990 and (d) 1999 at constant prices; [126829]

(2) what the average cost of a GP was, excluding seniority payments but including supporting staff and premises, in (a) 1970, (b) 1980, (c) 1990 and (d) 1999. [126749]

Mr. Denham: The latest available data are for the financial year 1998–99. Expenditure on General Medical Services and Personal Medical Services per general practitioner unrestricted principle or equivalent was as follows:

Year	£
1970–71	7,808
1980–81	28,608
1990–91	61,232
1998–99	101,191

Expenditure at 1998–99 prices (based on gross domestic product and GDP deflators) was as follows:

Year	£
1970–71	68,710
1980–81	67,035
1990–91	78,868
1998–99	101,191

Expenditure per GP in 1998–99 excluding seniority payments was £99,540. Seniority payments are not centrally identifiable for the previous years. Information on GPs' working time is not available for the years in question.

District Nurses

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the cost was of the district nurse service in (a) 1970, (b) 1980, (c) 1990 and (d) 1999; and how many were employed in each of those years. [126827]

Mr. Denham: Numbers of district nurses employed in the service are shown in the table. The cost of the district nurse service in this series of years cannot be disaggregated from general expenditure on community nursing and medicine.

Dental Services

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps the Government are taking to increase the number of NHS dentists (a) nationally and (b) in the North-West; and if he will make a statement. [127069]

Ms Stuart: There are currently 17,821 dentists working in the General Dental Services in England and 2,261 in the north west region, more than ever before. Problems have arisen because more dentists are devoting more time to private dental work, working part-time and there are some areas where dentists seem reluctant to practice. We have accepted the Doctors' and Dentists' Review Body recommendation for a commitment scheme rewarding loyalty to the National Health Service. The scheme will cost £17 million per annum for England. The personal dental services pilot scheme, including dental access centres, is encouraging health authorities to be locally responsive and contribute to make NHS dentistry more widely available. Investing in dentistry saw £10 million in grants given to NHS dentists in return for promises of up to 900,000 new NHS registrations. Further measures will be contained in our dental strategy, due to be published this summer.

Note:

Expenditure is taken from health authority annual accounts which are prepared on a resource basis and therefore differ from cash allocations in each year. (These are not the total amounts spent on healthcare. General Dental Services expenditure is separately accounted for and cannot be analysed by health authority over the three years). Since 1997–98 drugs expenditure has been mainly accounted for by the Prescription Pricing Authority. For consistency figures have been reduced by the amount of non-cash limited prescribing expenditure accounted for by the health authority in each year.

Parkinson's Disease

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the guidance given to medical practitioners by the NICE with regard to the treatment of Parkinson's Disease. [127297]

Mr. Denham: At present National Institute for Clinical Excellence has not issued any guidance to medical practitioners with regard to the treatment of Parkinson's Disease. However, we are currently considering a number of possible additional topics for appraisal by NICE during the remainder of the current year and in later years. Announcements will be made in due course.

Child Abuse

Dr. Desmond Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of child abuse (a) allegations and (b) convictions there were in the five years (i) before and (ii) after the changes in court procedures following the implementation of the Children Act 1989. [127548]

Mr. Hutton: The Children Act 1989 was implemented in October 1991. However, although the Children Act 1989 changed the private and public functions of the civil law relating to the welfare of children, it did not change the criminal law in respect of offences against children.

In terms of allegations of child abuse, no statistics are available on the number of referrals to social services departments for the five-year period (1986–87 to 1990–91), prior to the implementation of the Act. However, "Child Protection: Messages from Research" (Department of Health, 1995) indicates that there are about 160,000 cases referred to social services departments per annum.

Statistics relating to convictions for offences against children, as set out in Section 1 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933, are shown in the table.

The number of persons convicted at all courts under the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 (Section 1), England and Wales, 1987–1996, is as follows:

Offence: Cruelty or neglect of children

Year	Number
1987	143
1988	164
1989	211
1990	247
1991	234
1992	208
1993	205
1994	236
1995	302
1996	293

Medication

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will review the obligations on general practitioners to carry out tests and examinations as recommended by drug manufacturers (a) prior to placing patients on medication and (b) during treatment; [127482]

(2) if he will review the obligations on general practitioners and chemists to provide patients with dosage for prescription-only medicines. [127481]

Ms Stuart: General practitioners should carry out a proper assessment before initiating a patient on any treatment and thereafter review the patient's treatment at regular intervals.

The British National Formulary, which is issued twice a year to all GPs and pharmacists, recommends that the dose and the dose frequency should be stated on a prescription, which will then be put on the label by the pharmacist.

Hospital Readmissions

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients in each NHS region were readmitted to hospital within one month of their discharge in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [127165]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 22 June 2000]: Information on the number of patients readmitted to hospital within one month of discharge was originally published in June 1999 in "Quality and Performance in the NHS: Clinical Indicators, Technical Supplement". This document contains data for 1996–97 and 1997–98 and is available in the Library.

Primary Care Trusts

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many primary care groups have made representations against conversion into primary care trusts. [127488]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 23 June 2000]: All 22 primary care trusts (PCTs) already operating or announced enjoy the full support of their predecessor primary care groups (PCGs).

We have made clear that the move to PCT status should be locally driven and determined by the preferences of the PCG(s) and other local stakeholders. Any proposal which enjoys PCG support automatically goes to public consultation and PCGs may also express a view on PCT proposals prepared by others.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many of the written parliamentary questions tabled to his Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000 have not received substantive answers, citing as the reason that the information is (a) not held centrally, (b) not held in the form requested and (c) not available. [127434]

Ms Stuart: Out of the 2,797 Parliamentary Questions tabled to the Department in the period between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000, we were unable to give substantive answers to 82 because the information was either not held centrally or not available. Substantive answers to a further two Questions could not be given because the information was not held in the form requested.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many parliamentary questions were tabled to his Department between the 19 October 1999 and the 20 April, which requested information, pursuant to his previous answers. [127672]

Ms Stuart: Of the 2,797 questions tabled to this Department in the period between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000, 79 were pursuant to previous answers.

Cystic Fibrosis

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) children and (b) adults in (i) Coventry, (ii) the West Midlands and (iii) the United Kingdom receive treatment for cystic fibrosis and conditions resulting from cystic fibrosis. [127449]

Mr. Denham: It is estimated from the incidence data in the Morbidity Study of General Practice for 1991–92 and data from the mid-1992 census estimates, that 3,725 patients in England and Wales consulted their general practice with cystic fibrosis. These figures are the latest available. This information cannot be used to estimate the number of general practice consultations in the West Midlands region or Coventry.

The figures in the table show the number of hospital admissions in 1998–99 in Coventry, the West Midlands region and England, where the primary diagnosis was cystic fibrosis. Information about hospital admissions in Northern Ireland, Scotland and Wales is a matter for the devolved administrations.

Area of residence	Children (Aged 0–17)	Adults (18+)	Total
Coventry	24	7	31
West Midlands	460	257	717
England (area of treatment)	5,065	4,109	9,164

The databases available to the Department do not record whether one particular condition has resulted from another, and figures about other conditions caused by cystic fibrosis are therefore not available.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what advice he has issued to hospitals on dealing with patients who receive treatment as children but have it discontinued when they reach adulthood due to insufficient resources; [127445]

(2) what provision is made for young adults with cystic fibrosis when they cease to qualify for treatment in children's wards; [127447]

(3) if he will make a statement on the treatment received by people with cystic fibrosis when they cease to qualify for treatment in children's wards. [127446]

Mr. Denham: For health care to be effective National Health Service commissioners will need to ensure that there are clear pathways to provide a continuity of care taking patients from childhood, into adolescence and beyond. This is particularly important in chronic conditions such as cystic fibrosis which have benefited from advances in medical science and where patients now survive into adulthood. The new arrangements for commissioning specialised services will develop a more systematic approach to commissioning that will ensure there are properly co-ordinated arrangements for the delivery of services for all cystic fibrosis patients.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what resources are available for the treatment of cystic fibrosis and conditions resulting from cystic fibrosis for (a) children and (b) adults in (i) Coventry, (ii) the West Midlands and (iii) the United Kingdom; [127450]

(2) what assessment he has made of a reasonable distance to travel for treatment for people with cystic fibrosis; [127448]

Mr. Denham: Patients with cystic fibrosis and conditions resulting from cystic fibrosis have access to an extensive range of diagnostic and remedial resources both in hospitals and in primary care. For some treatments patients may need access to specialist skills or equipment that are best provided in a smaller number of centres where clinicians can regularly see a large number of patients. In these circumstances patients may need to travel to gain access to that expertise. The Hospital Travel Costs Scheme, which is part of the National Health Service Low Income Scheme, is available to assist those who are in receipt of a qualifying benefit.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Crop Contamination

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what powers his Department has to prevent crop contamination. [123920]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 5 June 2000]: In respect of possible transfer of pollen from GM crops to conventional or organic crops, my Department has wide powers under the Environmental Protection Act 1990 to prevent the marketing or planting of GMOs without a valid consent.

The Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment assesses the safety implications of all forms of possible gene transfer from GM crops and only those which present no adverse implications to public health or the environment are granted approval to be grown.

My Department has recently announced that checks for the presence of GM material will commence on imported conventional seed. In addition, the Ministry of Agriculture has launched a review of GM crop separation distances.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on which date he requested the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment Department to give advice on whether the crops of GM contaminated Hyola oilseed rape were safe for the environment, when he received the advice; and what it was. [124323]

Mr. Meacher: The information given by Advanta, at their meeting with officials from my Department and MAFF, on 17 April was extremely sketchy. At that stage, Advanta had been warned by the German authorities that some GM contamination in some supplies of seeds might have occurred. They did not at that stage know for sure whether a GM had been involved, or which GM it was, or which seed batches had been affected, to which countries those seed batches had been dispatched, or in which years. Advanta informed my Department at that time that they were initiating urgent inquires. However, it took until 10 May to obtain sufficient information, particularly on which GM was involved to be able to provide ACRE with a basis for their decision, and in some respects the investigation is still going on.

ACRE's advice is that there are no adverse implications for human health or the environment.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on what basis he and his advisers concluded that there was no environmental risk arising out of the contamination of Advanta rapeseeds. [124155]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 5 June 2000]: The first step was to identify the types of genetically modified seeds present in the affected batches of oil seed rape.

The affected seeds were in fact a well-known herbicide-tolerant rape line grown commercially in North America. This line has also been grown in field trials in the UK and there are currently 12 consents for field trials of these plants. On each occasion, the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment (ACRE) had considered a full dossier on information about the GM rapeseed and its possible environmental impact, before consent was granted.

Therefore, when ACRE were consulted about the Advanta seeds, they were able to give advice about the possible environmental risks from growing oilseed rape containing a small proportion of these seeds.

No-smoking Policy

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on (a) the effectiveness of his Department's no-smoking policy and (b) the proportion of his Department's offices that do not allow smoking. [125155]

Ms Beverley Hughes: My Department operates a no-smoking policy in all of its buildings with smoking permitted only in designated rooms. The policy is considered to be effective. My Department will review this policy when the Health and Safety Executive issues the new Approved Code of Practice on Smoking.

Combined Heat and Power

Dr. Brand: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will define the phrase quality combined heat and power plant in relation to the climate change levy in respect of the greenhouse industry. [125722]

Mr. Meacher: Good Quality combined heat and power is generation which delivers a high level of useful heat and electricity from the same fuel input. Good Quality CHP will achieve efficiencies significantly above those of conventional generation, where the waste heat is simply vented away.

I announced key decisions on the detailed methodology for assessing the quality of CHP, and the operation of the mechanism for assessing existing and proposed schemes, in my statement to the House on 17 May 2000, Official Report, columns 137–381. Use of the mechanism will be implemented by statutory orders under the Finance Bill currently under discussion.

The decisions follow consultation with operators and users of combined heat and power schemes, including those used in the greenhouse industry. The proposed CHP Quality Assurance programme provides a practical, reliable method for determining the quality of all sizes and types of CHP scheme for a range of purposes, including eligibility for exemption from the climate change levy.

Public Telephones and IT Kiosks

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) how long a local authority planning department has in which to object to the proposed installation of (a) telephone booths, (b) telephone boxes and (c) information kiosks; [126283]

(2) what planning powers are available to local authorities in respect of work by telecommunications operators to convert public telephones to IT kiosks. [126285]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Certain telecommunications operators licensed by the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry under the Telecommunications Act 1984 (the 1984 Act) are granted special rights to assist in the installation and maintenance of their systems. These powers, which are set out in Schedule 2 to the 1984 Act—the "Telecommunications Code"—are further governed by provisions in operators' licences and Town and Country Planning legislation, which impose exceptions and conditions on the use of these powers.

Under the Town and Country Planning (General Permitted Development) Order 1995, as amended, (GPDO) code system operators have permitted development rights for the installation, alteration or replacement of a range of telecommunication apparatus.

As regards the installation of public call boxes, which include telephone booths and telephone boxes, these PDRs are subject to a prior approval procedure under the GPDO. Operators must give the local planning authority the opportunity to say whether they wish to approve, within 28 days, details of the siting and appearance of the installation. An authority may refuse such approval, if they consider this to be justified.

As regards information kiosks, their installation by operators licensed to do so would enjoy permitted development rights under the GPDO. However, where it is intended that the kiosk included a voice telephony service it is likely that it would be treated as a public call box for the purposes of the GPDO and the prior approval procedure outlined above would apply.

A local authority has the power to withdraw permitted development rights by making a Direction under Article 4 of the GPDO. These powers should be used only in exceptional circumstances and are intended for use where there is a real and specific threat to the proper planning or amenities of a limited area.

Under the terms of its licence, an operator wishing to install an information kiosk which did not include a voice telephony service would have to give the local planning authority 28 days' notice of their intention to do so.

As regards the conversion of public call boxes to information kiosks, alteration or replacement of such boxes by a code system operator would require prior approval under the 28 day procedure outlined above. Whether conversion to an information kiosk constituted alteration or replacement would depend on the circumstances of the case. If it did not do so, permitted development rights would apply without a requirement for prior approval.

If a company has not had the Telecommunications Code applied to it under the 1984 Act they will not have the associated permitted development rights under the GPDO. If such a company wishes to install a telephone booth, a telephone box or information kiosk they would be required to submit an application for planning permission to the local planning authority.

HFCs

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on what evidence his Department has based its view that HFCs are not sustainable technology in the long term. [127002]

Mr. Meacher: The Government's draft climate change programme includes a new policy statement on HFCs because they are powerful greenhouse gases and are included in the basket of gases controlled under the Kyoto Protocol. We recognise that HFCs are necessary replacements for ozone-depleting substances in some applications, but we are concerned that emissions from these sources are forecast to grow strongly in the near future. This trend is unsustainable in the longer term and action needs to be taken to limit the projected growth.

Our position would allow HFCs to continue to be used where they are necessary, but we recognise that the successful phase out of ozone-depleting substances is being achieved with a range of technologies. We believe that continued technological developments will mean that HFCs may eventually be able to be replaced in applications where they are currently necessary. We therefore believe it is right to give a clear signal to industry and users to look closely at these alternatives and to select those that are more environmentally acceptable where they do exist. Of course safety, technical feasibility and cost effectiveness should be taken into account before investment decisions are taken.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the occasions in the last 12 months on which Ministers in his Department have met (a) Greenpeace, (b) other environmental groups and (c) representatives of the refrigeration industry to discuss the future use of HFCs. [126976]

Mr. Meacher: There have been no meetings between DETR Ministers and any group to discuss specifically the future use of HFCs. However, in January I met representatives from Greenpeace and EnvirosMarch consultancy to discuss the report "UK Emissions of HFCs, PFCs and SF_6 and Potential Emission Reduction Options" which was prepared for the DETR by EnvirosMarch.

Incinerators

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the applications that are outstanding by type and capacity for the construction of incinerators. [126761]

Mr. Meacher: In England and Wales the Environment Agency is responsible for regulating waste incineration processes described in part A of sections 1.3(C) and 5.1 of the Environmental Protection (Prescribed Processes and Substances) Regulation SI19991/No. 472.

The operators set out have made an application to the Agency for an IPC authorisation, or for a variation to conditions attached to their current authorisation. The list also incorporates any variations to conditions that have been initiated by the Agency. The lists do not include applications made for incinerator units acting as abatement equipment (e.g. chemical manufacturing plant), or for the incineration of waste in plant whose primary purpose is some other purpose (e.g. cement works). The capacity of each individual incinerator application is not held centrally by the Agency.

Information on land-use planning applications is held by local planning authorities.

Section 1.3 (C)—burning waste oil, recovered oil or fuel manufactured from or comprising waste Solrec Ltd.

Jaguar Cars Ltd.

Fibrogen Ltd.

Section 5.1 (a)—destruction by burning in an incinerator of waste plastics, chemicals or wastes arising from chemicals or plastics manufacture

Thames Water Utilities Ltd. (two applications)

Waste Management

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent representations he has received about the SBS system of aerobic degradation and municipal waste; and what responses he has made. [126764]

Mr. Meacher: I am not aware of any representations made to my Department about the application of the anaerobic Sludge Blanketing System to municipal waste.

Dioxins

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for East Worthing and Shoreham (Mr. Loughton) of 24 May 2000, Official Report, column 539W, on dioxins, what levels of dioxins have been identified in the environment of East Sussex for each year since 1991; and if he will make a statement. [126261]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 19 June 2000]: The Government have made no measurements for dioxins specifically in the environment of East Sussex since 1991.

Telecommunications Masts

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to implement the recommendations of the Stewart Inquiry relating to planning regulations affecting mobile phone telecommunications masts. [127154]

Ms Beverley Hughes: In their response to the report of the Independent Expert Group on Mobile Phones, issued on 11 May 2000, the Government said that they were minded to introduce a requirement for full planning permission for all new telecommunications masts, but would need to consult widely before doing so, including on the purpose and precise scope of any new arrangements. We shall issue a consultation paper on this and related guidance as soon as practicable.

Greenhouse Gases

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will set out the monitoring arrangements for levels of greenhouse gas production in the UK. [127147]

Mr. Meacher: My Department compiles and publishes an annual inventory of UK greenhouse gas emissions by sources and removals by sinks to fulfil international reporting requirements of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change and the European Union Monitoring Mechanism. Separate greenhouse gas inventories are also published for England, Northern Ireland, Scotland and Wales. The inventories are produced according to guidelines published by the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change and conform to internationally agreed good practice.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list for (a) Scotland, (b) England and Wales and (c) the UK the changes in the levels of production of the six greenhouse gases in each year since 1990; and what the forecast reduction is for the following 10 years. [127148]

Mr. Meacher: UK emissions of the "basket" of six greenhouse gases, weighted by their global warming potential (GWP), fell by 8.7 per cent. between 1990 and 1998. UK emissions of carbon dioxide, the main greenhouse gas, fell by 7 per cent. over the same period. The changes in the levels of emissions of the six greenhouse gases in each year from 1990 to 1998 for the UK are given in Table 1. 1998 is the latest year for which we have complete data. Disaggregated data are only available for the years 1990 and 1995 for Scotland and England and Wales at present (Table 2) but data for 1998 will be available later this year.

Table 3 shows projected changes in UK emissions of the six greenhouse gases between 1990 (the baseline year for our climate change targets) and 2010, before the impact of the measures set out in the UK's draft climate change programme, published in March. There are currently no disaggregated projections for England and Wales and Scotland although my Department is funding a research contract to provide disaggregated projections of the non-carbon dioxide greenhouse gases which will be available later this year.

Countryside and Rights of Way Bill

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the sources other than his Department's own legal service, from which he took legal advice with regard to the implications of the European Convention on Human Rights for the Countryside and Rights of Way Bill. [127314]

Mr. Mullin: It is not the practice of the Government to disclose the legal advice which they have received on any matter, nor the source of such advice.

Waterloo/Exeter Line

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what reasons underlay the decision of the Franchising Director of the Shadow Strategic Rail Authority concerning of the amount of notice given between the announcement of a possible new micro franchise on the Waterloo/Exeter rail line and the pre-qualification date for bidders; if he will instruct the Regulator to extend this deadline; and if he will make a statement. [126689]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 22 June 2000]: The Secretary of State has asked the Franchising Director to write to the right hon. Member explaining the history of this decision and the future proposals for both the Waterloo/Exeter railway line and replacement plans for South West Trains franchise and other franchise in the area. This letter will be placed in the Library.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will obtain from Greenpeace their evidence on radioactive waste in the Hurd Deep. [127567]

Mr. Meacher: I am not aware of the video referred to. I expect Greenpeace will send me a copy if they consider it contains material of interest to my Department.

Land Reclamation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, what recent discussions he has had with the European Commission about its ruling on the investment of Government money in derelict land reclamation. [127570]

Ms Beverley Hughes: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer of 24 May 2000, Official Report, column 536W. My right hon. Friend, the Minister for Local Government and the Regions met Commissioner Monti on 2 March to discuss the problems we face in partnership working with the private sector in regeneration since the Commission's decision that the Partnership Investment Programme breached the state aid rules. These discussions continue at official level.

Cap de la Hague

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) of 7 June 2000, Official Report, column 244W, on Cap de la Hague, if he will request information from (a) the French nuclear authorities and (b) Greenpeace France on nuclear waste liquid discharges and atmospheric radioactive discharges from the Cap de la Hague nuclear waste processing site. [127612]

Mr. Meacher: The operators of the La Hague site, Cogema, regularly publish details of their liquid and aerial radioactive discharges. Such discharges are closely controlled by the French regulatory authority and comply with international limits for doses to the public. If there are specific reasons why my hon. Friend believes extra information is needed related to specific accidents I would be interested for my hon. Friend to let me know.

Noise Control

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the total expenditure of UK local authorities on noise control in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [127651]

Ms Beverley Hughes: This information is not centrally available.

Millennium Dome

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions his Department has had with parties other than Dome Europe and Legacy plc and their affiliates concerning the future use of the Dome since the final shortlist was announced. [127822]

Ms Armstrong: Since the final shortlist announcement neither my Department nor the competition team has had any discussions about the future use of the Dome site with any parties interested in purchasing it other than the two bidders. The Competition Team has received a small number of new expressions of interest, but has made it clear that no new bids can be accepted into the competition process at this advanced stage.

Energy (Office Buildings)

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the effect of the freehold tenant relationship on energy use in office buildings. [127453]

Mr. Raynsford: None. However, in 1998 my Department's Property Advisory Group published a report "Sustainable Development and Buildings" commending the use of all-inclusive occupation agreements in commercial buildings as a means of reducing energy consumption. Under such arrangements, the landlord provides a comprehensive range of services besides letting the property—for example, energy, insurance, repairs and maintenance—for an all-inclusive charge. The Property Advisory Group saw these as giving landlord and tenant a mutual interest in reducing occupation costs, including energy costs.

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his estimate of the increase in energy consumption in commercial buildings, including the office sector, in the last 15 years for which figures are available. [127452]

Mrs. Liddell: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 23 June 2000, Official Report, column 313W.

Heathrow Airport (Night Flights)

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will call for a report from the British Airports Authority listing all flights with airline designation, departure point and departure time from that point, arriving at Heathrow Airport before 6 am each day and the approximate time of each arrival. [127665]

Mr. Mullin: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Wandsworth School Planning Application

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will make a decision on the planning application by the London Borough of Wandsworth for a new secondary school on the site of Wandsworth School, Sutherland Grove, London SW18. [127732]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The Secretary of State has today issued a decision to the London Borough of Wandsworth refusing Conservation Area Consent for their application to demolish buildings on this site.

Aviation Agreements

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what recent representations he has received on the liberalisation of the London-US transatlantic aviation agreement through Heathrow; and if he will make a statement; [127246]

(2) if he will make a statement on the Open Skies agreements between EU countries and the US; and what progress has been made in securing a similar agreement between the UK and the US. [127247]

Mr. Mullin: I have received representations on matters relating to the liberalisation of the UK/US aviation market from all sectors of the UK aviation industry, from consumer interests and from other sources.

A number of EU countries have concluded Open Skies agreements with the US. The UK's goal is a liberalised aviation agreement which goes further than the US template and secures access for UK carriers to the US domestic market.

Inland Waterways

Mr. Pound: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to publish the report on the inland waterways referred to in the White Paper, A New Deal for Transport: Better for Everyone; and if he will make a statement. [128006]

Mr. Prescott: The report, entitled "Waterways for Tomorrow", will be published tomorrow. Copies will be available from the House of Commons Library and the Vote Office on Tuesday 27 June.

"Waterways for Tomorrow" takes a comprehensive look at the inland waterways of England and Wales and sets out our proposals for their future. We intend to promote the inland waterways and encourage a modern, integrated and sustainable approach to their use. We want to protect and conserve the waterways as an important part of the country's national heritage while, at the same time, encouraging their best and, where appropriate, innovative use, maximising the opportunities they offer for leisure and recreation; as a catalyst for urban and rural regeneration; for education; and for freight transport.

We believe that the measures set out in "Waterways for Tomorrow" will pave the way for a new, revitalised inland waterways system which can be fully, imaginatively and adventurously used by all. This is good news for the environment, the community and the economy.

GM Crops

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what account was taken of the outbreak of rhizomania disease at Sunnymead Farm in Essex when permission was granted to hold a GM crop trial there; what contact he has had with MAFF regarding the outbreak of this disease at this site; and if he will make a statement. [127595]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 23 June 2000]: Rhizomania is a disease of sugar beet and its presence on a farm has no implications for trials of GM maize under the farm-scale evaluation programme. MAFF apply controls on farms affected by the disease to limit its spread. These include the adoption of routine hygiene measures by people visiting the farm.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the circumstances in which the Government have a duty to make public the location of crop sites accidentally sown with GM-contaminated seeds. [126817]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 19 June 2000]: A request for this information to be released could be made under the Environmental Information Regulations 1992 (as amended by the Environmental Information (Amendment) Regulations 1998), which place a statutory obligation on relevant persons who hold specified information relating to the environment to make that information available to every person who requests it. The statutory obligation is subject to a number of exceptions as set out in the regulations. My Department does not, however, hold information on the location of the sites sown with GM-contaminated seeds.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Home Detention Curfew Scheme

13. Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many drug dealers and traffickers have been released on the Home Detention Curfew Scheme. [126131]

Mr. Boateng: As of 31 May 2000, the number of prisoners convicted of the following drugs-related offences have been placed on the Home Detention Curfew scheme:

122 convicted of production;

1,156 convicted of supply;

1,476 convicted of possession with intent; and 222 convicted of unlawful import or export.

16. Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many child sex offenders have been released on the Home Detention Curfew Scheme. [126134]

Mr. Boateng: As of 31 May 2000, two prisoners subject to the Sex Offenders Act 1997 have been released in this way. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has previously informed the House that both successfully completed their curfew period and have not been known to reoffend since.

The Government amendment to the Criminal Justice and Court Services Bill will mean that sex offenders subject to the 1997 Act will be excluded from the home detention curfew scheme altogether.

Crime and Disorder Act 1998

14. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the impact of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998. [126132]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Crime and Disorder Act 1998 has been widely hailed as one of the most progressive pieces of legislation in the criminal justice field for many decades, and good progress is being made with its implementation .

17. Mr. Darvill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he is taking to encourage local partnerships to make use of the Orders made available to them in the Crime and Disorder Act 1998. [126135]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Tackling disorderly behaviour is among the Government's highest priorities, and I have therefore taken special steps to promote the use of Anti-Social Behaviour Orders. An action group was set up under Lord Warner to consider issues relating to their use, 10 regional seminars were held to promote best practice, and guidance in the form of model partnership agreements will be issued later this month.

Proportional Representation

15. Mr. Curry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he had made of the use of proportional representation at elections in the United Kingdom. [126133]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Government believe that an electoral system should be appropriate to the body being elected. The proportional voting systems used to elect the European Parliament, Scottish Parliament, Welsh Assembly and Greater London Authority have resulted in those bodies being broadly representative of the people they serve.

Criminal Justice (Mode of Trial) (No. 2) Bill

18. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent discussions he has had with the police and magistrates on the Criminal Justice (Mode of Trial) (No. 2) Bill. [126136]

Mrs. Roche: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has received considerable support from all three police associations and the Magistrates Association for the measures which are in the Bill.

Asylum Seekers

19. Dr. Palmer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress is being made in speeding up decisions on applications from asylum seekers. [126137]

Mrs. Roche: We are committing substantial new resources to speed up the asylum system. We have recently recruited 270 extra asylum decision-makers and a further 350 are due to be recruited this year. We are thoroughly overhauling processes across the system from end-to-end and across directorate and departmental boundaries. Decisions are currently well exceeding the number of new applications.

The number of decisions has significantly increased since the beginning of the year reaching over 11,000 in March, the highest monthly total ever recorded.

21. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons are registered as asylum seekers in the United Kingdom; and how many were registered (a) five and (b) 10 years ago; and if he will make a statement. [126139]

Mrs. Roche: The number of asylum applicants awaiting an initial decision at the end of April was 94,540. The comparable figure for the end of December 1994 was 55,255 and at the end of December 1989 was 12,240. The backlog of asylum cases is being progressively reduced and we are on course to make a substantial reduction by April 2001.

28. Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers, while in detention, (a) attempted suicide and (b) committed suicide in (i) 1996–97, (ii) 1997–98 and (iii) 1998–99. [126147]

Mrs. Roche: While the overwhelming majority of immigration detainees have claimed asylum at some point, it would be possible to distinguish them from non-asylum seeking detainees only at a disproportionate cost by examination of individual case records.

The number of recorded attempts at self-harm by immigration detainees are as follows:

(i) April 1996-March 1997: 14 attempts

(ii) April 1997-March 1998: 20 attempts

(iii) April 1998-March 1999: 23 attempts.

There were no incidents of suicide by immigration detainees between 1996 and 1999.

30. Maria Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what checks are made on private landlords seeking to house asylum seekers. [126149]

37. Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what checks are made on private landlords seeking to house asylum seekers. [126156]

Mrs. Roche: Both private and public housing providers were invited to participate in the tendering process for providing accommodation for asylum seekers. With regard to private sector companies, we conducted thorough reviews which included an assessment of the potential provider's financial standing, suitability and quality of accommodation and support service infrastructure. In addition, we consulted the relevant regional consortia to ensure that local circumstances were taken into account and that the provider was suitable.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what priority will be given to cluster areas with (a) less than 1 per cent. ethnic minority populations and (b) low levels of public housing in the dispersal of asylum seekers. [127235]

Mrs. Roche: In researching cluster areas and deciding where asylum seekers might best be dispersed, the National Asylum Support Service has drawn on a number of sources for information about towns and cities across the United Kingdom. This includes census information and population data. Ethnic minority population and communities are taken into account in decisions on cluster areas, although there is no requirement to take account of a population of less than 1 per cent. specifically. The availability of accommodation is clearly a prime factor in the development of cluster areas. This may be either public housing or private housing.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what account will be taken of seasonal factors that affect the availability of accommodation in seaside resorts when determining the dispersal of asylum seekers; and if he will make a statement. [127236]

Mrs. Roche: A number of factors in cluster areas affect the availability of accommodation and its suitability. The National Asylum Support Service aims to take all these factors into account when considering cluster areas and dispersal. As regards seaside resorts, the Home Office is in touch with relevant local authorities and with the British Resorts Association to look at the account that needs to be taken of specific characteristics of seaside areas.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average number of dependants per asylum seeker included in new asylum applications received in the UK. [126814]

Mrs. Roche: Applications for asylum to the United Kingdom are recorded on behalf of the principal applicant only and totalled 71,160 in 1999. It is estimated that the total was 91,200, including dependants.

Virtual Police Stations

20. Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will introduce virtual police stations across the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [126138]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I have no plans to introduce virtual police stations. Two research projects are being undertaken by the police with the assistance of the Home Office Research Award Scheme. One project is an examination of the mechanics for delivering police service on the internet and its likely impact. The other project is assessing the strategy of development of the use of electronic communication to increase police, and other agencies, contact with the public.

Most forces maintain informative websites on the internet.

Police Human Resources Policies

22. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent guidance he has given to chief officers of police in relation to human resource policies within the forces. [126140]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Guidance on human resource policies has recently been issued on: Police Training: The Way Forward (May 2000); Crime Fighting Fund recruitment scheme (May 2000); Pensions (two circulars in March 2000); Tenure of police officers seconded to the National Crime Squad (May 2000); Police Health and Safety (May 2000); Auditing Organisational Culture within the Police Service Police (April 2000); and, Special Constables: Eligibility for recruitment (April 2000).

Hunting with Dogs

23. Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his Department's estimate of the impact on police resources as a result of an introduction of a ban on hunting with dogs. [126141]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We will be consulting with the police on the implications to them of the legislative options contained in the proposed Bill on hunting with dogs.

Prison Population

24. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners there are per 100,000 of the population in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) France, (c) Germany and (d) the Netherlands; and if he will make a statement. [126142]

Mr. Boateng: The available information is given in the table. It should be noted, however, that comparisons between penal statistics from different countries may be misleading due to differences in criminal justice systems.

the types of sanctions available to the judicial authorities and the length of prison sentences imposed by the courts and served by offenders.

International prison population comparisons: rate per 100,000 population in 1999

Country	Rate[1] per 100,000 population in 1999

Police Manpower

25. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will conduct a review of police strength in each police authority area in England and Wales prior to the Government's second comprehensive spending review; and if he will make a statement. [126144]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I have no plans to undertake such a review. Under the Police Act 1996, it is for individual chief constables to determine the number of police officers in their force from within their available resources.

I work closely with the police and their representative bodies on a number of issues about resourcing and crime reduction, including their concerns about police numbers. I have responded to those concerns with the Crime Fighting Fund, which will allow for the recruitment of 5,000 more officers over the next two years, over and above those that forces already planned to recruit. The future resourcing of the police service is, of course, a matter for Spending Review 2000, and I have taken careful account of the views of the police service on their needs.

Restorative Justice

26. Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress of restorative justice schemes. [126145]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The final warning scheme, reparation order and action plan order under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998, were implemented across England and Wales on 1 June 2000; the referral order under the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 will be piloted in seven areas from summer 2000 ahead of national implementation. All these measures reflect the restorative justice principles of responsibility, reparation and reintegration in tackling offending and requiring offenders to make amends for their actions. For adults, community service orders provide the opportunity for offenders to undertake work for the benefit of the community.

Jury Trial

27. Mr. Mates: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his plans to amend the right to elect trial by jury. [126146]

29. Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his plans to change the right of defendants to elect a jury trial; and if he will make a statement. [126148]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Criminal Justice (Mode of Trial) (No.2) Bill is part of our programme to modernise the justice system and to make it more responsive to the needs of victims, witnesses and the public at large. Giving the courts, rather than defendants, the power to decide whether either-way offences should be heard in the Crown Court would reduce delay and secure a more efficient system of justice.

Corpus Juris

31. Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his policy is with respect to corpus juris. [126150]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Ludlow (Mr. Gill), on 15 May 2000, Official Report, column 51W.

Door Supervisors

32. Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his plans for regulating door supervisors. [126151]

Mr. Charles Clarke: We issued a White Paper last year proposing that a new authority should be set up to license those who work in the private security field, and to improve standards in the industry. We proposed that the scheme should apply to door supervisors. Legislation will be introduced as soon as Parliamentary time permits.

As my hon. Friend is aware, we are also considering other issues relating to the regulation of door supervisors, in consultation with local authority, police and other interests.

Burglary

33. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress he has made in reducing the incidence of burglary. [126152]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The reported crime figures for 1999 show a fall in the total numbers of burglaries of over 15 per cent. in the last two years (down from 1,127,000 in the year ending March 1997 to 953,000 in the year ending March 1999). While econometric models predict upward pressure on the level of burglary, we are committed to reducing crime and all police authorities have set five year targets for reducing the number of domestic burglaries. Nationally, these amount to a 25 per cent. reduction by March 2005.

Under the Reducing Burglary Initiative (part of our £400 million Crime Reduction Programme), we plan to invest over £50 million by 2002 in projects covering over two million households in high crime areas, with the aim of preventing 15,000 burglaries by March 2002 and 25,000 in the longer term. The projects are being evaluated and the lessons learned about what works, and is most cost-effective, in different circumstances will be of wider benefit to all local crime and disorder partnerships seeking to improve their own anti-burglary strategies.

So far, 224 local anti-burglary projects, covering around 800,000 households, have been approved at a total cost of nearly £16 million.

As part of the Department for the Environment, Transport and the Regions' New Home Energy Efficiency Scheme (HEES), we have also committed up to £12 million to improve home security for low income pensioners living in high crime areas in England and Wales. New HEES started earlier this month.

In April 2000, we launched a Distraction Burglary Taskforce to combat the problem of burglary by bogus callers which predominantly affects very vulnerable members of the community. Pilot schemes across the country, spearheaded by the National Neighbourhood Watch Association, will try out different community based methods of tackling this crime

We have also launched a Property Crime Reduction Action Team to take forward work at a national level to reduce property crime, including ways of designing out crime. And we have also set ambitious targets for tackling drugs misuse, which is strongly connected to property crime, and have launched a number of related initiatives, including new Drug Treatment and Testing Orders and arrest referral schemes.

Finally, we are also funding several related projects under the Targeted Policing Initiative, including schemes to disrupt the stolen goods markets and to tackle drug related crime.

Victim Support

36. Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money central Government have made available for victim support in the last five financial years. [126155]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The annual grant paid to Victim Support in the last five years is as follows:

£ million

Financial year	Grant
1995–96	10.817
1996–97	11.682
1997–98	12.682
1998–99	12.682
1999–2000	17.500

Anti-social Behaviour Orders

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many anti-social behaviour orders have been issued; and if he will make a statement. [126153]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Figures for the number of orders granted are being collected centrally with effect from 1 June. From a trawl of police forces carried out by the Association of Chief Police Officers, we have been able to establish that 79 orders were granted between the period 1 April 1999 and 31 May 2000.

Police Recruitment

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent discussions he has had with chief constables regarding police recruitment. [126154]

Mr. Straw: My officials have had discussions recently with the Association of Chief Police Officers and the Association of Police Authorities regarding the accelerated recruitment scheme of the Crime Fighting Fund and the national police recruitment campaign.

Cycles

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many fixed penalties have been issued to cyclists for the offence of (a) carrying another person and (b) cycling on pavements, broken down by police force areas for the latest six month period for which figures are available; and how many of the penalties were issued to cyclists aged under 14 years. [126419]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The table gives the available information which relates to the period 1 August to 31 December 1999.

Child Road Casualties

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many child road casualties there have been in the last year for which figures are available in Stoke-on-Trent North; and if he will make a statement on progress towards meeting his 2010 target for reducing such casualties. [127071]

Mr. Hill: I have been asked to reply.

Data for Stoke-on-Trent North are not available. The number of child road casualties for Stoke-on-Trent Unitary Authority are given in the table:

Child (aged 0–15) road casualties by severity for Stoke-on-Trent: 1998

Severity of casualty
Fatal	2
Serious	27
Slight	188
Total	217

The new road safety strategy "Tomorrow's roads—safer for everyone", published in March, sets out a range of measures to meet the target of halving the number of children killed or seriously injured in road accidents by 2010, compared with the average for 1994–98. Many of these measures are now being taken forward but it is too soon to quantify any casualty savings.

Young Offender Units

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to end the practice in young offender units of holding two prisoners in cells designed for one; and when he expects this practice to end. [127143]

Mr. Boateng: Due to current population pressures there are no immediate plans to end the practice of holding two prisoners in cells designed for one at some young offender units.

Dartmoor Prison

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who is the Chair of the Board of Visitors at Dartmoor Prison. [127166]

Mr. Boateng: The Chairman of the Board of Visitors at Her Majesty's Prison Dartmoor for the period 1 January 2000 to 31 December 2000 is Mr. Michael Long.

Internet (Interception)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what circumstances the Government will require internet service providers to contribute to (a) capital and (b) recruitment costs of security surveillance; and what the charging principles will be. [127328]

Mr. Straw: I have published a detailed report into the technical and financial considerations involved in interception on the internet, on Home Office website, www.homeoffice.gov.uk/oicd/ripbill.htm. Comments have been received from the Internet Service Providers Association and my officials have started a dialogue with wider industry representatives under the auspices of the Alliance for Electronic Business. There is agreement to set up a body, with industry participation, to advise on the technical, functional and procedural implementation of Clause 12 of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Bill. Depending on detailed discussions in that group and outside, and bearing in mind the need for equity across the entire communications industry, the Government will take a view on what contribution from internet service providers will be appropriate for capital costs. That process will also inform decisions on recruitment costs.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the estimates of (a) the capital costs and (b) the running costs of internet service providers, establishing a surveillance capability as required under the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Bill. [127331]

Mr. Straw: Our estimate of the total costs to communication service providers, not currently classified as public telecommunications operators, of establishing an intercept capability under the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Bill is that it will not exceed £20 million in aggregate over the first three years. I have published a report on the Home Office website detailing some cost and technical implications of interception on the internet. My officials have been in contact with The Alliance for Electronic Business and the Internet Service Providers Association over the establishment of an advisory board to consider further the technical, functional and procedural implementation of Clause 12 of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Bill.

Fire Service (London)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his estimate is for planning purposes of net pension fund obligations, pensions less contribution, for (a) the London Fire Service and (b) all UK fire services in financial years (a) 2000–01, (b) 2001–02, (c) 2005–06 and (d) 2010–11; and how these obligations will be financed. [127322]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The available figures, provided by the Local Government Association's Fire Service Expenditure Forecasting Group, are:

£ million

	2000–01	2001–02
London	65.3	73.5
England	250	275

Under the Central Local Partnership the Home Office works closely with the Forecasting Group to assess future resource demands for the following three years. The Group does not prepare longer range projections. Its assessments of future funding pressures, including pensions, are taken into account by the Government in the Spending Review process.

The provision of revenue funding for the fire services in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland is the responsibility of the devolved Administrations.

Metropolitan Police

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the monthly changes in each of the last two years in Metropolitan police manpower figures, resulting from (a) recruitment and (b) resignation and retirement. [127346]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The requested details are not available. Details for the four six-month periods up to September 1999 are given in the tables.

Police strength for Metropolitan police

	Police strength for ordinary duty[1]
30 September 1997	26,677
31 March 1998	26,094
30 September 1998	26,106

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) new recruits, (b) graduate recruits and (c) graduate recruits with first or upper second class degrees to the Metropolitan Police in each of the last five years. [127329]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The table shows the number of new recruits and graduate recruits into the Metropolitan Police Service (MPS) for the last five years:

Year	Appointments on probation	Graduates on probation
1994–95	1,209	[1]—
1995–96	1,212	141
1996–97	670	[1]—
1997–98	1,164	46
1998–99	1,586	81

[1] Information for these years is not available

Information on graduates with first or upper second class degrees is not held centrally or by the MPS.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what real terms changes there have been on an annual basis since 1990 in the funding of the Metropolitan Police Service. [127238]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 22 June 2000]: The information set out has been provided by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis.

Funding (grant + precept) for the Metropolitan Police 1990–91 to 2000–01

[3] Funding for 1999–2000 is not directly comparable with 2000–01 and previous years since with effect from 1 April 2000 the territory of the Metropolitan Police Service was redrawn to increase the Greater London Area only. Responsibility for policing about one third of Surrey and smaller parts of Hertfordshire and Essex has now been transferred to the respective county forces. Taking account of these, funding has increased in real terms by 1.4 per cent. in 2000–01. Excluding £8.5 million for the CFF and £4 million for PNC charges, funding for 2000–01 would be £1,832 million. This is the equivalent of a 3 per cent cash increase/1 per cent. real terms increase of 1999–2000 after allowing for the boundary changes (and 1.9 per cent in cash terms over funding and the use of reserves in 1999–2000). Percentage changes in real terms have been calculated at 1998–99 prices using GDP deflators (March 2000).

Date Rape Drugs

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when he plans to make a statement on his policy on Gammahydroxybutyrate following the publication of the Metropolitan police report on drug-assisted rape on 21 June; [127296]

(2) what assessment he has made of the extent to which GHB is used as a date rape drug by groups of males acting in collaboration; [127201]

(3) what recent reports he has received on the use of drugs in date rape cases; [127200]

(4) what recent assessment he has made of the extent of use of (a) Rohypnol and (b) GHB as date rape drugs. [127203]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Metropolitan police research initiative published on 21 June is the only recent report I have received on the use of drugs in rape cases. The evidence in respect of the use of Gammahydroxybutyrate and Rohypnol and its findings will be reported to the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs, the statutory body the Government rely on for providing expert advice on drug misuse matters.

European Refugee Fund

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make statement on his policy towards the European Refugee Fund. [127194]

Mrs. Roche: The Government's policy concerning the European Refugee Fund is set out in the Home Office Explanatory Memorandum of 28 February, copies of which were deposited in the Library. Since the Explanatory Memorandum, the United Kingdom has opted in to this proposal under the terms of our protocol to the Treaty of Amsterdam.

Police Salaries

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will reinstate the rent allowance element of serving police officers' salary packages; and if he will make a statement; [127359]

(2) what assessment he has made of the impact of the withdrawal of the rent allowance element of salary packages on the recruitment and retention of police officers; [127357]

(3) what the average reduction is in serving police officers' remuneration following the withdrawal of the rent allowance element of salary packages. [127358]

Mr. Charles Clarke: No assessment has been made of the withdrawal of rent or housing allowances on the recruitment and retention of officers. Outside the Metropolitan Police Service, very few forces report a recruitment problem. Average total wastage in the police service in 1998–99 was seven per cent., which is low by standards outside the police service.

Rent allowance was replaced by housing allowance on 1 April 1990, although some officers still receive transitional rent allowance. Following the recommendations of the Sheehy Inquiry, housing allowance was abolished for new recruits and frozen for serving officers from 1 September 1994, because police officers were no longer required to live in a particular location. Entitlement to provided accommodation also ceased and the structure of starting salaries changed.

Under the Police Act 1996, the Police Negotiating Board (PNB) considers issues relating to police pay and allowances. There are no plans to reinstate rent or housing allowances but the PNB has recommended an increase in London Allowance of £3,327, from 1 July 2000, for those officers appointed on or after 1 September 1994 and not in receipt of housing allowance. On 23 June my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary announced that he has accepted this recommendation.

It is not possible to provide a meaningful average reduction in serving police officers' remuneration following the abolition of housing allowance. Allowances paid vary between rank and force. The tables show the rates payable for housing allowance and transitional rent allowance.

Police Time

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the estimated average time required is for a police officer to complete the formal documentation of criminal evidence following an arrest for (a) burglary, (b) car theft and (c) criminal damage; and what steps he has taken to monitor the time spent on procedural rather than operational tasks and to reduce it. [127344]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Manual of Guidance for the preparation, processing and submission of files, which is issued by the Trials Issues Group, sets out what information the police must supply to the Crown Prosecution Service (CRS) to ensure a successful prosecution. The number of documents required depends on the nature of the individual case, as does the time it takes to complete them; an average time would not be meaningful and has not been estimated. In straightforward cases in which a guilty plea is expected (which accounted for more than half the cases in the pilot last year of the Narey measures for reducing delay) it is sufficient to prepare an 'expedited file' consisting of no more than five or six forms. The national introduction of those measures in November 1999 is expected to reduce the volume of cases requiring full files, and should also lead to an improvement in the timely delivery of case files to the CPS. Getting the file right first time, and on time, significantly reduces administrative burdens.

The Home Office is committed to looking at ways of reducing administrative burdens on the police where it is possible to do so consistently with the interests of justice, and will continue to collaborate with forces to that end.

Portland Young Offenders Institution

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff who work in the juvenile wing at Portland Young Offenders Institution have training in dealing with adolescents. [127426]

Mr. Boateng: There are 48 staff who work in the under 18 unit at Portland. Of these, 46 have been trained in dealing with adolescents. The two remaining staff will be trained in September.

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if slopping out has been ended in Portland Young Offenders Institution. [127415]

Mr. Boateng: Slopping out has ended at Portland. There are two wings in which the cells are too small to accommodate integral sanitation. An electronic unlocking system gives prisoners access to toilet facilities during the night. They are provided with chamber pots in case a fault occurs with the electronic system.

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many juveniles have been sent to Portland Young Offenders Institute since 1 April. [127419]

Mr. Boateng [holding answer 23 June 2000]: Since 1 April this year, a total of 93 prisoners aged under 18 have been sent to Portland.

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reasons the number of places designated for juveniles in Portland Young Offenders Institute was reduced in May. [127418]

Mr. Boateng [holding answer 23 June 2000]: Since 1 April this year, Portland has provided 130 places for prisoners aged under 18. This has not changed. It was originally proposed to provide 134 places, but this was reduced to provide four "calming rooms" where refractory young prisoners could be placed in preference to moving them to the segregation unit.

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many fully trained prison officers are on duty at night in Portland Young Offenders Institute. [127417]

Mr. Boateng [holding answer 23 June 2000]: There are a total of 11 staff on night duty at Portland; one senior officer and two officers, who are supported by eight operational support staff. All staff on duty at night are fully trained according to the requirements of their respective grades.

Sex Offenders

Mr. Hope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the provisions of Part 1 of the Sex Offenders Act 1997; what form the review will take; and over what period it will take place. [127846]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I am happy to be able to announce that the Government are establishing a review of Part 1 of the Sex Offenders Act 1997. Officials will shortly be setting up a small steering group, which will direct the review and undertake a consultation process. Research to be published shortly on the effectiveness of the Act will provide an important, but not exclusive, background for the review. The review will examine a wide range of aspects of Part 1 of the Act and will include consultation with other Government Departments, non-government organisations and the general public. I anticipate that the steering group will report to Ministers at the end of the year.

Hilda Murrell

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on progress in the investigation of the murder of Hilda Murrell. [126265]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave him on 22 May 2000, Official Report, columns 365–66W.

Severe Personality Disorders

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his Department's response to the First report of the Home Affairs Committee, Session 1999–2000, on Dangerous People with Severe Personality Disorders. [126123]

Mr. Boateng: The Government's response to the Committee's report on Managing Dangerous People with Severe Personality Disorder was published as the Committee's Third Special Report on 18 May.

The Government are grateful for the Committee's support for the proposals set out in the consultation paper which was published last July. The Government expect to announce their decision on the way forward once the Spending Review has concluded in the summer.

Football Hooligans

Mr. Horam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what proportion of the England soccer fans deported from Belgium over the weekend of 17 to 18 June had criminal convictions; [127493]

(2) how many people were stopped at ports, airports and railway stations in efforts to prevent soccer hooligans reaching the Euro 2000 soccer championships; [127489]

(3) how many police officers were deployed in the attempts to stop soccer hooligans reaching Belgium for the Euro 2000 soccer finals; [127491]

(4) how many people had their passports withdrawn or suspended for the duration of the Euro 2000 soccer championships; [127492]

(5) how many British people were prevented by police or court action from getting to the Euro 2000 championships. [127490]

Mr. Straw: Information provided by the Dutch and Belgium authorities is currently being analysed by the National Criminal Intelligence Service (NCIS). I understand that, to date, 393 of the 932 England supporters arrested during Euro 2000 have a criminal record. As the hon. Member may be aware, it is estimated that about one third of males in England and Wales have a criminal record by the age of 30.

There are 101 people currently subject to International Football bans, all of whom were required to report to a police station during Euro 2000. Of these 16 people were ordered to surrender their passports during the tournament as a condition of their ban. No data are available on the number of suspected hooligans who were dissuaded from travelling to Euro 2000 as a result of intensive police activity at United Kingdom exit points. But it is known that at least 98 English supporters were refused entry by the Dutch and Belgian authorities.

I regret that it is not possible for operational reasons to say how many police officers were deployed here and overseas as part of the extensive Euro 2000 policing operation.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the written parliamentary questions tabled to his Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April have not received substantive answers, for the reason that the information is (a) not held centrally, (b) not held in the form requested or (c) not available. [127680]

Mr. Straw: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 23 June 2000, Official Report, columns 339–40W.

Human Rights Act 1998

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the extra administrative expenditure resulting from the Human Rights Act 1998. [127619]

Mr. Straw: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State in his reply to the hon. Member for New Forest, West (Mr. Swayne) on 23 May 2000, Official Report, column 401W.

Election Expenditure

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what limitations will be in place for expenditure by political parties for the next election. [126143]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Paragraph 3 of Schedule 8 to the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Bill imposes limits on campaign expenditure by registered political parties in the 365 days prior to the date of a general election. The maximum amount a party may spend is determined by the number of constituencies contested. A party receives an allowance of £30,000 for each constituency contested, subject to a minimum threshold. A party contesting every constituency in the United Kingdom would therefore be subject to a limit on campaign expenditure of £19.77 million during the normal 365-day period. In the event that Schedule 8 is brought into force less than 365 days prior to the date of the next general election, clause 151(5) of the Bill provides that the relevant commencement order may specify a lower limit to apply during the shortened campaign period. We have undertaken to consult the main political parties before any such order is made.

Women Prisoners

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his estimate is of the increase in the proportion of women prisoners over the next five years. [126125]

Mr. Boateng: Over the next five years, the current middle variant projection is for the proportion of female prisoners in Prison Service establishments to increase from an average 5.2 per cent. in 2000 to 5.4 per cent. in 2005.

PRIME MINISTER

Central Railway

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Prime Minister what representations his office has received from Central Railway within the last two months. [126534]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 26 June 2000]: So far as I am aware, none.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Prime Minister on which dates members of his office met representatives of Central Railway plc in the last two months. [126910]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 20 June 2000]: I refer the hon. Member to answer I gave him on 8 June 2000, Official Report, column 355W.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Prime Minister how many written parliamentary questions tabled to his Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April have not received substantive answers, for reasons of commercial or other confidentiality. [127685]

The Prime Minister: Of the 454 written answers I provided within the specified period, nine withheld information in accordance with the relevant section of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information or other convention in line with the practice adopted by previous Governments.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Prime Minister how many of the written parliamentary questions tabled to his Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000 have not received substantive answers, excluding those not answered for reasons of (a) disproportionate cost, (b) information not available, not held centrally, or not held in the form requested and (c) commercial or other confidentiality. [127341]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 22 June 2000]: None.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Prime Minister how many written parliamentary questions tabled to his Office between 19 October 1999 and 20 April have not received substantive answers on the grounds of (a) commercial and (b) other confidentiality. [127106]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 21 June 2000]: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave him today.

Channel Islands (Banking Secrecy)

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral statement of 21 June, if the Government of the Channel Islands were consulted on the proposals relating to banking secrecy. [127819]

The Prime Minister: My statement referred to the agreement reached at the European Council at Feira about how best to tackle the problem of cross-border tax evasion within the European Union. The UK discusses regularly with the Channel Islands international tax issues and matters of mutual interest.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Solicitor-General when he will give a substantive reply to the question tabled by the hon. Member for West Lancashire for answer on 27 November 1999. [127451]

The Solicitor-General: I have written to my hon. Friend today with a substantive answer to his question.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Your Britain, Your Europe Roadshow

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the meeting which necessitated the postponement of the Minister for Europe's planned visit to Reading as part of the Your Britain, Your Europe Roadshow on 26 May was arranged. [126882]

Mr. Vaz: In December last year the Portuguese Presidency scheduled the first informal meeting of Euro-Mediterranean Foreign Ministers. I had planned to attend the main day of the meeting and return to the UK on 26 May, travelling directly to Reading. After it became apparent that my commitments at the Euro-Med meeting and transport times meant that the visit would have to be curtailed, Reading Borough Council advised me on 19 May that a half day programme would not do sufficient justice to the town's contribution to our relations with the EU. We agreed therefore to postpone the visit until 10 November.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the role of the Committee for the Release of Prisoners of War and Non-Combatants, established under the Lomé Agreement; what representations he made to the parties on this issue; and how many prisoners of war have been released. [126887]

Mr. Hain: The Committee for the Release of Prisoners of War and Non-Combatants was established prior to the signature of the Lomé Peace Agreement. The Committee has met periodically under UN chairmanship.

Britain has regularly pressed the parties for the release of all detainees. However, many are believed to remain in the custody of the Revolutionary United Front.

No definitive figures of released prisoners of war are available.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what occasions his office was in (a) telephone and (b) direct communication with negotiators discussing peace in Sierra Leone in Lomé; to what extent (i) the UK delegation to Togo and (ii) the West Africa section of his Department was involved; and if he will make a statement. [126890]

Mr. Hain: British officials observing the Lomé peace negotiations remained in close touch with the negotiators throughout. Ministers were kept fully informed of the progress of negotiations.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what senior (a) political, (b) military, and (c) quasi-judicial positions were occupied by Revolutionary United Front personnel as a consequence of the Lomé Peace Agreement. [126886]

Mr. Hain: Following signature of the Lomé Peace Agreement, three Cabinet positions and three Deputy Ministerial positions were allocated to members of the Revolutionary United Front. The RUF leader, Foday Sankoh, was made Chair of the Commission for the Management of Strategic Resources, National Reconstruction and Development.

No military or quasi-judicial positions were occupied by members of the Revolutionary United Front.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the impact of Article XVIII of the Lomé Agreement on Sierra Leone on the effectiveness of that country's helicopter support capabilities; and if he will make a statement. [126893]

Mr. Hain: Article XVIII of the Lomé Peace Agreement states that

> All mercenaries, in any guise, shall be withdrawn from Sierra Leone immediately upon signing of the present Agreement. Their withdrawal shall be supervised by the Joint Monitoring Commission.

As far as we are aware, this provision has made no impact on the Government of Sierra Leone's helicopter support capabilities.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the status of the trust fund established in the Lomé Peace Agreement to transform the Revolutionary United Front into a political party; how much money was paid into the fund; and what British funds were involved. [126884]

Mr. Hain: Article III of the Lomé Peace Agreement states that the Parties shall approach the international community with a view to mobilising resources for the purposes of enabling the Revolutionary United Front to function as a political party. These resources may include the setting up of a trust fund.

By the end of April, the Revolutionary United Front had not fully completed its procedures to register as a political party; nor had a trust fund been fully established.

No British funds were paid into such a trust fund.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has made of the value of the (a) diamonds and (b) gold sold by the Commission for the Management of Strategic Resources, National Reconstruction and Development established under the Lomé Peace Agreement; and what measures were put in place during negotiations on the Agreement to ensure the Sierra Leone Treasury received the entire proceeds of these sales. [126888]

Mr. Hain: The Commission for the Management of Strategic Resources, National Reconstruction and Development was created to help the Government of Sierra Leone exercise full control of the exploitation of gold, diamonds and other resources for the benefit of the people of Sierra Leone. The Lomé Peace Agreement provided that the funds derived from resources managed by the Commission would be paid into a special account at the Sierra Leone Treasury, to be sued for the benefit of the people of Sierra Leone.

Despite international support for this objective, by the end of April, the Commission and its associated mechanisms had not been fully established.

General Affairs Council

Mr. Casale: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the outcome of the General Affairs Council held in Luxembourg on 12 to 14 June; and if he will make a statement. [126746]

Mr. Vaz: The General Affairs Council in Luxembourg on 13 June adopted the A points listed in document no. 9278/00 and noted the resolutions, decisions and opinions adopted by the European Parliament in its part-session of 15–19 May in Strasbourg listed in document no. 8157/00. Copies of these documents will be placed in the House Libraries as soon as they become available.

1. MEPs Statute

The Council took note of the Presidency's discussions with the European Parliament on a statute to regulate the salaries, expenses and conditions of MEPs. There has been no substantive progress in these discussions.

2. Feira European Council

The GAC continued preparations for the Feira European Council on 19–20 June. The Presidency indicated that issues for discussion are expected to include the IGC, the Charter of Rights, economic issues, external issues, defence and enlargement.

3. IGC

The GAC discussed progress to date on the IGC, and confirmed the objective of concluding by the end of the year. No conclusions were reached.

4. Common Strategy on the Mediterranean

Agreement on the text of the draft Common Strategy will be sought at the Feira European Council on 19 June.

5. Defence

Foreign and Defence Ministers jointly discussed European security and defence policy. They considered a Presidency report to the European Council on progress in this field since the Helsinki European Council, and agreed to submit the report to Heads of Government at Feira.

6. Sierra Leone/Liberia

The Council expressed concern at the continuing crisis in Sierra Leone, welcomed the decision to put on trial Foday Sankoh, leader of the RUF, expressed concern at links between the Sierra Leone rebels and Liberia; and emphasised that EU policy, including under the Lomé convention, would take full account of Liberia's behaviour with regard to Sierra Leone.

7. Zimbabwe

The Council expressed concern at the obstacles put in the way of international observers and regretted that the United Nations had had to withdraw from its role as a co-ordinator for the various election observer teams. The Council reiterated its concern at the ongoing violence and intimidation in Zimbabwe.

8. South Africa

The Council adopted a new development regulation for South Africa and agreed declarations on wines and spirits.

9. Western Balkans

The Council expressed its deep concern at the continuing deterioration of the political situation in Serbia and reiterated its condemnation of the repression against the opposition and independent media. The Council requested its competent bodies to expand the visa ban list.

The Council welcomed the fact that municipal elections took place in Podgorica and Herceg Novi, and reaffirmed its support to the democratic forces in Montenegro.

The Council reaffirmed the EU's strong commitment to the full implementation of UNSC resolution 1244 in Kosovo. The Council condemned the ethnic violence in Kosovo and strongly supported the efforts of UNMIK and KFOR to ensure the security of the Serb minority. It urged the Serb National Congress to end its suspension of participation in the Joint Interim Administrative Structures and emphasises the importance of municipal elections. The Council reaffirmed its support for Serbian civil society.

The Council agreed with the Commission's assessment that Croatia was ready to enter into negotiations with the EU towards a Stabilisation and Association Agreement.

The Council emphasised the importance of speedy reform in Albania and urged all parties to participate in preparation for municipal elections this autumn.

The Council heard a report from Commissioner Patten on new trade preferences for the Western Balkans and invited its competent bodies to examine it with a view to early Council adoption.

The Council approved the Commission's proposal for 20 million euro in exceptional financial assistance for Montenegro.

10. Indonesia

The Council met over lunch with Indonesian Foreign Minister Alwi Shihab to launch an enhanced EU/Indonesia relationship. A Joint Declaration was adopted, establishing formal political dialogue.

11. East Timor

The UN Secretary General's Special Representative and Transitional Administrator of East Timor, Sergio Vieira de Mello, briefed the Council on UNTAET's work in East Timor. The Council expressed its willingness to help speed up the reconstruction and rehabilitation process and called for pledges of assistance to be delivered and disbursed expeditiously.

12. Inter-Korean Summit

The Council adopted a declaration welcoming the Inter-Korean Summit of 13–14 June in Pyongyang and encouraging the process of reconciliation between the Republic of Korea and the Democratic Peoples' Republic of Korea.

13. Accession Conferences with EU Applicants

Accession Conferences took place with all 12 countries in negotiation for membership.

14. Association Councils with Israel, Slovakia and Slovenia

Association Councils were held with Israel on 13 June and Slovakia and Slovenia on 14 June. That with Israel provided an opportunity to discuss economic and political relations. It covered a range of issues of interest to both sides, focusing particularly on the opportunities offered by the entry into force of the EU-Israel Association Agreement.

US National Missile Defence

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what bilateral discussions with (a) Canada and (b) Denmark there have been on developing criteria for the formulation of a decision on National Missile Defence. [126957]

Mr. Vaz: We have had a number of discussions with the Canadian and Danish Governments—both bilaterally, and in NATO—on US National Missile Defence plans.

These discussions have not included the development of criteria for a decision on National Missile Defence. It is for the United States to decide whether or not to proceed with deployment of a US National Missile Defence system. The US Administration have said that such a decision would be made by the President on the basis of four criteria, namely: the threat; costs; technological feasibility; and wider international implications, including for arms control.

Cuba

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what legal assistance, with particular reference to the filing of an appeal, was given via the British Consular staff in Cuba to Ms Rachel McGee, following her trial there in September 1999. [126766]

Mr. Hain: Our Consular staff are not legally trained and are not able to offer legal advice.

At the request of Rachel McGee, consular staff contacted Ms McGee's family about the possibility of an appeal, facilitated payment to the Cuban law firm that represented Ms McGee in the trial and transmitted her request to lodge an appeal.

Following submission of the appeal, the Embassy in Cuba have repeatedly pressed the lawyers to obtain a date for an appeal hearing.

Pharmaceuticals (Spain)

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he (a) has made and (b) plans to make to the Government of Spain about the possible effects on United Kingdom manufacturers of recent legislative changes to the regulations on the pricing of pharmaceutical products in that country. [126668]

Mr. Vaz: We have made no representations to the Government of Spain on this issue and currently have no plans to do so.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Governments of (a) South Africa and (b) other countries bordering Zimbabwe concerning the situation in Zimbabwe. [126763]

Mr. Hain: We have had regular contact with the countries of Southern Africa concerning the situation in Zimbabwe. President Mbeki visited the UK last month as a Guest of Government. I attended a meeting of the World Economic Forum in Durban on 22 June where I met leaders from other Southern African countries.

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans the Government have to send observers to Zimbabwe for the parliamentary elections; and if he will make a statement. [126760]

Mr. Hain: We have no plans to send a British observer team to Zimbabwe. We have however contributed funding to the EU and Commonwealth observer teams. We have also contributed funding for the training of Zimbabwean election monitors.

Diamonds

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Government classifies diamonds originating in the Democratic Republic of the Congo as diamonds from an area of conflict. [126754]

Mr. Hain: We believe that diamonds originating in DRC are being used by both sides to fund the war.

The UK has supported the establishment of a UN expert panel to follow up on reports and collect information on the exploitation of DRC's natural resources and the links to conflict within DRC. We look forward to the panel's recommendations to the Security Council.

We want to see a peaceful resolution of the conflict, and DRC's natural wealth used to benefit the people of DRC.

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action the Government plan to take in respect of British-registered companies trading in diamonds from conflict areas. [126784]

Mr. Hain: UN Security Council resolution 1173, adopted on 12 June 1998, requires all states to prohibit the import from Angola to their territories of all diamonds not controlled through the Angola Government's Certificate of Origin regime. The UK implements this requirement by means of an amendment to the Open General Import Licence. The UK has tabled a draft Security Council resolution which would impose a similar prohibition with respect to Sierra Leonean diamonds. The Government welcome the establishment of a UN expert panel which will investigate the links between exploitation of mineral resources and conflict in the Democratic Republic of Congo and will consider the panel's recommendations for action.

Elections

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what criteria the Government use to assess whether overseas elections are free and fair. [126762]

Mr. Hain: When the Government deploy observers to elections overseas, they usually participate as members of international missions. On such missions, UK observers follow the procedures laid down for the larger group. For example the European Union and the Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe both have codes of conduct which apply to their election observation missions. In both cases, observers are expected to consider a wide range of factors when assessing the validity of an election, including: the degree of freedom of political parties and candidates to organise and express their views; fairness of access to state resources made available for the election; fairness of access to the media; registration of voters without discrimination on the basis of gender, racial or ethnic origin; and the conduct of polling and counting.

Human Rights

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the criteria he uses to measure human rights improvements in a country. [126658]

Mr. Hain: Our policy is to promote British interests and pursue British values by supporting democracy and human rights, wherever we can, however we can. That means responding to human rights challenges in the way most likely to help the people whose freedoms are being restricted. It would be irresponsible for any government to apply the same "one-size-fits-all" approach. We need to weigh factors such as relevant international standards, the policies of the government in the country concerned, and the extent to which our actions can have a real impact on the ground.

Sudan

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the impact of critical engagement with Sudan on human rights there; and if he will make a statement. [126657]

Mr. Hain: At this year's UN Commission on Human Rights, the EU sponsored a resolution on the Sudan which set out its concerns about violations of human rights. We have also taken up many of these concerns bilaterally and through the recently renewed EU/Sudan dialogue.

While we still have many concerns, we do believe that some progress has been made. Some examples would be the release of many prisoners, the agreement to review some legislation such as the Public Order Law, and the setting up of the Committee for the Eradication of the Abduction of Women and Children which is working in close co-operation with UNICEF and Save the Children Fund (UK). Such issues remain high on our agenda.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the international community is taking to ensure that Sudanese oil revenues are not being used to assist the war effort in Sudan. [126662]

Mr. Hain: We are well aware of concerns that revenues from the oil industry in the Sudan could be used to fund the ongoing war in the Sudan. We have raised these concerns with the Government of Sudan, pressing them to use the revenues for development projects and to show transparency in the oil account. Public assurances have been made to that effect and we shall look to the Government to honour these assurances as evidence becomes available. This is an issue that has also been taken up by other members of the international community.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to persuade United Kingdom companies to withdraw from Sudan until there is peace there. [126661]

Mr. Hain: There is currently an EU arms embargo on the Sudan, which the UK helped initiate in 1994. We implement this rigorously and expect it to remain as long as the civil war continues.

As regards other sectors, we give full and frank advice to British companies taking into account, for example, the security situation and reports of human rights abuses associated with the oil industry. But we do not have a policy to halt all British commercial interests.

Russia

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans there are for the co-funding, via the G8, of the development of plutonium fuel in Russia. [126572]

Mr. Hain: G8 countries have affirmed their intention to establish arrangements for the safe management of weapons-grade plutonium no longer required for defence purposes. We have recognised that an international approach to financing will be required involving both public and private funds. This issue will continue to be discussed at the upcoming G8 Kyushu-Okinawa Summit.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what her policy is on the proposal that economic support be given by member states of the G8 for the Russian plutonium and nuclear industry. [126573]

Mr. Hain: The 1996 Moscow Nuclear Summit tasked the G8 Non-Proliferation Experts Group (NPEG) to take forward international cooperation on the safe and permanent disposal of ex-weapons plutonium, focusing on the huge Russian and American stockpiles. Technical experts agreed that the most promising options for disposal were conversion (of both plutonium and uranium) into mixed-oxide fuel (MOX) for use in civil nuclear reactors, and vitrification (in glass or ceramic form). The UK has actively contributed to work: as G8 President in 1998 we held a major conference of governmental and industrial experts which examined options for implementing the programme and ways of financing it. The US and Russia have recently concluded a Framework Agreement on how they will deal with disposition of weapons grade plutonium. We look forward to further discussion at the forthcoming G8 summit in Okinawa.

Saudi Arabia

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Saudi Arabian Government on their legal system. [126637]

Mr. Hain: On 22 May, at the EU/GCC Joint Ministerial Meeting in Brussels, my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary expressed concern about the human rights situation in Saudi Arabia, including aspects of the judicial process, to the Saudi Foreign Minister and representatives of the other GCC countries.

Visit Visas

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many visit visa applications from people aged over 65 years were (a) made, (b) granted initially, (c) refused initially and (d) deferred at the British High Commission in (i) Islamabad, (ii) Karachi, (iii) New Delhi and (iv) Mumbai in (1) 1997, (2) 1998, (3) 1999 and (4) 2000 to the most recent date for which information is available. [127111]

Mr. Vaz: The information requested is not collated either at Posts or held centrally. However, I have requested that the information be sought from Posts and will write as soon as it is available.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many written parliamentary questions were tabled to his Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000; and how many have not received substantive answers on the grounds of disproportionate costs. [127103]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 21 June 2000]: Of the 1,539 written parliamentary questions tabled to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, 32 did not receive substantive answers citing disproportionate costs as the reason.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many of the written parliamentary questions tabled to his Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000 have not received substantive answers, citing as the reason that the information is (a) not held centrally, (b) not held in the form requested, and (c) not available. [127334]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 22 June 2000]: Nineteen.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many of the written parliamentary questions tabled to his Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000 have not received substantive answers, citing as the reason commercial or other confidentiality. [127437]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 23 June 2000]: Four.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many of the written parliamentary questions tabled to his Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000 have not received substantive answers, excluding those not answered for reasons of (a) disproportionate costs, (b) information not available, not held centrally, or not held in the form requested or (c) commercial or other confidentiality. [127678]

Mr. Robin Cook: No outstanding questions tabled between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000 to which holding replies were given are still awaiting substantive answers.

Turkey

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Turkey about the conditions of imprisonment of Abdullah Öcalan. [127686]

Mr. Vaz: We have not made any representations to the Turkish authorities specifically concerning Abdullah Öcalan's prison conditions. We are, however, aware of recent reports alleging deterioration in Mr. Öcalan's health and will continue to follow his case closely.

DEFENCE

Departmental Vehicles

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) cars and (b) commercial vehicles operated by his Department were manufactured (i) in the UK, (ii) in the EU and (iii) elsewhere. [122262]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 17 May 2000]: In addition to combat vehicles, the Ministry of Defence operates a wide range of support vehicles procured or leased from over 130 different manufacturers. While details are not held centrally, it is assessed that the number of non-combat support vehicles (including long-term leased vehicles) is as follows:

(a) cars (up to and including estate cars)—7,700

(b) commercial vehicles (buses, fork-lift trucks, light vans and upwards)—15,300.

Country of manufacture is not recorded on the management information systems that are in place across the Department. For a fleet of 23,000 vehicles, the work involved to identify the country of manufacture could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Service Accommodation

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what estimate he has made of the impact on morale of the standard of family accommodation available to service personnel; [126507]

(2) what assessment he has made of the impact the delay in the housing refurbishment and improvement programme has had upon his ability to retain Army personnel. [126509]

Dr. Moonie: The Ministry of Defence understands that Service personnel and their families expect Service family accommodation to be of good quality, and that poor quality accommodation can affect retention. Accommodation standards are set according to factors such as energy efficiency, double glazing and modern bathroom facilities. Currently around 60 per cent. of accommodation is Standard Two or above.

We are working hard to bring all family accommodation in Great Britain to Standard One. The Upgrade Programme to achieve this started in 1996. It is a significant investment programme and considerable progress has been made. We originally planned that most of the estate would be upgraded by November 2003 but the 1998 Stock Condition Survey revealed that the programme would involve more work than we predicted at the outset. As a consequence, we were forced to extend the target completion date to November 2005.

The Continuous Attitude Surveys, conducted among both serving personnel and their spouses, give objective evidence of morale and show that personnel are generally satisfied with the overall standard of Service families accommodation. Independent housing surveys conducted for the Defence Housing Executive also show that 82 per cent. of Service families are content with the standard of family accommodation.

Technology, Readiness and Risk Assessment Programme

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the 2001 budget and staffing levels for the ballistic missile defence component of the Technology, Readiness and Risk Assessment programme. [126951]

Mr. Hoon: The Technology Readiness and Risk Assessment Programme is a three-year programme begun in July 1998. £12.5 million has been allocated for the overall programme, the work for which is being shared between the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA) and four UK defence contractors. The wide-ranging and consultative nature of the programme means that it is not possible to provide precise details of staffing levels, but the core team comprises 25–30 staff.

Ballistic Missile Defence

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a list of agreements on information exchange between the UK and USA with regard to anti-ballistic missile systems. [126943]

Mr. Hoon: The 1985 Memorandum of Understanding relating to Co-operative Research for the Strategic Defence Initiative is the sole agreement which provides the basis for information exchange between the UK and USA with regard to Ballistic Missile Defence.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent expenditure there has been by DERA on research into and evaluation of anti-ballistic missile systems. [126950]

Mr. Hoon: The recent research by DERA in the area of BMD has resulted from the MOD sponsored and funded study known as the Technology Readiness and Risk Assessment Programme (TRRAP). The three-year programme was begun in July 1998 at a cost of £12.5 million. Approximately 55 per cent. of the funds have been allocated to DERA with the balance allocated to UK industry.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if Field Marshal Sergeyev of the Russian Federation discussed ballistic missile defences at the meeting of the NATO-Russia Permanent Joint Council on 9 June; and if he will publish the minutes of that meeting; [126941]

(2) what discussions have taken place between his Department and representatives of the Russian Federation concerning ballistic missile defences; and if he will publish the minutes of the meetings. [126940]

Mr. Hoon: The Government have discussed issues relating to the possible proposals for a US National Missile Defence system, and ballistic missile defence more generally, in the course of regular consultations with representatives of the Russian Federation on security-related issues. Most recently, the Russian Defence Minister, Igor Sergeyev presented in outline a Russian proposal on ballistic missile defence to NATO Defence Ministers in the NATO/Russia Permanent Joint Council on 9 June.

I am withholding records of these meetings under exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Ballistic Missile Proliferation

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent assessment NATO has made regarding the nature of the threat from ballistic missile proliferation. [126939]

Mr. Hoon: NATO prepares periodic classified assessments of threats to Alliance interests including those presented by ballistic missile proliferation.

AWE

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans his Department has to ensure that the new operators of the Atomic Weapons Establishment sites will extend the policy on openness adopted by the previous operators. [127136]

Dr. Moonie: The contract to operate the Atomic Weapons Establishment specifically requires the operator to provide a Local Liaison Committee to serve as the formal interface between the sites and the local community, including elected representatives from interested organisations and local government agencies. The presence of the on-site Ministry of Defence compliance team will ensure that the policy is adhered to.

Porton Down

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many former members of the armed services were in contact with Professor Peter Lachmann and his panel during their inquiry into the zinc cadmium sulphide trials which had been conducted by the Porton Down Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment; and if he will place the communications between them and Professor Lachmann and his team in the Library. [127131]

Dr. Moonie: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 6 April 2000, Official Report, columns 554–55W.

Army Base Repair Organisation

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the value of the contract recently awarded to the Army Base Repair Organisation; which other companies bid for this contract; what is the lifespan of the contract; if the contract was for a fixed price; and if he will make a statement. [127177]

Dr. Moonie: The Army Base Repair Organisation (ABRO) has recently been awarded a contract for the refurbishment of the generator sets used to power the UK Army's Digital Trunk Communications System (Ptarmigan). The work is designed to extend the life of the generators and covers up to 158 generator sets. Six other companies submitted bids for the work: BAe Defence Systems, G&M Power Plant Ltd., Hunting Engineering Ltd., Vickers Specialist Engines, Dowding & Mills (North Eastern) Ltd. and Marconi Power & Control Systems Ltd. The contract was awarded on a firm price (ie non-variable) basis and the work is expected to take some six months to complete. Details of the contract value are commercial-in-confidence and are withheld under Exemption 14 of the Code of Practice, which relates to information given in confidence.

Staff Secondments

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who requested the secondment of the Deputy Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency to Thomson-CSF; who approved it; what was the cost to his Department; and if he will make a statement. [127180]

Dr. Moonie: The secondment of the former Deputy Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency to the UK headquarters of Thomson-CSF arose out of discussions between Ministry of Defence officials and the company's senior management and is part of the Ministry of Defence's wider interchange programme. As with all top level civil service appointments, it was approved by the Permanent Secretary. There is no additional cost to the Department as salary and associated costs will be reimbursed by the company for the duration of the secondment.

Several MOD officials are currently seconded to UK defence companies, and two are with major US defence companies. Secondments are a valuable means of ensuring that the MOD remains an intelligent customer and obtains best value for money. They are also in the spirit of modernising Government and public sector reform.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many troops returning to the United Kingdom from deployment in Sierra Leone have been diagnosed as having signs of malaria since 12 June; how many UK troops have been so diagnosed in the last five years; and in which overseas deployments they had served. [126996]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 21 June 2000]: As of 21 June 2000, a total of 48 confirmed cases of malaria and one suspected case have been recorded among Service personnel deployed to Sierra Leone. According to the Ministry of Defence data on hospital admissions, which includes admissions to RAF medical centres for more than 48 hours and to sick bays in RN ships, 47 Service personnel were diagnosed as suffering from malaria between 1 January 1995 and 17 January 2000. (This is the latest date for which records are immediately available, other than for the Sierra Leone deployment). Those personnel had served overseas in a total of 40 countries (as listed) prior to their diagnosis. Some personnel are likely to have contracted malaria while on holiday overseas.

Procurement Fraud

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 24 May 2000, Official Report, column 563W, on procurement fraud, if he will state (a) against which contracts the three cases are being investigated, which were recorded against 1999–2000, stating which project within that contract is affected and (b) contracts for which the values were stated for (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1997–98 and (iii) 1998–99 were found to have been affected by fraud and from which specific area of that contract; and if he will make a statement. [126685]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 22 June 2000]: The three contracts reported for 1999–2000 are the subject of current Ministry of Defence Police investigations and it would be inappropriate to comment further at present. None of the three contracts relate to major procurement projects. For 1995–96 the value was stated against various jobbing orders for works at a Naval Air Station and involved the corruption of a Crown Servant by a contractor. For 1997–98 the value was stated against a suspicion that a Crown Servant had submitted false Travel and Subsistence claims with the help of a firm holding a contract for resettlement training. For 1998–99 the value was stated against a PFI consultancy contract and involved an overpayment, since recovered, arising from genuine error by the contractor.

Theft

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate his Department has made of the cost to its budget in relation to theft in each year since 1995–96; how many prosecutions in each year were brought against (a) military personnel, (b) civilian personnel and (c) others on charges of theft of MoD property, stating in each case the amount involved and the outcome of the prosecution; and if he will make a statement. [126687]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 22 June 2000]: The reported estimated annual costs of theft for the financial years 1995–96 to 1999–2000 inclusive are as follows:

1995–96: £173,329

1996–97: £231,033

1997–98: £491,215

1998–99: £141,141

1999–2000: £149,891.

No abatement is made for subsequent recoveries. These figures relate to a combination of suspected and proven thefts with estimated values refined from time to time as investigations, sometimes lasting a year or more, reach a conclusion. Those cases currently brought to a conclusion involve a range of outcomes and include prosecutions resulting in custodial sentences, dismissal, fines or probation as defined by the Treasury. The reported figures for these prosecutions brought against MOD staff are as set out:

1995–96

There were five prosecutions involving civilians and one involving military personnel. Three civilians were fined £796 each and given community service following a theft valued at £1,592. Another civilian was dismissed, after a court case, for a theft valued at £8,300 while another received a five-day suspension without pay following a theft of unknown value. The military case resulted in a prosecution at Magistrates Court and a fine, followed by dismissal, for a case valued at £294.

1996–97

There were two prosecutions involving civilians and five involving military personnel. A civilian was fined £350 and dismissed following a theft where all property was recovered. In another civilian case a police caution was issued following a theft of unknown value. The military cases involved one theft valued at £1,500 resulting in probation for one year, a theft valued at £5,781 resulting in a verdict of gross negligence and a fine of £735, a theft valued at £2,721 resulting in a fine of £300, summary trial resulting in a fine of £300 for a theft valued at £60, and a fine of £25 for a theft of unknown value.

There were three prosecutions involving civilians and four involving military personnel. Two civilians received custodial sentences following a theft valued at £320,000. Another civilian received a police caution for a case valued at £61.

The military cases involved a case of eight months detention and dismissal for a case valued at £195, a theft valued at £190 leading to seven days detention plus stoppages of £17.50, a sentence of seven years imprisonment for a case where the value is not known but involved the theft of explosives, and a theft valued at £8,000 resulting in discharge from the service and 240 hours community service.

1998–99

There was one prosecution involving a civilian and another involving a military person. The civilian case was valued at £3,000 and resulted in 12 months probation plus community service. The military case involved a charge of handling stolen goods valued at £10,000 and the payment of compensation valued at £283.

1999–2000

There are no prosecutions currently reported for this year.

Contracts

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list (a) the original in-service date, (b) the current in-service date, (c) the actual or estimated cost, (d) the years of peak expenditure, (e) the expenditure in (d), (f) the date of the initial gate, (g) the date of the main gate and (h) the prime contractor for the projects (i) BOWMAN, (ii) COBRA, (iii) FET, (iv) HARRV, (v) MRAV, (vi) Phoenix, (vii) Shielder and (viii) UK Attack Helicopter; [127707]

(2) if he will list (a) the original in-service date, (b) the current in-service date, (c) the actual or estimated cost, (d) the years of peak expenditure, (e) the expenditure in (d), (f) the date of the initial gate, (g) the date of the main gate and (h) the prime contractor for the projects (i) ASRAAM, (ii) ASTOR, (iii) BVRAAM, (iv) Brimstone, (v) Eurofighter, (vi) FCBA, (vii) FGBAD, (viii) FOAS, (ix) FSTA, (x) Hercules Rolling Replacement Tranche 2, (xi) Merlin HM Mk1, (xii) Merlin HC Mk3, (xiii) Nimrod MRA-4, (xiv) STSA, (xv) CASOM and (xvi) SABR; [127708]

(3) if he will list (a) the original in-service date, (b) the current in-service date, (c) the actual or estimated cost, (d) the years of peak expenditure, (e) the expenditure in (d), (f) the date of the initial gate, (g) the date of the main gate and (h) the prime contractor for the projects (i) Astute Class Submarines, (ii) CV(F), (iii) FASGW, (iv) FCBA, (v) LPD(R) and (vi) MCMU. [127706]

Dr. Moonie: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

British Aerospace

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what discussions he plans to have with British Aerospace about its plans for its defence manufacturing capability, with particular reference to the consolidated site option for the Royal Ordnance Factory, Nottingham; [127589]

(2) what recent representations he has received with respect to job losses at British Aerospace; [127592]

(3) what assessment he has made of the impact of the recent announcement of job losses by British Aerospace on manufacturing capability in the defence industry; [127590]

(4) what assessment he has made of the effect of the recent announcement of job losses by British Aerospace on the Royal Ordnance Factory in Nottingham; and if he will make a statement. [127591]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 23 June 2000]: The future of the Royal Ordnance site at Nottingham is ultimately a matter for BAe Systems. However the decision on its future has still not been finalised and will not be so until the end of June following discussions between the Trade Unions and BAe Systems.

War Graves

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those charged with theft of items from war graves in United Kingdom waters; and of these how many have been successfully prosecuted. [127669]

Dr. Moonie: Ministry of Defence Police investigations have resulted in one individual being charged with theft from a sunken military vessel. The individual accepted an official "Police Caution".

There have been other prosecutions under the Protection of Military Remains Act for offences relating to aircraft.

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to increase the level of protection of United Kingdom war graves; and if he will make a statement. [127670]

Dr. Moonie: The Ministry of Defence, together with other Government Departments has been assisting with Diving Associations' plans for self regulation through the development of a Code of Practice for diving on wrecks.

The aim of the Code is to re-educate divers to adopt best practices when diving on all wrecks. Current training and other publications, issued by the diving organisations, will be reviewed to take account of the legal and moral responsibilities of those who dive on wrecks. In addition a new "Wreck Diving Law Course" is being piloted by the British SubAqua Club (BSAC). Information and guidance on "Respecting Our Wrecks" already appears on the Diving Associations' websites.

Mechanisms for enforcement of the Code of Practice and other initiatives, which could result in expulsion from the organisation, are already in place in the Associations' constitution. Any member behaving in a way calculated to be prejudicial to the interests of the club could be expelled. The diving organisations are fully committed to change the way a small minority abuse the wrecks they dive on.

It is expected that this Code will be introduced by the Diving Associations shortly. The Government will assess compliance with the Code and review policy accordingly in the light of subsequent developments.

In addition, my Department has given full support to the Maritime and Coastguard Agency proposed Wreck Amnesty. The aim of the Amnesty is to encourage finders of wreck material raised in the past, but not reported under (s)236 of the 1995 Merchant Shipping Act, to come forward and report past finds. These finds could include light munitions or other potentially dangerous materials; items of historical importance as well as items capable of being returned to the rightful owner. This along with other initiatives supported by the Ministry of Defence is aimed at heightening divers' and other sea users' awareness of their legal and moral responsibilities.

My Department has produced guidance notes for sport divers when diving in the vicinity of wrecked military vessels, these are publicly available.

Along with other Government Departments we continue to encourage safe, responsible and legal diving practices.

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what protection, other than protection under the Protection of Military Remains Act 1986, there is for United Kingdom war graves in (a) United Kingdom and (b) other waters; and what methods of enforcing this protection there are. [127668]

Dr. Moonie: Legally a "war grave" is a burial maintained by the Commonwealth War Grave Commission. Since a sunken vessel is not a "burial" a sunken warship is simply a derelict in Admiralty law and has no greater or special legal status.

I am unaware of any other legislation specially drafted for the protection of underwater human remains. The fact that a vessel has not been designated does not mean that a person can remove items from a vessel with impunity. Other laws may apply.

The Protection of Wrecks Act 1973, provides protection of wreck sites that are of archaeological or historical significance or are dangerous. The Merchant Shipping Act 1995, which incorporates the International Salvage Convention 1989, provides for the rights of both owners and finders of wreck.

If there is a breach of the law then the appropriate enforcement authorities will enforce the law.

My Department is unaware of any international legislation for the protection of underwater military human remains. The United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea does, however, cover archaeological and historical objects found at sea which could include human remains.

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) vessels and (b) controlled sites have been designated under section 2 of the Protection of Military Remains Act 1986. [127666]

Dr. Moonie: No vessels or controlled sites have been designated under section 2 of the Protection of Military Remains Act 1986.

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the United Kingdom war graves in (a) United Kingdom waters, (b) international waters, and (c) waters belonging to other countries. [127667]

Dr. Moonie: There is no centrally held list of wrecked military vessels that lie in UK territorial water, international waters or the territorial waters of other countries and no one single source of reference which identifies all vessels lost in the service of the Admiralty or on Government Service since 1914.

The returns to Parliament following the end of both world wars, Navy Losses and Merchant Shipping Losses, list some 12,000 vessels. They list for WWI: the total number of warship losses 254; Auxiliary vessels 815, Merchant 2,479, Fishing vessels 675. WWII: Warships and Auxiliary vessels 1,503, Landing craft 1,308 and Merchant vessels 4,786. No distinction is made between those vessels in Government Service or Mercantile vessels. Only one List identifies vessels where lives were lost. These records have not been updated in the intervening years.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many parliamentary questions were tabled to his Department between 19 October 1999 and the 20 April which requested information, pursuant to previous answers. [127671]

Dr. Moonie: According to the Parliamentary On-Line Information System, POLIS, during the period 19 October 1999 to 20 April 2000, the Ministry of Defence received 51 Parliamentary Questions requesting information pursuant to previous answers.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Information Technology

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to ensure that computers and software used in schools under the Government's IT initiative, are upgraded to reflect technical change; and what criteria are used to determine when equipment is obsolete and in need of replacement. [119745]

Mr. Wills: The Government are supporting £657 million of investment in schools' information and communications technology (ICT) provision up to 2002 as part of the National Grid for Learning Initiative. This funding may be used to install new equipment and software and to replace or upgrade older infrastructure. It is a matter for schools themselves in the light of their own particular needs to decide when equipment and software has come to the end of its useful life. Regular competitions held by the British Educational Communications and Technology Agency to certify NGfL Managed Service suppliers set standards which ensure that the networks, equipment and services available to schools and other learning institutions keep pace with technical and other changes.

Online Services

Mr. Robert Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the services which (a) his Department and (b) the executive agencies responsible to his Department (i) provide online and (ii) expect to be deliverable online by 2002. [119442]

Mr. Wills: The Department for Education and Employment has made a good start on an ambitious programme of work, making innovative use of new technology in the delivery of our services.

We currently provide a range of services electronically that include:

Childcare Link—internet access to joined-up information on childcare from a number of organisations;

The National Grid for Learning, including the Virtual Teachers' Centre and Parents' Website;

The European Social Fund, where the application and administration process is electronically enabled, and we are developing an enhanced service to applicants allowing the completion and return of the electronic application over the internet, reducing bureaucracy and providing a better service to customers; and

The National Careers Service Extranet is a password-protected site for DfEE and the Careers Services National Association to communicate with Careers Service companies and other organisations for sharing information and good practice. With the development of the Connexions Service, the scope of the Extranet is to be broadened to allow access/use by a range of other partners including youth organisations.

The Learning and Work Bank, an internet site to be available from the end of November 2000, will provide integrated access to information about jobs, learning opportunities and careers.

The Employment Service will provide and maintain a Job Bank with all ES vacancies, which will be an essential component of the Learning and Work Bank. By the end of 2000, employers will be able to notify the ES of vacancies for inclusion on the Job Bank by calling a single national telephone number. Touch-screen kiosks will be introduced into Jobcentres between November 2000 and November 2001, which will provide job seekers with direct access to the Job Bank. The Job Bank will also be accessible from home by those with internet access.

Equality Direct is a cross-cutting project on which the DfEE is working with the three Equality Commissions and the DTI. The service is part of the Modernising Government agenda aimed to respond more directly to business needs for information and advice on equal opportunities issues. The proposal is, by September 2000, to launch a pilot telephone advice-line England wide, an internet website, and in more limited locations, local support teams to provide direct assistance to small and medium sized businesses.

We are keen to use new innovative interactive technologies to support learning and teaching. The UfI's "learndirect" online learning, support and information and advice services will be launched nationally later this year and my Secretary of State recently announced an e-universities initiative to develop a portfolio of courses suitable for delivery over the internet and pilot projects for the delivery of courses in Mathematics, Latin and Japanese for 11–14 year olds (Key Stage 3). These projects complement other pilots in the use of interactive digital TV to deliver GCSE courses and the GridClub pupil centre for 7–11 year olds to be launched in September over a range of platforms and technologies. The virtual arm of the National College for School Leadership, due to open this autumn, will establish new networks within the teaching profession.

We are developing a smart card for 16–19 year olds in education which will give access to a range of transport, leisure and commercial discounts. The first Youth Cards will be issued in autumn 2000 with functionality being added incrementally during 2001–02.

As part of the drive to improve our contacts with employers, and to give them a new channel of communication, we have set up an e-mail forum for small to medium sized firms. This forum will improve our communication with employers on skills, development and key employment issues.

We are also keen to maximise the opportunities presented by new technologies to speed up and simplify processes. Our proposal to develop an online application process for student support will provide an initial eligibility application form on the internet and the electronic exchange of data in 2000. We are also developing a paperless applications process for work permits which will ensure we provide a swift and efficient service, where the facility to receive electronic applications will be introduced early in 2001.

Automated collection of statistical information will reduce the administrative burden on schools. A small pilot trial of the use of internet technologies to collect data from the education sector is under way. If the pilot is successful, all data collection, except where schools prefer to use paper returns, will be electronic by April 2002. The prototype of a national electronic delivery and archiving service providing online DfEE information to schools and LEAs was successful and continues to be used by the growing pilot population. In particular, the use of 'Push' technology directs users to items matching their interest profile. A national service will be introduced in September 2000, reducing bureaucracy and the administrative burden.

Nursery Places

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) full-time and (b) part-time nursery places were provided in each London local authority in (i) 1996–97, (ii) 1997–98, (iii) 1998–99 and (iv) 1999–2000 for (a) three-year-olds, (b) four-year-olds and (c) all children aged under five years. [125418]

Ms Hodge: The available information on the number of children under five who are in some form of early years education is shown in the table.

Currently, all eligible four year old children in England are in some form of early education, including 16 per cent. in private and voluntary places. Funding is provided through the early years partnerships for LEA, voluntary and private places.

Since September 1999, we have invested substantially in the creation of new, free early educations places for three-year-olds. During 1999–2000, funding was focused on 65 authorities, chosen on the basis of social need, and over 46,000 three-year-olds were able to access free early education for the first time.

Over 80 per cent. of new free places were concentrated in the private, voluntary and independent sectors and we expect this trend to continue over the next year. Our aim is that 66 per cent. of three-year-olds nationally should have access to a free early education place by March 2002, enabling some 190,000 three-year-olds the opportunity to access a free place for the first time.

[1] Provisional
[2] Numbers of pupils collected from maintained schools in England in January each year as part of the Annual Schools' Census.
[3] Estimates combining Annual Schools' Census data from maintained schools in January 1998–2000 and data submitted by LEAs for Nursery Education grant purposes relating to private, voluntary and independent sector providers in spring.
[4] LEAs eligible in 2000 to provide funding for three-year-olds in the private, voluntary and independent sectors via Early Years Development and Childcare Partnerships.

Teachers

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many teachers left the teaching profession in each of the last five years. [126316]

Ms Estelle Morris: The number of full and part-time teachers leaving the maintained nursery, primary, secondary, special and PRU sector[1] in England in each of the last five years for which data are available are shown in the following table.

	Moving out of service[2]	Retirements[3]	Other[4]
1993–94	17,100	14,100	400
1994–95	18,000	14,100	400
1995–96	15,600	15,200	400
1996–97	15,800	16,900	400
1997–98	17,100	16,800	300

[1] Excludes those leaving sixth form colleges. Sixth form colleges became part of the FE sector at 1 April 1993.
[2] Teachers leaving the maintained nursery, primary, secondary, special and PRU sector to join FE, HE or the independent schools sector have been shown as moving out of service.
[3] Teachers retiring but then rejoining the maintained nursery, primary, secondary, special and PRU sector have not been shown as moving out of service or retiring. Teachers retiring and then joining the FE, HE or the independent schools sector have been shown as moving out of service.
[4] Teachers barred from service and dying in service.

Note:
Figures are rounded to the nearest 100.

There has been a growth of 6,900 full time equivalent regular teachers in the maintained school sector between January 1998 and January 2000.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what are the estimated (a) administrative and (b) monitoring costs of the threshold pay scheme for teachers. [127155]

Ms Estelle Morris: Cambridge Education Associates (CEA) and the Centre for British Teachers (CfBT) have been contracted to work with the Department to administer and monitor the threshold assessment arrangements in England. The costs associated with these contracts are commercial in confidence. Threshold assessments in Wales will be managed by five consortia of Welsh local education authorities, on a slightly later timescale than in England. The cost of the Department's contracts with the Welsh consortia has not yet been finalised.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many teachers are directly employed by LEAs; what estimate he has made of the number that would apply for threshold pay; when he made that estimate; and how many have applied to date. [127140]

Ms Estelle Morris: There were about 15,000 teachers employed directly by local authorities in England in 1998, of which it is estimated that 75 per cent. were eligible to apply for the threshold this year. When we published the threshold application forms and guidance materials on 24 March 2000 we encouraged all eligible teachers to apply. We did not make any estimate on the numbers of eligible teachers employed directly by local authorities. We will be announcing details about the numbers of teachers that have applied to cross the threshold this year shortly.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many written parliamentary questions were tabled to his Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000; and how many have not received substantive answers, on grounds of disproportionate costs. [127102]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 21 June 2000]: 1,390 Parliamentary questions were tabled to the Department for written reply during this period.

51 of the replies given advised that some or all of the information requested could either be provided only at disproportionate cost or was not held centrally.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he will give a substantive reply to the question of 6 June tabled by the hon. Member for Hertsmere (ref. 125303). [127729]

Mr. Wicks: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 23 June 2000, Official Report, column 329W.

Summerhill School

Dr. Palmer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will estimate the cost of the nine Ofsted inspections of Summerhill School between 1991 and 1999. [127624]

Ms Estelle Morris: This is a matter for Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools, Chris Woodhead. I have asked him to write to my hon. Friend and to place a copy of his letter in the Library.

Interactive Voice Response Systems

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many agencies of his Department use interactive voice response systems when dealing with telephone inquiries from the general public. [127551]

Mr. Wills: As far as we are aware, there are no interactive voice systems in use within the agencies of the Department for Education and Employment for dealing with telephone inquiries from the general public.

Connexions Services

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what the proposed timetable is for the testing of approaches to establish the Connexions Services in England; and what plans he has to publish the evidence. [127475]

Mr. Wicks: Activity began in pilots in April this year. This will continue for at least 12 months, but with the phased introduction of Connexions from April 2001, it may be necessary to extend the life of some of the pilots, so as to ensure continued testing until the service is in place throughout the country. Decisions on this will be taken when we know the areas that will launch the Connexions Service from April 2001. Where pilots are focusing on themes that we already know need longer testing, we have agreed extended contracts for this purpose (e.g. for Huntercombe Young Offenders Institution).

We have introduced a process of action based research, which will ensure the lessons learned from these pilots are communicated very quickly to the pilots themselves, to policy and planning officials and to the wider community who have an interest in these developments. We have already scheduled the first of a series of pilot conferences for the 4 and 5 July 2000, which will bring people together to learn from early piloting experience. In addition, we are developing other means to ensure wide circulation of information, including development of websites and use of existing publications.

Public-Private Partnerships

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment by what mechanisms sub-regional private/public partnerships which have previously been supported by TECs will be sustained after March 2001. [127564]

Mr. Wicks: We have asked all TECs to produce transition plans which set out strategies for taking forward partnership work extending beyond March 2001, including what steps need to be taken to fill the gaps which may be left by the withdrawal of TEC support. Government Offices are in discussion with TECs about these plans.

The new Learning and Skills Council (LSC) will have an important role in ensuring learning and skills form an integral part of wider economic regeneration plans. Through provisions we are adding to the Learning and Skills Bill, each local LSCs will have to include in its annual plan a statement of how its activities will impact on the economic development and regeneration of the area.

In addition we are making arrangements with the Regional Development Agencies to help support some types of partnerships from April 2001.

Higher Education (Warrington, North)

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of 18 year olds in the Warrington, North constituency have entered higher education in each of the last 10 years. [127321]

Mr. Wicks: These data are not collated centrally on a constituency basis.

TREASURY

Overseas Assets

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is his estimate of the total of UK residents' assets held (a) overseas and (b) in the Isle of Man and the Channel Islands; and what is his assessment of the effects of these holdings being overseas on the tax base in Britain; [124351]

(2) if he will estimate the change in the amount of sterling deposits held by (a) foreigners and (b) UK residents in the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man in 1999. [124343]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I refer my hon. Friend to Table 18 of the Bank of England's Monetary and Financial Statisuics.

Endowment Policies

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what recent discussions he has had with insurers, banks and building societies who advised on and sold under-performing endowment policies on redress for the purchasers of endowment policies which have underperformed; [127361]

(2) if he will make it his policy to provide financial assistance to those people with projected shortfalls on their endowment mortgage policies. [127360]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Monmouth (Mr. Edwards) on 23 May 2000, Official Report, columns 415–16W.

Insurance Industry

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the answer of 11 May 2000, Official Report, column 468W, on the insurance industry, what his policy is on permitting discrimination between consumers by the insurance industry on the grounds of (a) disability, (b) ethnicity and (c) sexual orientation. [127394]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Government expect insurers to treat customers fairly, and act in accordance with the law.

Community, Voluntary and Charitable Groups

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated cost of giving a full fuel tax rebate to community, voluntary and charitable groups. [127414]

Mr. Timms: No estimate of the cost of giving a full fuel tax rebate to community, voluntary and charitable groups is available.

Climate Change Levy

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer to what extent proceeds from the Climate Change Levy will be used to promote the development of offshore wind energy. [127477]

Mr. Timms: Offshore wind generation stands to benefit in two respects from the climate change levy package. Firstly, the Government intend to exempt from the levy electricity generated from 'new' renewable sources of energy, such as offshore wind. Secondly, £50 million of the revenue raised by the levy will be recycled to business as a whole via an 'energy efficiency' fund. This fund aims to promote the development of 'new' sources of renewable energy and low carbon technologies and provide energy efficiency advice and audits to businesses. Allocations of the fund between these aims will be announced in the forthcoming spending review.

Charitable Giving

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to grant further concessions for charitable giving in aid of public services. [127242]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 22 June 2000]: In his Budget Speech the Chancellor announced a generous package of measures aimed at increasing charitable giving. The Getting Britain Giving measures emerged as a result of our review of charity ta..ation and go well beyond the initial proposals set out in our consultation document. The measures are estimated to be worth around £400 million a year to charities and a wide range of charities and donors have welcomed them.

We have no plans to grant further concessions for charitable giving at this time.

Credit Unions

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to encourage the use of credit unions as part of neighbourhood renewal schemes. [127162]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 22 June 2000]: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice) on 7 December 1999, Official Report, columns 521–22W.

Air Passenger Duty

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the reduction in air passenger duty on economy flights within the European Economic Area will come into force; and what the reduction will be. [127641]

Mr. Timms: At present the air passenger duty on any flight from the UK to a destination in the EEA is £10. From 1 April next year the air passenger duty on passengers in the lowest class of travel on a flight within the European Economic Area will be £5. It will remain at £10 for those not in the lowest class of travel.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many of the written parliamentary questions tabled to his Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April have not received substantive answers, for the reason that the information is (a) not held centrally, (b) not held in the form requested and (c) not available. [127681]

Mr. Timms: Obtaining the information requested would entail the scrutiny individually of nearly, 1,500 written answers and could be undertaken only at disproportionate cost.

Correspondence

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will reply to letters from the hon. Member for West Derbyshire, dated 2 March and 25 May, about Mr. Nigel Francis of Sudbury, Derbyshire. [127728]

Mr. Timms: I replied to the hon. Member on 21 June.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Police Witnesses (Waiting Time)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what progress has been made in the last three years in reducing the waiting time of police officers in (a) magistrates' and (b) higher courts. [127345]

Jane Kennedy: Police witnesses in magistrates' courts in November 1997 waited an average 1 hour 21 minutes before they were either called to give evidence or released. This fell to 1 hour 18 minutes in November 1998 and 1 hour 15 minutes in November 1999 (the latest survey for which results are available). In the Crown court, police witnesses waited an average of 3 hours 12 minutes in November 1997, 3 hours 6 minutes in November 1998 and 2 hours 54 minutes in November 1999.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will review the adequacy of provision of and access to legal information and help services for asylum seekers and refugees living in Sunderland and Newcastle; and if he will make a statement. [127232]

Mr. Lock: The Legal Services Commission has awarded seven contracts in the immigration category of law, both to solicitors and not-for-profit organisations, in the Sunderland and Newcastle area.

The Commission is aware that there is at present an increase in need due to the dispersal of asylum seekers to the North East Region. It has taken immediate steps to ensure that legal advice is available by making arrangements for suppliers from outside the region to travel to provide the necessary help.

The Government have already increased remuneration rates for immigration and have allocated an additional £23 million of resources to the Commission for asylum work.

The Commission is now in the process of implementing a package to improve the availability of sufficient quality legal representatives for asylum seekers dispersed throughout the country. As part of this, the Commission is looking at the way in which payments are made to immigration practitioners and how cash-flow could be improved.

Addressing payment regimes, along with the funding of training programmes around the country and a range of other measures, will increase expertise and encourage existing firms to expand and new firms to enter this important area of work.

Human Rights Act

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer of 10 April 2000, Official Report, column 21W, on human rights legislation, to my right hon. Friend the Member for Maidstone and The Weald (Miss Widdecombe), if he will break down the overall figure for the costs of implementing the Human Rights Act 1998 in the courts. [127620]

Jane Kennedy: The Government have planned carefully for implementation of the Act by setting aside funds for extra court sitting days if they are needed. These funds are contained within the Government's planned overall spending totals. The information requested is set as follows:

Court service costs	£million
Crown Court	16.3
Crown Office and Court of Appeal	2.3
Magistrates' Courts	2.4

Civil Justice System

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he intends to publish plans for the use of information technology in support of the civil justice system. [128062]

Mr. Lock: The Lord Chancellor's Department will publish a paper tomorrow, entitled 'Civil.Justice.2000: A vision of the Civil Justice System in the Information Age'. Copies will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses and on the internet at the Lord Chancellor's Department website (http://www.open.gov.uk/lcd).

WALES

Welsh Assembly Committees

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the occasions when (a) ministers and (b) officials from his Department have been invited to give evidence to Welsh Assembly committees; how many have been accepted; how many have been refused; if he will give the reasons for each refusal; and what was the subject matter to be discussed for each invitation. [126684]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 22 June 2000]: No Ministers or officials from my Department have been invited to give evidence to a Committee of the National Assembly for Wales.

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will outline his policy on (a) ministers and (b) officials from his Department accepting invitations to give evidence to committees of the Welsh Assembly in relation to the impact of reserved matters on devolved policy areas. [126683]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 22 June 2000]: The Government policy for Ministers and officials accepting invitations to give evidence to committees of the Welsh Assembly is that set out in Devolution Guidance Note Number 12, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many written parliamentary questions tabled to his Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April have not received substantive answers, for reasons of commercial or other confidentiality. [127684]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Two written questions tabled between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000 have not received substantive answers for reasons of confidentiality.

SCOTLAND

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many Regional Selective Assistance applications were granted for each local authority area in Scotland in each year since RSA was introduced; and what was the value of each application. [126631]

Dr. Reid: RSA was introduced in 1972 under the terms of the Industry Act 1972 and subsequently the Industrial Development Act 1982. Since 1 July 1999, administration of Regional Selective Assistance grants in Scotland has been the responsibility of the Scottish Executive. Information on the number and value of grants offered is published annually in the Industrial Development Act 1982 Annual Report by the Secretaries of State for Trade and Industry, Scotland and for Wales for the year ending 31 March. Detailed information on grants in the form requested by the hon. Member is not readily available and could not be provided except at disproportionate cost.

Scottish Parliament Committees

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what instructions he has given (a) Ministers and (b) officials regarding accepting invitations to give evidence to Scottish Parliament committees; and what his policy is in relation to such invitations. [126671]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 20 June 2000]: Devolution Guidance Note 12, available in the Library, provides guidance for Ministers and officials of UK Departments who are invited to give evidence to Committees of the Scottish Parliament. I have not issued further guidance within the Scotland Office. Any invitations to give evidence to Ministers in my Department would be considered in the light of DGN 12.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the occasions when (a) ministers and (b) officials from his Department have been invited to give evidence to Scottish Parliament committees; how many have been accepted; how many have been refused; if he will give the reasons for each refusal; and what was the subject matter to be raised on each occasion. [126672]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 20 June 2000]: I have been invited to give evidence to the European Committee twice, about the European Structural Funds. I have declined because the primary requirement of accountability for UK Ministers is to the UK Parliament, and because I had received similar invitations from the Scottish Affairs Select Committee.

Erskine Bridge

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the Scottish Office recovered all of the costs of the repairs to the Erskine Bridge, following the damage caused by an offshore structure, from the parties deemed to be negligent; and if he will make a statement. [126692]

Dr. Reid: Responsibility for the recovery of costs of repairs to the Erskine Bridge is a matter for the Scottish Executive.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many written parliamentary questions were tabled to his Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April; and how many have not received substantive answers for reasons of disproportionate cost. [127683]

Dr. Reid: Our records show that 132 written questions were tabled to my Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000. Of these, two questions did not receive substantive answers and two questions were not answered fully for reasons of disproportionate cost.

Written Answers to Questions

DEFENCE

Missile Defence System

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what criteria the Government will employ in making a decision on the deployment of a national missile defence system; [126947]

(2) if the results of his Department's Technology, Readiness and Risk Assessment programme will be available before a decision is taken on whether to allow UK facilities to be used in a US national missile defence system; [126949]

(3) on what basis a decision will be made on whether to allow the USA to upgrade the facilities at Fylingdales for a national missile defence system; [126948]

(4) what recent discussions there have been between the UK and the USA regarding options for locating anti-ballistic missile sites in the UK; [126942]

(5) what assessment he has (a) made recently and (b) plans to make of the impact of a national missile defence system on the security of the UK. [126946]

Mr. Hoon: We have discussed, and continue to discuss, a range of aspects of possible proposals for a US National Missile Defence system with the United States. The US has not asked for UK assistance in the deployment of the proposed system, nor would we expect them to do so until after a US decision on whether to proceed with its deployment. In discussions with the US Administration we have made it clear that the UK would consider any such request carefully, taking into account a wide range of factors, including the implications for UK defence.

The MOD's Technology Readiness and Risk Assessment Programme is due to be completed next summer. I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Chingford and Woodford Green (Mr. Duncan Smith) on 12 June 2000, Official Report, column 451W.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if NATO has (a) carried out and (b) is undertaking research into ballistic missile defences. [126938]

Mr. Hoon: We are not aware of any research carried out or being undertaken by NATO into ballistic missile defences. The Ministry of Defence has, however, contributed to NATO studies on the subject, including preparations for studies into the feasibility of theatre ballistic missile defence. We expect these studies to start next year.

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions have taken place between the UK and the USA on sea-based ballistic missile defences. [126945]

Mr. Hoon: The UK is not directly involved in the US sea-based Theatre Missile Defence programme but limited information exchange and collaborative research has been undertaken.

Porton Down

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment the Chemical Defence Establishment at Porton Down has made of the toxicity to humans of (a) the nerve agent GF and (b) sarin GB. [127132]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Matthew Taylor, dated 27 June 2000:

I am replying to your parliamentary question about nerve agents and their toxicity to humans since the laboratories at Porton Down are part of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA).

GB (sarin) and GF (cyclosarin) are organophosphorus nerve agents developed during World War II in Germany. Both agents are highly toxic chemicals. GB is a highly volatile liquid and is a particular hazard following inhalation. GF is some 30–35 times less volatile and presents a particular hazard from absorption through skin. In hot climates, however, GF may also present a significant hazard from inhalation.

Both GB and GF are potent inhibitors of the enzyme acetylcholinesterase, which is responsible for the control of the important chemical messenger acetylcholine within the nervous system. When humans are poisoned, the signs and symptoms of acute poisoning progress from a general feeling of malaise, pinpoint pupils (miosis), excessive sweating, salivation, runny nose and breathing difficulties, through nausea, vomiting and muscle tremor, to loss of consciousness, convulsions and death from respiratory failure. The severity of these signs and their rate of progress depends upon the dose and route of exposure to the nerve agents. In general, those agents absorbed through the skin, such as GF, will exhibit a delayed onset of poisoning and those which are inhaled, such as GB, will exhibit a very rapid onset (within 1–2 min) of signs and symptoms of poisoning.

A knowledge of the toxicity of these nerve agents has been built up over the years since the Second World War. Assessments have been prompted by intelligence reports of the chemical arsenals of potential aggressors, for example Iraq. They have been based upon studies in animals and to a limited extent in humans conducted within the UK and the Allied Nations. A number of these studies were carried out at Porton Down between 1948 and 1989. The last trial looked at the effects on the eye of low levels of GB. The trial was conducted to assess the effects from "the maximum dosage of nerve agent vapour to the eyes acceptable for aircrew" under NATO prescribed conditions. Scientists at Porton Down have also undertaken three paper exercises to examine the possible long-term effects of nerve agent exposure using the service medical records of volunteers previously exposed to GB. None of the three studies showed any significant difference between the patterns of days lost through illness, the number of specialist appointments or the number of hospital admissions between the control and exposed groups.

Medical countermeasures to both GB and GF have been developed at CBD Porton Down and the combination of pre-treatment with Nerve Agent Pre-Treatment Set (NAPS) tablets and use of the ComboPen injector, which contains atropine, an oxime (P2S) and an anticonvulsant (Avizafone), provide effective antidotes against poisoning by these agents.

I hope the above is helpful.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment (Porton Down) has compiled since 1970 on individuals who took part in the service volunteer programme; and for what reasons. [127133]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Matthew Taylor, dated 27 June 2000:

I am replying to your parliamentary question enquiring about the type of information available on individuals who have participated in the Porton Down service volunteer programme since 1970. I am replying since the laboratories at Porton Down are part of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA).

Records of volunteers who took part in studies between 1970 to the present day are held in a series of notebooks. These books contain, as a minimum, a volunteer's name, service number, date of attendance and the brief title of the study in which they participated. The general trend is that the more recent the study, the more comprehensive and detailed the information available. In the past, unless the studies involved exposure to chemical warfare agents such as mustard or nerve agents, in which case, additional information regarding the nature of this exposure might be recorded in specific laboratory notebooks, often the only surviving information on a volunteer's attendance is a simple entry in a summary book. In recent years, our records have become much more comprehensive and include written pre and post study medical examination notes.

The records of the service volunteers are part of the corporate record. This archive is a valuable source of information on which we are able to draw when answering questions from former volunteers, their relatives, general practitioners and the War Pensions Agency about individuals' participation in the volunteers programme.

I hope the above explains the situation.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what dates the Health and Safety Executive has inspected the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down since 1 January 1996. [127134]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Matthew Taylor, dated 27 June 2000:

I am replying to your parliamentary question about Health and Safety Executive inspections at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down, since the establishment is part of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA).

The Health and Safety Executive (HSE) has conducted two formal inspections since 1 January 1996; an inspection was conducted during February 1996 and a further inspection of the areas of the site involved with the handling of explosives was conducted on 31 May 2000. HSE has also visited the site on several occasions between 1996 and 2000 in order to discuss specific issues.

The HSE is expected to conduct a further formal inspection of the site within the next few months.

I hope the above is helpful.

DERA

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many graduate job applications were made and how many jobs were available at DERA in (a) 1997, (b) 1998 and (c) 1999; and how many he expects for 2000. [127605]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Robert Key, dated 27 June 2000:

I am replying to your parliamentary question about graduate recruitment within DERA since such matters relate to the operation of the Agency.

DERA runs a corporate graduate recruitment programme for newly or recently qualified graduates. The figures below apply to this mainly "new" graduate intake.

Year	Number of applications received	Number of vacancies	Appointed
1997–98	3,533	Up to 300	242
1998–99	4,245	Up to 300	242
1999–2000	4,721	Up to 500	457

For the year 2000 we are currently assuming vacancies again of up to 500 but, in view of the current deliberations on the future of the Agency, it is too soon to speculate the precise numbers of graduates eventually to be appointed.

The above figures do not take into account local recruitment of staff for specific appointments, many of whom may well be educated to university standard.

I hope the above is helpful.

Major Andrew Harrison

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if his Department has been in contact with Major Andrew Harrison; [127988]

(2) what measures he has taken to monitor the welfare of Major Andrew Harrison. [127989]

Mr. Hoon: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Chingford and Woodford Green (Mr. Duncan Smith) on 22 June 2000, Official Report, column 243W. The Foreign Secretary and I are monitoring the situation very closely. We are satisfied that everything possible is being done to ensure Major Harrison's safety and welfare.

US Airborne Laser

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what (a) information exchange and (b) co-operation there has been between his Department and the US (i) Department of Defense and (ii) State Department concerning the US Airborne Laser. [126944]

Mr. Hoon: The Ministry of Defence has received limited information from the Department of Defense on the US Airborne Laser programme. There has been no discussion or co-operation on this matter between the MOD and the Department of State.

Staff Secondments

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the senior members of his Department's staff who have been seconded to (a) UK and (b) non-UK companies in (i) 1995–96 and (ii) 1996–97; what posts they held in his Department; what was the cost to his Department of the secondments; and if he will make a statement. [127231]

Dr. Moonie: Details of Ministry of Defence senior civil servants seconded to companies in 1995–96 and 1996–97 and the costs to the Ministry of Defence are given as follows.

1995–96

Company	Role in MOD prior to secondment	Cost
British Railways Board—(UK)[1]	Secretariat to the Adjutant General	£15,000
Docklands Light Railway Ltd.—(UK)[1]	Director IT (Policy)	Nil—fully funded by DLR
Opportunities for People with Disabilities[1]	Assistant Director, Ship Refitting	£60,000 (approximate annual cost)
Raytheon (non-UK)[1]	Director (Commercial) Defence Export Services Organisation	Nil—fully funded by Raytheon

[1] These secondments continued into 1996–97

1996–97

Company	Role in MOD	Cost
Avery Berkel—(UK)	Directorate (Finance and Secretariat) Weapons and Electronic Systems	Nil—fully funded by Avery Berkel
BAe—(UK)	Deputy Chief of Defence Procurement (Support)	Nil—fully funded by BAe

HEALTH

Cancer Treatment

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of urgent referrals by general practitioners of patients with suspected cancer he estimates were seen by cancer specialists in the most recent period for which figures are available. [125256]

Yvette Cooper: Since April 1999, we have set the standard that patients with suspected breast cancer will be offered an appointment with a specialist within two weeks of their general practitioner making an urgent referral. Table 1 shows that in the most recent period (January to March 2000) 96 per cent. of patients referred urgently received an appointment with a specialist within 14 days where the hospital received the referral within 24 hours of the GP deciding to refer. Table 2 shows that nearly 80 per cent. of patients were seen within two weeks where the referral was received outside 24 hours of the GP deciding to refer.

By December 2000 this high quality service will be extended to thousands of other worried patients as the standard is introduced for all cases of suspected cancer requiring urgent investigation.

GP Practices (Patient Proximity)

Caroline Flint: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what definition he uses of a reasonable distance when determining access to a GP practice. [124642]

Mr. Denham: Subject to local planning decisions, it is for health authorities to determine, on a case-by-case basis, whether a surgery meets the reasonable expectations of its users and carers. Travelling distances are an important consideration, but we would expect travelling times, the availability and proximity of public transport and other services (such as National Health Service dispensing) to be taken into account.

East Midlands Ambulance Service

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health further to his answer of 28 February 2000, Official Report, column 76W, on the East Midlands Ambulance Service, when improved control technology for the East Midlands Ambulance Service Trust will be implemented; and how long the process of approval for the project has taken since first submission by the trust. [127011]

Ms Stuart: The National Health Service Executive has been working with the East Midlands Ambulance Service Trust since March 1999 on the process to approve the business case for the procurement of improved control technology. In order that the approval process can move forward as quickly as possible, the trust is currently working to address the concerns which have been highlighted in their latest business case submission. Approval will be granted only if these concerns are met.

If the scheme is commissioned, the trust's project plan suggests that the phased integrated implementation of the new technology will be achieved in around seven months for Leicestershire and eight and a half months for Derbyshire.

Interactive Voice Response Systems

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many agencies of his Department use interactive voice response systems when dealing with telephone inquiries from the general public; [127114]

(2) how many of his Department's telephone lines used by the general public are responded to by interactive voice response systems. [127391]

Ms Stuart: The Department and its agencies have only one telephone line for the general public that is responded to by interactive voice response systems. This is the Department's Public Enquiry Office.

Continence Services

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has (a) to monitor implementation of best practice guidance and (b) to conduct further awareness campaigns in connection with the provision of continence services. [127596]

Mr. Hutton: "Good practice in continence services" was issued on 19 April 2000. This guidance suggests targets for primary and community teams, health authorities and National Health Service trusts. It includes appropriate references to the NHS Performance Assessment Framework, which is used to plan and monitor the delivery of services. A National Service Framework for Older People is currently being developed. This will supplement the guidance on continence services by placing it in the wider context of improving NHS services for older people.

The guidance suggests that action to promote continence awareness should be undertaken locally and where appropriate, in consultation with relevant national organisations.

Internet

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the Government's policy on the sale of medicines on the internet. [127882]

Ms Stuart: There are legal controls on the sale of medicines direct to consumers in order to protect public health and these apply whether the medicine is sold face to face or through the internet. The Medicines Control Agency has a special Internet Unit which investigates all alleged breaches of medicines legislation and has successfully taken action against a number of websites where the law has been broken.

Empty Hospitals

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the cost was of maintaining redundant empty hospital buildings in each region in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [127692]

Mr. Denham: The holding costs of maintaining the surplus estate that is not vested in trusts, once it is vacant and available for disposal, include maintenance, security, rates and utilities.

The last year for which figures are available, ie 1999–2000, for each region are as follows:

Region	£
Northern and Yorkshire	1,500,000
Trent	580,000
Eastern	415,000
London	2,543,000
South-East	2,702,000
South and West	774,000
West Midlands	1,194,000
North-West	598,000
Total	10,306,000

There is a continuing programme of disposals of the surplus estate in the ownership of the Secretary of State, which has realised in excess of £200 million per annum in recent years.

NHS Management

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total remuneration of each NHS health authority's general manager in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [127690]

Mr. Denham: Information on the remuneration of health authority chief executives has been placed in the Library.

Tesco

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action the Food Standards Agency will take regarding the Public Health Laboratory Service testing of Tesco's organic mushrooms; and if the results of the PHLS's inquiry will be made public. [126309]

Ms Stuart: The responsibility for ensuring the accuracy of results from the testing of food lies primarily with the laboratory undertaking the testing. The Food Standards Agency was not involved in the commissioning of the survey in question.

The Public Health Laboratory Service is in the process of completing its inquiry and will make the findings available at the earliest opportunity.

Nursing Care

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the cost of providing free nursing care for elderly people outside hospital. [127495]

Mr. Hutton: National Health Service expenditure on community nursing for people aged 65 and over was £836 million in 1998–99, the latest year for which figures are available. Local council expenditure on nursing home care amounted to £669 million in 1998–99. Extending free nursing care to everyone in nursing homes assessed as needing it would cost an additional sum. The amount would depend on defining the nursing element of nursing home care.

NHS Dentistry

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on widening access to NHS dentistry. [127498]

Mr. Hutton: We have already made good progress towards improving access to dental services. Initiatives include Investing in Dentistry, in which £10 million in grants have been approved in return for promises of nearly 900,000 new National Health Service registrations. Personal dental services explore new ways of providing dentistry for people who cannot easily or conveniently use existing services. A third wave of 14 pilots will be operational by the end of the year, bringing the total number of pilots to more than 50. Dental access centres are one form of PDS pilot. Access centres provide a full range of dental services, at convenient times and in convenient places, to people who cannot at present easily access NHS dentistry. There will be 33 pilots operating from more than 50 access centres by April 2001.

We have accepted the recommendations of the Doctors and Dentists Review Body for a commitment scheme to reward loyalty to the NHS. The scheme will cost £17 million per annum in England, and is currently being negotiated with the profession.

Further initiatives to improve access to services will form part of our plans for modernising NHS dentistry, which will be published this summer in conjunction with the National Plan for the NHS.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Euro 96

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much financial assistance was made available by (a) the National Lottery, (b) the English Sports Council, (c) the Government, (d) the UK Sports Council and (e) the Football Trust to assist (i) the preparation of the bid to hold the 1996 European football championships, (ii) with the upgrading of stadiums and other facilities for the 1996 European football championships and (iii) with the running costs of the 1996 European football championships. [127698]

Kate Hoey: Funding for the 1996 European championships was made available as follows:

(a) No Lottery funding was made available, either for the preparation of the bid or for the running of the championships.

(b) The English and UK Sports Councils were not in existence until 1997, but the then GB Sports Council contributed £80,000 towards the costs of the cultural programme.

(c) The Government, through the Association for Business Sponsorship for the Arts and the Sportsmatch scheme, made available a total of £400,000 for the cultural programme which ran alongside the championships in the eight host cities. No other direct Government subvention was made. Much of the expenditure incurred during the running of the tournament, including the costs of additional policing, was met by the local authorities of the eight host cities.

(d) See (b).

(e) The Football Trust provided £19 million towards stadia improvements in the eight host cities during the period from 1993 to 1996. That sum was the Trust's contribution to the £72 million spent by the eight host clubs in the five years before the 1996 championships on essential ground safety work following the publication of the Taylor Report. Taking all professional clubs in England into account, the Trust made available £136 million for Taylor-related work over that five-year period. The Trust also contributed a further £500,000 towards the general running costs of the championships.

Annual Reports

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the cost of producing the annual report of (a) his Department and (b) English Heritage was in each of the two most recent years in which they were published. [127845]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 26 June 2000]: (a) The costs incurred producing the Annual Report in each of the last two years were:

	£000
1999	64.6
2000	66.2

This includes the cost of buying back copies for free distribution from The Stationery Office, who are responsible for printing the reports and putting them on sale around the country.

(b) The cost incurred by English Heritage producing their 1999 Annual Report was £85,000.

I will publish the results of their 1998 Annual Report as soon as they have provided it to me.

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when the review of the transparency of the BBC's financial reporting will commence; and if he will make a statement. [128140]

Mr. Chris Smith: In their response to the Davies panel's report on the future funding of the BBC, the Government announced that they would appoint independent consultants to examine the transparency of the BBC's financial reporting culminating in the publication of the Corporation's Annual Report and Accounts. The BBC's Annual Report and Accounts was published on 21 June and I have today appointed Pannell Kerr Forster to carry out a detailed review of:

the level of information provided in the BBC's "Annual Report and Accounts";

how far the reporting meets the requirements of the Royal Charter and the Government's conclusions on the outcome of the Davies review;

the process that leads up to the disclosure of information in the "Annual Report and Accounts", including the extent to which the Governors are made aware of the issues; existing correspondence from stakeholders to the Department for Culture, Media and Sport and the BBC about the financial information produced; and existing mechanisms employed by the BBC to ensure transparency, including use of focus groups.

The review will commence immediately and will be concluded by the end of July. I will publish Pannell Kerr Forster's findings. Copies of the terms of reference for the review have been placed in the Library of the House.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made in connection with the UK's policy on sanctions against Iraq of the threat to (a) the UK and (b) the United States from Iraqi use of chemical weapons; and what assessment he has made of the evidence submitted by Richard Butler to the UK Government on this subject. [125375]

Mr. Hain [holding answer 20 June 2000]: UK policy on sanctions against Iraq is governed by the relevant United Nations Security Council Resolutions (UNSCRs), not by our assessment of the threat. Richard Butler, the former Executive Chairman of the United Nations Special Commission (UNSCOM) has submitted no evidence to the UK Government on the subject of Iraqi weapons of mass destruction. During his time with UNSCOM, he reported to the United Nations Security Council that numerous serious gaps remained in Iraq's declarations on its chemical and biological weapons and ballistic missile programmes. We share his concern over this, hence the importance we attach to re-establishing weapons inspection regime in Iraq under UNSCR 1284.

The UK's assessment of the threat posed by Iraq's chemical weapons capabilities can be found in the MOD document "Defending Against the Threat from Biological and Chemical Weapons", published in July 1999.

Entry Clearance Interviews

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the current waiting times in each queue for entry to the UK for settlement in each post in the Indian subcontinent and in (a) Manila, (b) Bangkok, (c) Lagos, (d) Abuja, (e) Accra, (f) St. Petersburg and (g) Moscow. [127112]

Mr. Vaz: The most recent information available from the Posts concerned shows the following waiting times for settlement entry clearance interviews:

Bilateral Treaties (Republic of Ireland)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a list of bilateral treaties and agreements which have been agreed with the Government of the Republic of Ireland since 1 January 1997, including the title of each treaty and agreement and the date on which it was signed. [127138]

Mr. Vaz: I have placed a list of Treaties and Agreements between the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and Ireland signed since 1 January 1997 in the Library of the House today.

European Union

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on present and future activities of the Europe Made Easy Programme in the United Kingdom. [127188]

Mr. Vaz: My Department is not aware of this programme.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions since 1 May 1997 his office has referred hon. Members in parliamentary answers to the office of the European Commission in London; and if he will make a statement on his policy of referral, with particular reference to ministerial accountability. [127192]

Mr. Vaz: We refer hon. Members to the European Commission when their questions relate to Commission policy or to facts about programmes and projects for which the Commission is responsible. We do not keep a record of numbers.

Moluccas

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received from HM diplomatic posts in Indonesia on the human rights situation in the Moluccas. [127237]

Mr. Battle: We receive regular reports from the Embassy in Jakarta on the worrying developments in Maluku. We deplore the loss of all life resulting from the violence, in particular the escalating violence in recent days with over 100 people killed and over 200 injured. This represents a major threat to stability. We are playing a key role in the EU and the UN in calling on the Indonesian Government to work on peaceful resolution to the violence. EU representatives called on the Indonesian Government on 12 June, to remind them of their responsibility to maintain law and order, and to request an investigation and immediate steps to bring the perpetrators to justice. As part of the international effort through the United Nations Development Programme we have already funded two conferences on reconciliation in Maluku. With our partners and international agencies we are actively looking at other ways of promoting reconciliation.

Interactive Voice Response Systems

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many agencies of his Department use interactive voice response systems when dealing with telephone inquiries from the general public. [127553]

Mr. Battle: In the UK no FCO Department uses interactive voice response systems when dealing with telephone inquiries from the general public.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many of his Department's telephone lines used by the general public are responded to by interactive voice response systems. [127388]

Mr. Battle: None of the FCO's telephone lines used by the general public is responded to by interactive voice systems. Where it is sensible and efficient to use them there is an increasing use of telephone lines which are answered by voice processing systems, but these respond to touch-tone telephones rather than the human voice. These systems are deployed overseas only where the in-country telephone infrastructure is good and where it is common practice for such systems to be deployed.

Kosovo

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if any of the Kosovo Protection Corps have been (a) arrested and (b) questioned following the weapons find in the village of Kleck; and if he will make a statement. [127556]

Mr. Vaz: Following the weapons find by KFOR, investigations are under way to establish who was responsible for the arms cache. A wide range of people are likely to be questioned, including members of the Kosovo Protection Corps, but it is too early to say yet whether KPC members were directly involved. The Government welcome KFOR's discovery of this illegal weapons site and will support tough action taken against those found responsible.

Democratic Republic of Congo

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what actions he proposes to take to prevent the sale in the UK and dependent territories of diamonds and other commodities being used to fund conflicts in the Democratic Republic of Congo. [127704]

Mr. Hain: The UK is a leading actor in supporting international efforts to tackle the problem of illicit diamonds and other commodities being used to finance wars in Africa.

We have supported the establishment of a UN expert panel to follow up on reports and collect information on the exploitation of DRC's natural resources. We look forward to the panel's recommendations to the Security Council.

We want to see a peaceful resolution of the conflict, and DRC's natural wealth used to benefit the people of DRC.

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent conflict in Kisangani. [127703]

Mr. Hain: We deplore the recent fighting between Ugandan and Rwandan forces in Kisangani. Their actions have put the Lusaka Agreement at risk and led to widespread suffering for the people of Kisangani. We have expressed our concerns to both governments bilaterally and supported the UN Security Council Resolution 1304 which calls for both parties to cease hostilities and withdraw all their forces from the territory of the Democratic Republic of Congo.

The United Nations observer mission in Kisangani has informed us that both sets of troops have withdrawn from the town. We continue to monitor the situation closely.

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will press for a mandatory EU arms embargo on countries involved in the conflict in the Democratic Republic of Congo. [127705]

Mr. Hain: As a signatory to the EU Code of Conduct on arms exports the UK will not allow exports which would provoke or prolong armed conflicts or aggravate existing tensions or conflicts in the country of final destination.

At the General Affairs Council (GAC) on 22 May the Council invited the EU/SADC working group on illicit trafficking in small arms and light weapons to examine in its next meeting practical measures to prevent arms flowing to conflict zones in the Great Lakes Region.

The Council also mandated its relevant bodies to consider whether an arms embargo on the parties to the conflict would be appropriate.

Pakistan

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made regarding the re-establishment of democratic Government in Pakistan; and if he will make a statement. [127836]

Mr. Hain: Although we cannot endorse the recent ruling by Pakistan's Supreme Court that last October's coup was legitimate, we have noted the Court's ruling that national elections should be held within three years. We are encouraged that General Musharraf has apparently accepted this. We have continued to urge Pakistan's military to announce a clear and credible timetable for the transition to full democracy, most recently when the Permanent Under-Secretary at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office met his Pakistani counterpart on 22 June.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the proposed budget is for the UNAMSIL deployment in Sierra Leone for the year 2000. [127659]

Mr. Hain: The UNAMSIL budget for July 1999 to June 2000 is US$266,610,000, and for July 2000 to June 2001 US$504,399,051.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many child soldiers have been demobilised by pro-Government forces in Sierra Leone since 8 May. [127658]

Mr. Hain: The screening and demobilisation of child soldiers from pro-Government forces in Sierra Leone is continuing. The screening programme is to identify those children who have actually been involved in fighting. Of the 135 children who have recently entered the screening programme, 32 were identified as child soldiers.

We welcome the Government of Sierra Leone's policy that there must be no place for children in the Sierra Leone armed forces, and that all child soldiers must be disarmed and demobilised. We will continue to press for the early release of all child soldiers in Sierra Leone.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has (i) made to and (ii) received from the Presidents of (a) Nigeria, (b) Liberia and (c) Sierra Leone, regarding the ECOWAS bid to broker a ceasefire between Sierra Leone Government forces and RUF rebels. [127652]

Mr. Hain: We remain in regular touch with ECOWAS states over the situation in Sierra Leone. We support the efforts of ECOWAS to help restore stability throughout Sierra Leone and bring about an end to violence.

President Kabbah has made clear that, before any ceasefire, the Revolutionary United Front must meet a number of conditions, including the immediate and unconditional release of all UN peacekeepers and other detainees.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the attendance of observers for the forthcoming elections in Zimbabwe. [127718]

Mr. Hain: Around 400 international observers from such organisations as the Commonwealth, the European Union, the Organisation for African Unity and the Southern African Development Community, as well as national groups are present in Zimbabwe.

We are dismayed that the Government of Zimbabwe has not allowed the United Nations Development Programme to co-ordinate the activities of the various observer missions, but we understand that there is a good degree of informal co-ordination between the observer teams.

Iran

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, during his forthcoming visit to Iran, he will raise with the Government the extent of religious freedom in Iran and the treatment of the Baha'i community. [127985]

Mr. Hain: We and our EU partners have regularly raised our concerns over Iranian treatment of the Baha'is and shall continue to do so. Persecution on religious grounds is totally unacceptable.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs will discuss a number of issues, including human rights, during his visit to Iran on 4–5 July.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Incineration

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if authorities building incinerators can meet their recycling targets through the re-use of the ash. [126468]

Mr. Mullin [holding answer 20 June 2000]: The introduction of new statutory performance standards was announced in the Waste Strategy 2000. Subject to consultation, we intend that the re-use of ash from waste incineration will not count towards achieving these targets.

Information Kiosks

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps his Department is taking to amend planning regulations to remove obstacles to local authorities providing street information kiosks for their local communities. [127303]

Ms Beverley Hughes: We have no current plans to make changes to the planning regulations in respect of local planning authorities providing information kiosks.

Compulsory Purchase Orders

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions in what circumstances and by what means a compulsory purchase order in respect of a private dwelling can be rescinded. [126914]

Mr. Raynsford [holding answer 21 June 2000]: Compulsory purchase of property must normally be authorised by compulsory purchase order.

A compulsory purchase order made by a non-ministerial acquiring authority, such as a local authority, must be submitted for decision to the relevant "confirming authority". This is normally the Secretary of State or Minister responsible to Parliament for the legislation and policies which apply in the particular circumstances. An order is made and confirmed under procedures set out in, and regulations prescribed for the purposes of, the Acquisition of Land Act 1981. There are also rules for public local inquiries held for the purposes of that Act.

An acquiring authority may have resolved to make a compulsory purchase order but, before submitting it formally, they may decide that they do not wish to proceed. In these circumstances, no formal compulsory purchase procedures will have been initiated and the confirming authority will have no function to discharge. Once the acquiring authority have formally submitted the order, they have no formal power to withdraw or rescind it but, in practice, it is possible to overcome this potential difficulty. If an authority have submitted a compulsory purchase formally and then decide that they do not wish to proceed with it, for example because they will no longer need to rely on compulsory powers, the normal practice in my Department is to give a short formal decision declining to confirm the order. This serves both to formally discharge the Secretary of State's statutory function and to remove the imminent "threat" of compulsory purchase of property.

If an order is confirmed, the acquiring authority must make the order operative by serving and publishing notice of the confirmation before they may exercise the compulsory powers authorised by the confirmed order. Once the order is operative, unless there is a successful challenge in the High Court, the acquiring authority have three years in which to exercise the compulsory powers by serving a notice to treat, which period may be extended by agreement, or by completing an alternative procedure vesting title to the property in themselves. Hence, one way of rescinding an order at this stage would be to allow the period to lapse, so that the authority would no longer be authorised to exercise compulsory powers. This may happen where, for example, an order was confirmed subject to an undertaking given by the acquiring authority that they would not implement the order if the owner carried out certain repairs by a certain date. Compensation is payable where a notice to treat lapses.

An acquiring authority may withdraw a notice to treat within six weeks of receiving a detailed notice of an owner's claim for compensation given in response to a notice to treat. If a dispute over compensation is referred to the Lands Tribunal, the acquiring authority may still withdraw their notice to treat within six weeks of the Tribunal's final determination. This may happen where, for example, the amount awarded by the Tribunal is higher than the authority are prepared to pay. In either case, the claimant must be reimbursed certain losses and expenses.

Land Remediation

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many mobile plant licences have been issued to practitioners within the land remediation industry; how many licensed the (a) in situ and (b) ex situ remediation of land; and what technologies were involved in each case. [127580]

Mr. Mullin: To date, the Environment Agency has issued 21 mobile plant licences of which six are for in-situ remediation, 14 for ex-situ remediation and one for a combination of both. For practical purposes, the Agency has classified the technologies involved as ex-situ bioremediation (soil treatment beds) (5.5 licences); in-situ bioremediation (1 licence); soil vapour extraction (3.5 licences); soil washing (6 licences); solvent extraction (1 licence); solidification and stabilisation (3 licences); and transformation by chemical treatment (1 licence).

Fuel Poverty

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proportion of housing in the United Kingdom falls below the Standard Assessment Procedure 20 rating for energy efficiency; and what programmes are in place to improve Standard Assessment Procedure ratings in (a) pensioner and (b) single-parent households. [127575]

Mr. Meacher: Using the latest data from the English House Condition Survey, it is estimated that about 8 per cent. of dwellings had an energy efficiency rating under the Standard Assessment Procedure of below 20. The size of the total English housing stock was some 19.6 million dwellings.

The energy efficiency of pensioner and single-parent households are being improved through a range of programmes as described.

The Home Energy Efficiency Scheme (HEES) has been radically overhauled as of 1 June 2000. The scheme now provides grants for packages of heating and insulation improvement measures, including the provision of high efficiency central heating systems for low income households aged 60 years or more. The grant maximum has been increased from £315 to between £700 and £2,000 depending on the composition of each household and the condition of the dwelling. The scheme is focused on the private sector where nearly 70 per cent. of the fuel poor in England are found. In the case of pensioners and single parents, eligibility is linked to the receipt of an income-related benefit or one of the main disability benefits. Of the 460,000 households that are expected to be helped during the first two years of HEES, some 280,000 are likely to be aged 60 years or more.

Government-funded programmes operated by the Energy Saving Trust also improve the energy efficiency both fuel poor households and others.

The Government have also substantially increased the resources available to local authorities over the lifetime of this Parliament, reversing the reductions planned by the previous Government. The extra resources in the first three years, 1997–98 to 1999–2000, were allocated through the Capital Receipts Initiative (CRI). Information collected to monitor the impact of the CRI found that around a quarter to a third of the work on local authorities' own stock financed from this initiative lead either directly or indirectly to improvements in energy efficiency. If this were replicated across all local authority housing capital expenditure on its own stock this would equate to around £400–500 million per annum.

The energy efficiency of low-income households is also likely to be improved through some of the regeneration schemes funded by DETR. These cover a wide range of activities depending on local need, and it is not possible to quantify the precise expenditure on energy efficiency improvements.

To support the installation of energy efficiency measures, the Government also reduced the level of VAT from 1 July 1998 on work carried out on low-income households through eligible schemes such as HEES. The revenue cost of the reduction was £8.5 million a year.

This year's Budget extended the reduced rate at a total cost of £35 million a year. By 2002, the total cost is estimated at £85 million.

The Government are also introducing provisions to enable lessors to claim capital allowances on their investment in boilers, radiators and controls installed in residential properties under the Affordable Warmth Programme. The Programme will operate from 2000 to 2007, with the aim of helping up to one million low-income households benefit from improved energy efficiency. Estimate that Government assistance from this measure up to April 2002 will be approximately £10 million.

In addition to Government energy efficiency programmes, since 1994 public electricity suppliers have, under the Energy Efficiency Standards of Performance, been required to encourage and assist customers with energy efficiency measures. The new Director General of the Office of Gas and Electricity Markets has, from this year extended these, to also include public gas suppliers and the overall size of the programme has been doubled to £50 million a year. Around two thirds of this help has gone to pensioner and low-income families.

As energy efficiency is a devolved matter, it is the responsibility of the respective Parliament and Assemblies to comment on the situation in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

Regional Government

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) when he proposes to publish his Department's review on regional government in England; [127990]

(2) what consultations have been carried out for his Department's review on regional government in England. [127991]

Ms Armstrong: The Department has undertaken a preliminary study of the literature relating to regional government in England, which will be published shortly. No public consultation was involved. As substantive proposals are developed for taking forward the Government's commitments to regional government, there will be full consultation with regional and other interests.

Advantage West Midlands

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent assessment he has made of the performance of Advantage West Midlands; and if he will make a statement. [127888]

Ms Beverley Hughes: My Department has commissioned consultants to undertake an evaluation of the strategies and action plans produced by all eight RDAs, including Advantage West Midlands. Research is also being carried out by consultants into partnership working by RDAs in the development and production of their strategies. It is the aim that both pieces of research will be published and that the findings will contribute to a report on the RDAs performance in their first year of operation.

The 2000–01 research programme of my Department's Local and Regional Government Research Unit also includes provision for a long-term evaluation of the operation and effectiveness of RDAs.

North Wales Main Line

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the Virgin Trains commercial study of the electrification of the North Wales main line has been made available to the National Assembly for Wales. [127889]

Mr. Hill: The study was produced on a commercially confidential basis to the Franchising Director in March 1998 and he received an independent assessment of it, again on a commercially confidential basis, in September 1998. The Franchising Director has not since made the study or assessment available to the National Assembly for Wales.

GM Farm-scale Trials

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the number of new GM farm-scale trials which will be required for (a) autumn planting this year and (b) spring planting next year. [127026]

Mr. Meacher: The Scientific Steering Committee for the Farm-scale Evaluations has advised that 20 to 25 fields should be sought for the autumn sowing of the farm-scale evaluations of herbicide tolerant oil seed rape this year.

The original design for the evaluations was that for each GM crop 20 to 25 fields would be sought each year for three years. When it became apparent last February that there may be a shortfall in the number of farms for the spring sowings this year, the Steering Committee advised:

> that (the industry body) SCIMAC would need to provide sufficient farms for the research consortium to select a minimum of around 12–15 farms, representing a range of intensities and geographical locations. This would also include some redundancy for operational problems. This would allow the number of farms to be increased slightly in subsequent years, and also allow any minor imbalances in the range of farms selected for year one to be addressed.

I expect that, as a result, the number of farms for the sowings next spring and in 2002 will be increased to ensure that the original aims and objectives of the evaluations are met. The Steering Committee will provide further advice later in the year on the numbers required.

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the varieties used in the non-GM part of the farm-scale evaluations. [127218]

Mr. Meacher: My Department does not hold information on the individual varieties being grown, as it is not relevant to the Farm-scale Evaluations research.

Landing Rights

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the Government's policy is on auctioning landing rights at UK airports; and if he will make a statement. [127504]

Mr. Mullin: I take the question to refer to take-off and landing slots, and not to traffic rights, which are negotiated separately. Slot allocation at congested airports is governed by European Regulation EC95/93. An independent co-ordinator makes the allocation using a set of priority criteria that reflect the European Regulation and international guidelines. The Government have no role in the process. Slots are allocated without charge. Under the existing Regulation once allocated, their holder has an indefinite claim on them as long as they are used.

EC 95/93 is due for revision and we await proposals from the European Commission.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the revenue which would be raised by auctioning landing rights at UK airports; and if he will make a statement. [127503]

Mr. Mullin: None. The allocation of landing rights, or slots, at airports, is governed by EC Regulation 95/93 which does not explicitly authorise the buying and selling of slots. The Government do not therefore have information on which to base an estimate of the possible value of slots. The income raised would also depend on a number of variables including the number of slots auctioned, their location and how desirable they were to a particular airline.

Planning

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to streamline the procedure governing planning appeals. [128139]

Mr. Raynsford: My right hon. Friend has today laid before Parliament four Statutory Instruments to improve the handling of planning appeals under each of the three main procedures, written representations, hearings and inquiries these are: the Town and Country Planning (Appeals) (Written Representations Procedure) Regulations 2000; the Town and Country Planning (Hearings Procedure) (England) Rules 2000, the Town and Country Planning (Inquiries Procedure) (England) Rules 2000 and the Town and Country Planning Appeals (Determination by Inspectors) (Inquiries Procedure) (England) Rules 2000. My right hon. Friend has also laid before Parliament a related amendment to the Town and Country Planning (General Development Procedure) Order 1995.

A Departmental circular (DETR 5/2000), "Planning Appeals: Procedures (including inquiries into called-in planning applications)", is being issued today to accompany the new Statutory Instruments and copies have been placed in the House Libraries. This Circular (which replaces Circular DOE 15/96) explains the new procedures governing written representations, hearings and inquiries (including inquiries into called-in planning applications). The changes implement the conclusions of a consultation exercise announced by the then Minister for Planning, my right hon. Friend the Member for Sheffield, Central (Mr. Caborn), on 31 March last year.

The new arrangements, due to come into operation on 1 August 2000, are a key component of our "Modernising Planning" programme. I am determined to improve the service offered to business, householders and other users of the appeal system. The changes being introduced will improve the speed and efficiency of the system without impairing the quality, fairness or openness of the process or people's ability to participate.

We have already set tough targets for the Planning Inspectorate to turn round appeals more quickly and they have made a good deal of progress in improving their own performance. However, improving service to the benefit of all concerned is not just the responsibility of the Planning Inspectorate. All parties to the appeals process have a responsibility to meet the deadlines set and to co-operate with the Inspectorate in agreeing dates offered for hearings and inquiries. In future, representations received after due dates will normally be disregarded. We shall be carefully monitoring the impact of the changes and will review their effectiveness after about a year to help us decide whether any further action is needed.

Incinerators

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much public subsidy (a) was spent in each of the last three years and (b) his Department forecasts will be spent in the current financial year on the construction of incinerators; and if he will list the incinerator projects and the amount of public subsidy in each case. [126759]

Mrs. Liddell: I have been asked to reply.

The payments made from the fossil fuel levy for electricity generated by the combustion of waste in England and Wales in the financial years 1997–98, 1998–99 and 1999–2000 to which I understand the hon. Member's question refers was £30 million, £31 million and £10 million respectively. These payments represent 26 per cent., 28 per cent. and 24 per cent. respectively of the total payments made for electricity generated from renewable sources of energy. The estimate for the financial year 2000–01 is £12 million (15 per cent. of the total). Projects are located at Edmonton, Coventry, Byker, Isle of Wight, Nottingham, Lewisham, Dudley, Wolverhampton, Stoke, Tyseley, Cleveland and Sheffield and more are expected to commission in due course. The payments received by each are commercially confidential. All of these projects offer substantial new opportunities for the recovery of metals and ash for recycling.

PRIME MINISTER

Formal Meetings

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to record and make public details of all formal meetings in the course of his official duties; and if he will make a statement. [125999]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 15 June 2000]: Ministers and civil servants meet many people as part of the process of policy development and analysis. All such contacts are conducted in accordance with the Ministerial Code, the Civil Service Code and Guidance for Civil Servants: Contacts with Lobbyists. In order to preserve confidentiality, it is not the normal practice of government to release details of specific meetings with private individuals or companies. This is in line with the practice adopted by successive governments.

Okinawa Summit

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has received in respect of the G8 summit in Okinawa; and what responses he has made. [127572]

The Prime Minister: I have received many representations in respect of the Okinawa Summit. These have come from international organisations, including the World bank and World Health Organisation; individual non-G8 members, including Nigeria and South Africa; NGOs, such as Greenpeace, Oxfam and Jubilee 2000; and hon. Members and members of the public. These have covered a range of global issues including debt relief, development, education, health and the global environment. I have also discussed the issues directly with some Heads of Government and NGO leaders; and responded in writing to others. Other interlocutors have received responses from Ministers and senior officials. There has also been direct dialogue on Summit themes between officials responsible for preparing the Summit and representatives of Commonwealth Governments and UK NGOs.

Strategic Communications Unit

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Prime Minister how many (a) special advisers, (b) permanent civil servants and (c) temporary civil servants are employed in the Strategic Communications Unit. [127425]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 23 June 2000]: Two special advisers and nine permanent civil servants are currently employed in the Strategic Communications Unit. One of the permanent civil servants is employed on a short-term secondment to the Unit.

Council of Europe

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Prime Minister if he will place in the Library the latest Information Bulletin on the activities of the United Kingdom delegation to the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe and the Assembly of Western European Union covering the period November 1999 to April. [128096]

The Prime Minister: I have done so today.

Cabinet Committees

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Prime Minister what the membership is of each Cabinet Committee. [128095]

The Prime Minister: I have placed a copy of the current list of Cabinet Committees, their membership and terms of reference in the Library of the House. Details will also be updated on the Cabinet Office website (www.cabinet-office.gov.uk).

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Shipbuilding

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the schemes which provide financial help for the shipbuilding industry; how much financial support has been contributed to these schemes by the Government since May 1997; and if he will list the beneficiaries of the assistance. [127830]

Mr. Alan Johnson: Assistance to the shipbuilding industry is provided through the Shipbuilding Intervention Fund (SIF); the Home Shipbuilding Credit Guarantee Scheme (HSCGS); and through the Innovation Budget.

Grant assistance under SIF has been: Financial Year 1997–98 £7.01 million; Financial Year 1998–99 £10.54 million and in Financial Year 1999–2000 £3.99 million.

The HSCGS is based upon offering long-term loans at a fixed rate of interest of 7½ per cent. DTI pays out subsidy or receives income depending on the relationship of market rates to that fixed rate. The net cost to/receipts by the DTI of the Home Shipbuilding Credit Guarantee Scheme have been: in Financial Year 1997–98 the Department received £223,000; in Financial Year 1998–99 the Department paid out £1,960,000 and in Financial Year 1999–2000 the Department received £1,991,000.

Since May 1997, DTI has supported two competitiveness projects under the Innovation Budget. The first, a study of the policies of the Dutch shipbuilding industry in June 1999, had a DTI contribution of £20,000 and the second, completed in September 1999, was to assist the shipyards to benchmark their production and other business processes. That grant was for £94,245.

Details of the SIF grants and HSCGS loans are confidential to the individual recipient companies. The recipient of both Innovation Budget competitiveness grants was the Shipbuilders and Shiprepairers Association, the industry's trade association.

Engineering

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which organisations were represented at the meeting on 23 May to discuss the work of the Hawley Review Group; and what was the outcome of the meeting. [127736]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The following organisations were represented at the meeting on 23 May:

AEA Technology
BAe Systems
BioIndustry Association
British Computer Society
Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals of the Universities of the UK
Department for Education and Employment
Department of Trade and Industry
Engineering and Marine Training Authority
Engineering Council
Engineering Employers' Federation
Federation of Electronics Industries
Forum for the Future.

Venture Capital

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what Government help is available to increase access to venture capital for small companies in Morecambe and Lunesdale. [127638]

Ms Hewitt: The Government recognise the vital role that venture capital can play in support of growth businesses and the value that the formal venture capital industry can add. An existing business angel network in the North West currently provides informal investment capital to small companies in the region. The Government are also committed to ensuring that there is an adequate supply of venture capital to meet demand across the regions. The new Regional Venture Capital Funds will specialise in the provision of small scale equity to businesses with growth potential. Bidding guidance for potential sponsors of new regional funds was issued on 22 December 1999 and 21 notifications of intention to bid have subsequently been received. Should all of these come forward and meet the criteria all of the English regions, including the North West, will have access to at least one new, viable fund.

E-commerce

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what help the Government are providing to small firms to encourage e-commerce. [127639]

Ms Hewitt: I refer my hon. Friend to the answers given to my hon. Friend the Member for Falkirk, East (Mr. Connarty) and my hon. Friend the Member for Luton, South (Ms Moran) on 2 March 2000, Official Report, column 337W, which described the activity of the DTI-lead Information Society Initiative.

Since then, as well as launching our Technology Means Business programme which aims significantly to improve the environment of support for small businesses, we have received an extra £60 million package from the Chancellor's Budget. This will focus on ramping-up existing services to the SME community. It includes £10 million to boost the existing network of ISI Advice Centres throughout the UK and inject greater urgency into the Government's awareness campaign; and £20 million for the SBS to create a 'Gateway' through which people can get guidance, advice and information needed to run or start a small business. Additionally, the tax benefits for SMEs following the Budget include 100 per cent. first year capital allowances, the Research and Development Tax Credit for SMEs, and tax reliefs to promote corporate venturing.

Plastic Bags

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to introduce a producer responsibility regime for plastic bags. [127725]

Ms Hewitt: Plastic bags, in common with bags made of other materials such as paper, that are used for the containment, protection handling, delivery or presentation of goods are classified as packaging. A producer responsibility regime exists for packaging in the form of the Producer Responsibility Obligations (Packaging Waste) Regulations 1997. These Regulations place an obligation on business throughout the packaging chain who meet certain threshold requirements, to recover and recycle packaging waste.

Auditors

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce legislation to impose a duty of care on auditors towards shareholders of audited companies. [127486]

Dr. Howells: The extent to which auditors owe a duty of care to the shareholders of an audited company is as laid down by the courts. We will consider the need to change the position in the light of the final report from the Steering Group of the independent Company Law Review, expected next year. The consultation document issued by the Review in March 2000—'Modern Company Law—Developing the Framework'—addresses the issues surrounding the scope of the duty of care (paragraphs 5.146 to 5.155).

Water Companies

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if those water companies considering mutualising their assets will be able to form limited liabilities partnerships under the Limited Liability Partnerships Bill [Lords]. [127558]

Dr. Howells: Any two or more persons associated for carrying on a lawful business with a view to profit and satisfying the registration requirements may become a limited liability partnership. However, a "statutory undertaker" under the Water Industry Act 1991 must be a company limited by shares and could not therefore be an LLP.

Energy Policy

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he has taken in the past 12 months to support the manufacturers of renewable energy technology; and what support he makes available to promote overseas sales of renewable energy technology and energy efficiency services. [127568]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government have taken significant steps to support renewable energy manufacturers in the last 12 months.

The Government launched a new regional planning initiative for renewable energy in the summer of 1999. In November 1999 the Government issued two consultation papers, on network management and licensing issues for embedded generation, of direct relevance to renewables, and in December 1999 it announced its intention to allocate around £30 million to the growing of energy crops over the six years up to March 2007. The Government also announced plans to exempt all forms of renewable energy, including electricity generated from renewable sources, from the Climate Change Levy, which will be introduced in April 2001, providing a substantial financial incentive for its use.

On 1 February 2000, to coincide with the Second Reading of the Utilities Bill, the Government published "New and Renewable Energy—Prospects for the 21st Century: Conclusions in Response to the Public Consultation". The Conclusions Document summarises key elements of the Government's policy. They are:

a new Renewables Obligation on licensed electricity suppliers; exemption of electricity and heat from renewables from the Climate Change Levy; an expanded support programme for new and renewable energy including research, development, demonstration and dissemination; and development of a regional strategic approach to planning and targets for renewable energy.

The Renewables Obligation will enable the Government to make progress towards a target of generating 10 per cent. of our electricity from renewable sources by 2010, subject to the cost to consumers being acceptable. The Government are also taking steps to set up transitional arrangements to ensure that Non-Fossil Fuel Obligation (NFFO) contracts continue to be viable in the future.

The renewables industry is also benefiting from the increased renewables R & D budget, expected to be £32 million over this and the next financial years.

Export opportunities in renewables technologies and services are a priority area for DTI support. DTI supports renewable energy technology in overseas markets in numerous ways, among them financial support for feasibility studies, country profile reports on renewables, and grant-supported outward and inward missions. For example we have recently sponsored two inward missions from China, concentrating on wind energy in the UK.

Support for energy efficiency services is a matter for my hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what his timetable is for responding to the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution report, Energy-The Changing Climate. [127625]

Ms Hewitt: I, together with my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment, and other colleagues, will be giving careful consideration to the recommendations in this report and we will be aiming to respond within a year. In the meantime, the Government are considering responses to the draft Climate Change Programme, and plan to publish the final version in the autumn.

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what plans he has to enable unfulfilled Non-Fossil Fuel Obligation contracts for the supply of wind energy from onshore locations to be implemented anywhere within the area of sea within the Government's jurisdiction; [127584]

(2) if he will enable Non-Fossil Fuel Obligation contracts to be implemented anywhere within the Government's jurisdiction. [127585]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government have no locus in the contracts entered into by the Public Electricity Suppliers (PES) to secure the generating capacity from renewable sources of electricity required by the non-fossil fuel obligation (NFFO) Orders. These contracts are location specific and any amendment to their location needs to be agreed between the contracting parties. In addition the Office of Gas and Electricity Markets (Ofgem) needs to be satisfied that the amendment does not cause the contract to cease to be a qualifying arrangement. If the contract ceased to be a qualifying arrangement the PES would not be eligible to receive fossil fuel levy for the electricity generated. I have asked the Non-Fossil Purchasing Agency Ltd. and Ofgem to re-examine the scope for amendments which would allow projects that have been frustrated by circumstances outside the control of the generator to go forward to construction and generation. Their re-examination has not yet reached a conclusion.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the proposed new gas trading arrangements. [127479]

Mrs. Liddell: The term "new gas trading arrangements" covers a number of exercises, led by the Director General of Gas Supply and his office Ofgem, aimed at securing effective competition in gas supply and the economic and efficient operation of Transco's pipeline system. These include auction arrangements for entry capacity into the national transmission system and an on-the-day commodity market for balancing purposes, both introduced with effect from October 1999. Work is in hand on further refinements to the capacity and energy balancing regimes, including reviews of the exit capacity regime and of the possibility of introducing a linepack regime. Further background is available on the Ofgem website www.ofgem.gov.uk.

Departmental Cars

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the (a) make, (b) model and (c) number of each make and model of car (i) owned and (ii) leased by his Department; and what is the (1) purchase price and (2) annual cost of the lease of each car. [127383]

Dr. Howells: My Department does not own any cars. The following are leased:

Make	Model	Number	Annual cost per car (£)
Ford	Escort	4	2,853.48
Ford	Escort	1	2,884.92
Ford	Escort	4	3,338.76
Ford	Escort	4	3,344.40
Vauxhall	Astra	1	3,272.76
Vauxhall	Vectra	1	3,473.16
Fiat	Cinquecento	1	1,680.00
Fiat	Brava	1	2,555.52
Peugeot	206	1	2,806.60
Citroen	Xantia	1	3,532.44

Excluding VAT

Private-public Partnerships (London)

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what arrangements to support sub-regional private/public partnerships will operate in London until the London Development Agency becomes operational. [127563]

Mr. Alan Johnson: My Department supports the work of the sub-regional partnerships through the Government Office for London and the Invest in Britain Bureau and this will continue up to, and after, the establishment of the London Development Agency on 3 July.

Manufacturing Industry (London)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action his Department is taking to promote and support manufacturing industry in Greater London. [127386]

Mr. Alan Johnson: My Department provides assistance to encourage competitiveness and innovation in manufacturing and other sectors through a range of schemes and initiatives delivered in London. These include Regional Selective Assistance; Enterprise Grants; and support through Business Links aimed at developing new and growing businesses, including in export markets.

BNFL

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list each of the projects in Russia where British Nuclear Fuels has a business or research involvement; and if he will set out the sources of the support budgets in each case. [126571]

Mrs. Liddell: This is a matter for BNFL. I have asked the Company Secretary to provide my hon. Friend with the information requested.

Farnborough Airshow

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what support his Department is providing to the organisers of this year's Farnborough Airshow; and what assistance his Department is providing to overseas visitors to attend the show. [127877]

Mr. Alan Johnson: My Department is providing no financial support to the Society of British Aerospace Companies (SBAC) in respect of the Farnborough International 2000 Airshow. Support from my Department of up to £29,500 has been offered to the SBAC, to assist delegations from Brazil, Canada and the Czech Republic attend the Airshow.

Maternity Pay

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the review of maternity pay and parental leave will conclude; what organisations have been involved in the review; and how the information will be treated once the review is completed. [127251]

Mr. Alan Johnson [holding answer 26 June 2000]: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston (Mr. Miller) on 22 June 2000, Official Report, columns 236–37W. There will be extensive consultation throughout the review.

Intellectual Property Rights

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he has taken to assess the compatibility of (a) the Convention on Biological Diversity and (b) the Trade Related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights Agreement in respect of the treatment of genetic resources. [127462]

Dr. Howells: We consider the World Trade Organisation's (WTO) Trade Related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights (TRIPS) Agreement and the Convention on Biological Diversity (CBD) to be compatible, but we need to ensure that they are implemented in a mutually supportive way. For this reason we supported the recent decision of the 5th Convention of Parties (COP5) to the CBD, which asked the WTO further to explore the interrelationship between the provisions of the TRIPS agreement and the CBD.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy to seek an amendment to Article 27.3(b) of the Trade Related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights Agreement to exclude genetic resources for food and agriculture. [127465]

Dr. Howells: The current exclusions from patentability for biological materials as set out in Article 27.3(b) of the World Trade Organisation (WTO) Trade Related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights (TRIPS) Agreement allow all WTO members sufficient flexibility to implement patent and other intellectual property regimes appropriate to their individual circumstances, within internationally agreed limits. Patents are afforded only to new technical inventions. Valid rights cannot be obtained for naturally occurring plants or animals or information concerning their genetic composition. Similarly, traditional or indigenous knowledge concerning the existence, use or properties of plants and animals is already not patentable. Given this flexibility and these limitations, we do not consider the requirements of Section 27.3(b) to be incompatible with WTO member states needs.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his policy in respect of intellectual property rights over plant and animal varieties. [127466]

Dr. Howells: Patents are available only for inventions for new technical solutions. Under the Patents Act 1977 and EC Directive (98/44/EC) on the legal protection of biotechnological inventions, plant and animal varieties, or the breeding of plants and animals by traditional methods, cannot be the subject of patent rights. However, inventions concerning plants and animals may be patentable if the technical feasibility of the invention is not confined to a particular plant or animal variety. To be patentable, such an invention would have to satisfy the general criteria for patentability that the invention is new and would not be obvious to someone in the technical field.

World Trade Organisation

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to increase (a) public involvement in the WTO decision-making process and (b) openness in the operation of the WTO. [127463]

Mr. Caborn: The Government launched a consultation exercise before Seattle and continues to receive and respond to public concerns through correspondence as well as the DTI website www.dti.gov.uk/worldtrade. I, my colleagues and our officials also hold regular meetings with business, NGOs and trade unions. The UK has, since Seattle, pressed for progress on WTO reform, and in particular on issues relating to consensus building and communication. The WTO's General Council agreed earlier this year that a consultation process should be launched on improvements to WTO consultative and decision-making procedures. We await the outcome of this consultative process.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress he has made since the Seattle meeting in securing reform of the WTO. [127467]

Mr. Caborn: The Government launched a consultation exercise before Seattle and continues to receive and respond to public concerns through correspondence as well as the DTI website www.dti.gov.uk/worldtrade. On 7–8 February, the WTO General Council meeting agreed that a consultation process should be launched on improvements to WTO consultative and decision-making procedures. We await the outcome of this consultative process.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his policy in respect of the admission of China into the WTO. [127469]

Mr. Caborn: The UK supports China's accession to the WTO on the right terms. We welcome the European Commission's success in negotiating an EU/China bilateral market access agreement. Of course, it is essential that China's commitments upon accession to the WTO are clearly set out and reviewed at regular intervals to ensure adherence.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress he is making in achieving clarification of the relationship between multi-lateral environmental agreements and the WTO rules. [127468]

Mr. Caborn: The UK and EU have proposed that a new Round of WTO negotiations includes a clarification of the relationship between WTO rules and trade measures taken within multi-lateral environmental agreements. We are continuing our efforts to build a consensus among WTO members for this proposal.

Textile Industry

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the impact of imported textiles and clothes on the UK textile industry. [127460]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The increased level of imports of textiles and clothing has presented a significant challenge for domestic producers, which has been met in a variety of ways. Some UK companies have looked at the opportunities for manufacturing overseas to take advantage of lower wage rates; most have looked at their existing operations and worked to increase their competitiveness.

Most encouragingly the industry itself set up the Textiles and Clothing Strategy Group, and its Final report, "A National Strategy for the UK Textile and Clothing Industry" was launched last month. My Department responded rapidly and positively to the report's recommendations and we are considering what further action we can take to help the industry compete internationally in the future.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much of his recently announced support for the textile industry will go to firms based in (a) the Coventry area and (b) the West Midlands. [127461]

Mr. Alan Johnson: All of the Government's 'announceables' outlined in its 12-point plan are applicable to (a) Coventry and (b) the West Midlands.

The DTI and DfEE are currently liaising to carry through the initiatives announced in the 12-point plan, and how much support a region is allocated very much depends on the 'take-up' from the textile and clothing industry in that locality.

Research Council (Luxembourg)

Mr. Casale: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the outcome was of the Research Council held in Luxembourg on 15 June; and if he will make a statement. [127183]

Mr. Byers: I am pleased to report that the Council of 15 June:

1. Debated the future of the Information and Knowledge Society, underlining the importance of research policy, social inclusiveness and the interconnection of high speed electronic research networks.
2. Adopted a Resolution on establishing an European area of research and innovation.
3. Adopted Presidency Conclusions concerning funding for life science infrastructures.
4. Received information from the Commission on progress on the joint ESA-EU strategy for space, and from the Presidency and Commission on international co-operation.
5. Under Other Business, the Council received information from the Presidency on discussions regarding marine science, and heard an intervention from Germany on the question of authorisation procedures for the release of genetically modified organisms.

The Council also discussed the future of fusion research spending.

Cannabis

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the licensed clinical trials of cannabis are expected to be concluded; and if he will make a statement. [127861]

Ms Hewitt: The Medical Research Council is supporting a clinical trial to look at the efficacy of cannabis extracts in the treatment of spasticity in multiple sclerosis patients. The trial was announced in December 1999 and is being run by Dr. John Zajicek (Derriford Hospital, Plymouth) and the MRC Clinical Trials Unit.

The trial is making good progress; local ethical committee approval has been obtained in principle and an application has been made to the Medicines Control Agency for the appropriate licence. The cannabinoids will be given exclusively in capsule form. Recruitment of patients is planned to start later in the summer. The results will be available in about 2.5 years, after formal scientific assessment of the results has taken place.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Youth Offending Teams

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of youth offending teams; and if he will make a statement. [126367]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Youth offending teams have been in place across England and Wales since 1 April 2000. They are now operating a range of new interventions for young offenders with support from the Youth Justice Board. The Board will be monitoring their impact and will identify and disseminate good practice.

Youth offending teams and the new police and court powers were previously piloted for 18 months and in 10 areas. The interim reports of the evaluation led by Sheffield University are in the Library. They show the practical value of the teams' multi-agency approach. The final evaluation report will be published during the summer.

Regulation of Investigatory Powers Bill

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations she has received concerning the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Bill; and which organisations have expressed concern about the Bill's provisions. [127459]

Mr. Straw: I have received a number of representations on the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Bill including from:

The Confederation of British Industry/Alliance for Electronic Business;

Institute of Directors;

British Chambers of Commerce;

London Investment Bankers Association;

British Bankers Association;

Internetforum;

Internet Service Providers Association/London Internet Exchange; and Vodafone.

The content of representations was described in the reply I gave the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) on 20 June 2000, Official Report, columns 147–48W.

Family Reunification

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his policy towards current EU discussions on (a) rights to family reunification and (b) temporary protection of displaced people. [127195]

Mrs. Roche: The Government have decided not to opt into the European Commission's proposal for a Directive on the right to family reunification. Our decision was based on concern that opting into the proposal would remove the United Kingdom's ability to formulate and adjust policies in relation to family reunification as a matter of domestic law.

However, in remaining outside this proposal, it is not the Government's intention that the United Kingdom should be seriously out of line with our European partners in this important area of immigration policy. For that reason we shall continue to participate fully in discussion of the text.

As to the Commission's recent proposals on temporary protection for displaced persons, negotiations over this text have not yet begun. The Government will participate actively in those discussions.

Cyclists (Fixed Penalties)

Mr. Bradshaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cyclists have been issued with fixed penalty notices for (a) pavement cycling and (b) other offences in each police area since August 1999; and if he will make a statement on the impact fixed penalty notices have had. [126314]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I refer to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 26 June 2000, Official Report, columns 383–86W.

Correspondence

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reply to the letter of 21 March and subsequent correspondence from the hon. Member for Broxbourne, concerning her constituents Ms K. Vertigans and Ms L. Coe. [127809]

Mrs. Roche: I wrote to the hon. Member on 26 June in response to her letters on behalf of her constituents, Ms K. Vertigans and Ms L. Coe. I am very sorry that I was unable to do so sooner, and would like, through the hon. Member, to extend my apology to her constituents for the delay.

Onus of Proof

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his policy is on EU draft instruments which seek to alter the onus of proof in court cases. [127483]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Government's policy on European Community draft instruments is developed on the merits of each proposal.

If the question is referring to the recent agreement of the European Community Directive on racial discrimination—which includes a provision requiring the respondent, once a prima facie case of discrimination has been made by the complainant and accepted by the court, to demonstrate that there has been no breach of the principle of equal treatment—the Government welcome the agreement of this Directive.

This applies only to civil cases and does not represent a major change in terms of United Kingdom legal practice. Under current United Kingdom law, United Kingdom tribunals can and do, if faced with facts which raise a presumption of discrimination, and where no reasonable explanation is offered, draw an inference that discrimination has occurred.

Interactive Voice Response Systems

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many agencies of his Department use interactive voice response systems when dealing with telephone inquiries from the general public. [127552]

Mr. Straw: An interactive voice response (IVR) system automatically answers telephone calls with a recorded voice which asks the caller to use the telephone keypad to select the required service. There are four executive agencies in my Department. The UK Passport Agency uses an IVR system for inquiries from the public. About 40 per cent. of calls are effectively dealt with by playing recorded information. The others are answered by operators in a call centre, who are able to handle most calls directly and to connect the rest to staff in regional offices. The available information shows that IVR systems are not used in Her Majesty's Prison Service, the Forensic Science Service or the Fire Service College. No central records of IVR systems are kept.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many departmental telephone lines used by the general public are responded to by interactive voice response systems. [127405]

Mr. Straw: An interactive voice response (IVR) system automatically answers telephone calls with a recorded voice which asks the caller to use the telephone keypad to select the required service. IVR systems are used by the Immigration Service at London (Heathrow) Airport Terminal 3, and at the Port of Dover. The Nationality Directorate and National Asylum Support Services also use IVR. The available information shows that no other IVR systems are used in my Department. No central records of IVR systems are kept.

Prison and Probation Services

Mr. Pond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to improve arrangements for the strategic management of the prison and probation services and for future complaints arrangements for the two services. [128072]

Mr. Boateng: We think it right to recognise the substantial and growing overlap in the work that both services perform as we pursue our drive to reduce re-offending through proven and well-targeted programmes and re-settlement planning as set out in the correctional policy framework which we published last year.

We have established a new strategy board for correctional services, chaired by myself as the Minister with responsibility for prisons and probation, to advise the Home Secretary on giving strategic direction for the prison and probation services. This replaces the prison service strategy board. We will make formal amendments to the framework document of the Prison Service in due course.

We have also decided to extend the prisons ombudsman's remit to cover probation services. This joint ombudsman will be created initially on an administrative basis, as with the prisons ombudsman, but we plan to legislate as soon as practicable. We are giving careful consideration to what the ombudsman's terms of reference should be. We shall make a further statement to Parliament in due course.

CABINET OFFICE

Social Exclusion Unit

Mr. Field: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office (1) how many of the members of the Policy Action Teams are resident in the neighbourhoods identified by the Social Exclusion Unit as especially disadvantaged; [127326]

(2) how many of the (a) members, and (b) advisers to the Social Exclusion Unit are residents of the 3,000 neighbourhoods that the Social Exclusion Unit has identified as being especially disadvantaged. [127327]

Marjorie Mowlam: Policy Action Team members were chosen to reflect a wide range of backgrounds, knowledge and experience of issues affecting deprived areas. Information is not held about members' home addresses.

SEU reports have consistently pointed out that there is no universally agreed definition of a deprived area.

The members of the SEU, both its staff and its advisers, are drawn from a wide range of backgrounds, knowledge and experience, both within and outside Government.

Government Annual Report

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice) of 14 June 2000, Official Report, column 65W, for what reason the Government have no plans to involve the National Audit Office in the production of the Government's Annual Report. [127812]

Marjorie Mowlam: All the statistical data in the Government's Annual Report series are provided or checked by the Office for National Statistics or other reputable statistical sources such as Eurostat.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

House of Lords

49. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Council what publications will carry the proposed advertisements from the Appointments Commission soliciting applications for membership of the House of Lords. [126385]

Mr. Tipping: That is a matter for the Appointments Commission.

Modernisation Committee

50. Mr. Miller: To ask the President of the Council what progress has been made in respect of the Select Committee on Modernisation of the House of Commons proposals on modernising the procedures of the House. [126386]

54. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the President of the Council if she will make a statement on progress by the Select Committee on Modernisation of the House of Commons on reforming the procedures of the House. [126391]

Mrs. Beckett: 48 of the 54 recommendations of the Committee have been implemented. Apart from abolishing conventions, such as the use of the top hat, the work of Modernisation Committee has produced a clearer Order Paper, better explanatory notes for legislation, more effective Thursday sittings, more freedom for Standing Committees to meet when they wish, a new scrutiny reserve for European business, the introduction of a new forum for debate in Westminster Hall and some easing of restrictions on the Press Gallery and Lobby, which they have long sought.

Oral Questions

51. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the President of the Council what recent representations she has received on altering the cut-off time for tabling oral questions. [126387]

Mrs. Beckett: Other than those from the hon. Gentleman, none.

European Union Duties

52. Mr. MacShane: To ask the President of the Council what steps she is taking to provide resources for hon. Members to carry out duties relating to Parliament or their constituencies in the European Union. [126389]

Mr. Tipping: The House agreed to greater flexibility in the scheme for visits to European constituencies on 25 May last year. At that time we said the scheme would be reviewed after a year; the review has begun.

Ministerial Accountability

55. Mr. Baker: To ask the President of the Council what plans she has to improve the parliamentary accountability of Ministers during (a) adjournments and (b) prorogations. [126392]

Mr. Tipping: Ministers are accountable to Parliament at all times.

Select Committee Reports

56. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Council if she will propose to the Select Committee on Modernisation of the House of Commons a new system for advance notification of the publication of Select Committee reports. [126393]

Mrs. Beckett: No. Arrangements for publication of reports and notification of publication are matters for the Select Committee concerned or for the Liaison Committee.

Written Questions (Recesses)

57. Mr. Quinn: To ask the President of the Council what proposal the Government have made to the Select Committee on Modernisation of the House of Commons on the tabling and answering of written questions during parliamentary recesses; and if she will make a statement. [126394]

Mrs. Beckett: The Government have made no such proposals.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Clergy Remuneration

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, (1) when he expects the General Synod to decide on the Archbishops' Council's review of the clergy remuneration package; [127123]

(2) when he expects an announcement to be made following the Archbishops' Council's consideration of the clergy remuneration package. [127126]

Mr. Stuart Bell: The Review Group set up by the Archbishop's Council will consult widely by means of a survey to be sent to all stipendiary clergy and licensed layworkers, the purpose of which is to assess how clergy are managing financially. The Group has also prepared a consultation document for discussion within the Church.

It is hoped that an interim report will be made to the Council this November, but at this stage it is too early to say when the General Synod will discuss the review and be able to take a decision on its findings, or when an announcement will be made.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, if he will make a statement on the factors the Archbishops' Council will take into account in reaching a decision on the clergy remuneration package. [127125]

Mr. Stuart Bell: The factors comprising the Review Group's formal terms of reference are listed in answer to the previous question. Responses to consultation will be another key factor. In addition to the financial survey to be sent to all stipendiary clergy and licensed layworkers, the Group's consultation document for discussion within the Church asks for views on the concept of the stipend, its structure, the principle of differentials, other elements of the remuneration package, and the ability of the Church to fund any increases in stipends.

I have arranged for my hon. Friend to be sent a copy of the consultation document.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, if he will list the main components of the clergy remuneration package to be considered by the Archbishops' Council. [127124]

Mr. Stuart Bell: The principal elements of the remuneration package to be considered include the level and structure of the stipend itself, pension provision and housing. It will consider how stipends are to be funded as well as the level at which they should be set.

The Group's formal terms of reference are:

(i) To consider the concept and definition of the stipend;

(ii) To examine the content of the clergy remuneration package (including retirement provision) and its comparability with remuneration for other groups;

(iii) To ascertain, through a properly conducted large-scale survey of clergy and consultations with dioceses and charities, the financial circumstances of clergy;

(iv) To review the size of dignitaries' differentials;

(v) In conjunction with the Finance Committee, to evaluate the affordability and long-term financial sustainability of the present arrangements and any proposals for change;

(vi) To consider the implications for any proposals for:

clergy deployment and partnership between dioceses;

future numbers of stipendiary clergy and patterns of ministry

(vii) To consider whether the present structure for setting stipends should be retained and outline possible alternative structures;

(viii) To consult with the Church Commissioners, the Pensions and Board and dioceses;

(ix) To consult with other national church bodies through the Churches Main Committee and government agencies on matters of fiscal and taxation policy which affect stipends, in particular the treatment of benefits in kind;

And to determine options for wide debate within the Church.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

School Bus Service

Caroline Flint: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of (a) primary and (b) secondary school children have access to a school bus service; and what was the cost of providing such services to (i) primary and (ii) secondary children in the last year for which figures are available. [124532]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 5 June 2000]: We do not collect statistics on school children who have access to a school bus service. Provisional figures for local education authority expenditure in England on school transport in 1998–99 were £78 million for pre-primary and primary schools, £164 million for secondary schools, and £203 million for special schools.

Medical Students

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many students entered medical school in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [126917]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 21 June 2000]: The following table sets out the number of full-time undergraduate entrants to medical schools in UK HE institutions in each of the last five years.

	Number
1999–2000	5,306
1998–99	5,105
1997–98	5,044
1996–97	4,833
1995–96	4,699

SEN Statements

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many complaints he has received in the last two years from parents of children with statements of special educational needs who consider that their LEA is failing to meet the special educational provision specified in the statement. [127142]

Jacqui Smith: The information requested is not available in this form. During the past two years Ministers at the Department for Education and Employment have answered about 650 letters dealing with special educational needs issues and almost 6,500 letters were answered by officials.

School Funding (Warrington, North)

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what has been the total capital allocation since May 1997 to schools in the Warrington, North constituency; and if he will break down these capital allocations by category of grant. [127317]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 26 June 2000]: The following table shows the information requested for Warrington, North.

Category	Grant allocation
NDS1 Allocation-1997–98	37,328
NDS2 Allocation-1998–99	613,441
NDS3 Allocation-1999–2000	998,201
NDS4 Allocation-2000–01	640,032
Energy Efficiency Initiative Allocation-1998–99	36,135
Class Size Capital Allocation-1998–99	80,000
Class Size Capital Allocation-1999–2000	637,088
Class Size Capital Allocation-2000–01	180,000
Devolved Formula Capital Allocation-2000–01	347,521
Total	3,569,746

[1] Reserved pending statutory proposal decision

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the schools in Warrington, North constituency which have received funding through the New Deal for schools; and in each case for what purpose the money was allocated. [127318]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 26 June 2000]: The following table shows the information requested for Warrington, North.

Careers Education

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the linkages between personal health and social education and careers services for young people. [127457]

Jacqui Smith: There are strong links between careers education (which is a statutory requirement for pupils aged 14–16) and the revised Personal, Social and Health Education (PSHE) framework, which we expect schools to implement from autumn this year and includes reference to career planning and management. In April we published a booklet "Careers Education in the New Curriculum"—a copy of which has been placed in the House of Commons Library—which sets out the relationship between these areas, as well as the new Citizenship programme of study. We encourage schools to take advantage of the introduction of PSHE and Citizenship to enhance the provision of careers education. Many schools already teach these areas in an integrated manner.

Teenage Pregnancies

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the linkages between personal health and social education and targets to reduce teenage pregnancy rates. [127458]

Jacqui Smith: The Government have launched a wide-ranging programme to tackle the unacceptably high level of teenage pregnancies in Great Britain. The Department for Education and Employment will shortly publish new sex and relationship education guidance which is an important part of this broader strategy, and will assist schools in educating young people so that teenage pregnancies are reduced. The guidance will be firmly rooted in the PSHE framework and National Curriculum published in autumn 1999.

This programme includes funding a number of local education authorities through the Standards Fund to reintegrate school age mothers back into the education system and support age-appropriate educational projects aimed at reducing the rate of teenage conception by raising pupils' self esteem, exploring issues of choice and responsibility and peer pressure. We aim to ensure that these initiatives are integrated with individuals schools' Personal, Social and Health Education frameworks and other approaches such as Sure Start and child care pilots for 16 and 17 year olds.

Tuition Fees

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the cost of abolishing tuition fees for undergraduate courses in higher education in each of the next five years; and if he will make a statement. [127506]

Mr. Wicks: I refer the hon. Member to my reply dated 14 February 2000, Official Report, column 393W. Figures for beyond 2001–02 depend on student numbers on which decisions have not yet been made.

Schools (Repairs and Maintenance)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the backlog of repair and maintenance work at schools in England; and if he will make a statement. [127600]

Jacqui Smith: The Department does not currently hold accurate and comprehensive data on all school buildings. We have, however, made resources available to local education authorities to help them prepare Asset Management Plans covering all the maintained schools in their areas. When completed, these plans should provide a comprehensive picture of the repairs to school buildings which still need to be carried out.

A total of £1.9 billion is being spent in the current financial year on repairs and maintenance, three times the amount spent in 1996–97. This includes the New Deal for Schools, public-private partnerships, and other capital grants to schools and LEA borrowing.

Teachers (Performance-related Pay)

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many teachers are eligible to apply for performance-related pay. [127884]

Ms Estelle Morris: Around 265,000 teachers in England and Wales were eligible to apply for the performance threshold this year.

Post-16 Education and Training

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to equalise the funding arrangements for post-16 education and training. [128002]

Mr. Wicks: How the Learning and Skills Council will allocate its funds is subject to a current consultation. The Government have invited partners' views on a system of national rates for the majority of learning programmes, which means that the same programme would attract the same funding wherever it was delivered. The Government recognise the current differences in funding levels, and favours upwards convergence, but we recognise that this can only happen over time, and subject to resources being available. Changes in levels of funding will, of course, be subject to the real-terms funding guarantee we have given to school sixth forms.

Engineering

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the recent Engineering and Marine Training Authority report entitled "Working in Engineering", with special reference to opportunities in engineering for young people from ethnic minorities. [127721]

Mr. Wicks: I welcome the report by the Engineering Employers' Federation/Commission for Racial Equality. The recommendations stemming from the project provide a realistic opportunity for engineering companies to engage the ethnic minority communities in a more constructive way.

This will require greater commitment and positive action to build more effective links with schools and ethnic minority community centres. I believe a vital factor in encouraging young people from the ethnic minority community to be engineers is to provide role models from their own communities. The case studies which have been published should actively encourage entry into the industry.

My Department strongly supports the outcomes and follow-up initiatives from the project and will continue to work closely with all appropriate parties to ensure that the engineering sector, together with the construction and manufacturing sectors—for example—attract more young people from the ethnic minority community.

TREASURY

VAT

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost of increasing the value added tax threshold for small businesses by (a) 10 per cent., (b) 20 per cent., (c) 50 per cent. and (d) 100 per cent. per year; and if he will make a statement. [127494]

Mr. Timms: Customs and Excise do not have reliable current estimates of the cost of substantial increases in the VAT registration threshold. A description of the difficulties involved in predicting the effect of large changes in the threshold is contained in "The VAT Shortfall: Report of the Working Group on VAT Receipts and Forecasts", Treasury Occasional Paper No. 9, September 1997. Table A.13 of the Budget 2000 Financial Statement and Budget Report contains an estimate of the Exchequer cost of indexing the VAT registration and deregistration thresholds in line with inflation.

Tax Avoidance and Evasion

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he plans to take to reduce tax avoidance and evasion through non-domiciled status. [127602]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government keep all aspects of the tax system under review.

We have taken steps in successive Finance Bills to combat avoidance and evasion across the tax system.

HIPC Initiative

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the World Bank and IMF will set up the joint committee for overseeing the implementation of the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative; and where it will be based. [127713]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The World Bank and IMF announced the establishment of the HIPC Joint Implementation Committee on 16 April this year. The Committee is based in Washington and has had its first meeting on 22 May.

Red Diesel

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on how many days the HM Customs and Excise testing units for red diesel operated within Scotland during (a) 1997 and (b) 1998; and how many prosecutions were brought for illegal use of red diesel in each of those years. [127661]

Mr. Timms: Scotland has two road fuel testing units. In 1997 they were operational for a combined total of 446 days and for 432 days in 1998. In the same period they made 277 detections leading to penalties and duty recovered totalling £423,214. In 1997 and 1998 two cases were taken to prosecution.

Climate Change Levy

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the net yearly costs in the first year of implementation of the climate change levy to (a) the dairy industry and (b) the agriculture industry in Scotland. [127697]

Mr. Timms: It is not possible to say what the precise effect of the levy will be on any one particular industry. The impact of the levy package will depend on a number of factors, including: the future energy consumption by firms; the level of employment in those firms; the number of firms that are eligible to receive a discount on the main rates of the levy by signing up to an energy efficiency agreement; what use they make of electricity generated from 'new' renewable sources of energy and in 'good quality' combined head and power plants; and the extent to which they take advantage of the proposed introduction of a system of enhanced capital allowances for energy saving investments. However, the agriculture sector stands to benefit from a number of features of the levy package including the proposed special package of support for the horticulture subsector announced in the March 2000 Budget.

GNP

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of GNP has been spent on (a) defence, (b) education and (c) health in each of the last 15 years. [127640]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Table 4.4 of Public Expenditure Statistical Analysis 2000–01 (Cm 4601) shows the amount of public expenditure spent on these services, as a percentage of GDP, in each of these years.

The Health figures presented in this table are net of income from charges and asset sales, and do not include NHS trusts interest and dividend payments.

Tax Returns

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discounts are available for electronic filing of tax returns. [127634]

Dawn Primarolo: On 16 February 2000, the Chancellor announced that individuals who file their self-assessment tax returns over the internet in 2000–01 and pay any tax due electronically will receive a discount of £10. Small businesses that do the same for their PAYE and VAT returns in 2001–02 will receive a discount of £50 for each. And in his Budget speech on 21 March 2000 he said that small businesses that qualify for the PAYE discount and which pay tax credits to employees would receive a further discount of £50. These discounts are being offered to encourage businesses and individuals to embrace internet technology. Legislation has been included in this year's Finance Bill to provide for the payment of these incentives. The detailed conditions will be set out in regulations to be published later this year.

Child Benefit

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the revenue from taxing child benefit for (a) all upper-rate taxpayers at 40 per cent. and (b) upper-rate taxpayers at 40 per cent. but 50 per cent. for those with taxable incomes of over £100,000 per annum; and if he will make a statement. [127500]

Dawn Primarolo: The estimated revenue from taxing child benefit received by higher-rate taxpayers at 40 per cent. in 2000–01 is £50 million in a full year. The additional revenue from taxing child benefit received by higher-rate taxpayers with taxable incomes of over £100,000 per annum at 50 per cent. is estimated to be less than £5 million.

Tax Evasion

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of tax revenue lost to the UK Exchequer as a result of tax evasion; and if he will make a statement. [127603]

Dawn Primarolo: No such estimate has been made. There is no generally accepted method of producing an estimate sufficiently reliable to be of value.

National Insurance

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the Government's proposals and timetable for the reduction of Class 1 National Insurance contributions payable by employers. [127977]

Dawn Primarolo: As announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the rate of employers Class 1 National Insurance contributions will be reduced from 12.2 to 11.9 per cent. in April 2001 and from 11.9 to 11.8 per cent. in April 2002.

Exchange Rate

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect of his policy of stability in the British Government finances and in the economy on the exchange rate since May 1997. [127484]

Miss Melanie Johnson: It is not possible to identify precisely the impact of stability-orientated policies on the exchange rate. Delivering low inflation and sound public finances is the best contribution the Government can make to securing a stable and competitive exchange rate over the medium term.

No-smoking Policy

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on (a) the effectiveness of his Department's no-smoking policy and (b) the proportion of his Department's offices that do not allow smoking. [125148]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Crausby) on 24 January 2000, Official Report, column 117W.

Employee Share Schemes

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much extra tax and national insurance he will collect following the introduction of the All-Employee Share Scheme from employee and employer participants in the scheme. [126960]

Mr. Timms: The new all-employee share plan is a tax and NICs relieving measure designed to encourage more employees to hold shares in the companies for which they work and to reward their long-term commitment. The new plan will eventually cost the Exchequer around £400 million a year.

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from (a) employers and (b) employees about the All-Employee Share Scheme; what was the nature of those representations; and if he will make a statement. [126935]

Mr. Timms: Since December 1998, when the consultation process on employee share ownership began, the Inland Revenue has received in the region of 1,000 representations. While these have mostly been from employers and their advisers, many individual employees have also made representations.

The responses have covered all aspects of the existing Inland Revenue approved share schemes and the proposals for the new all-employee share plan and Enterprise Management Incentives. They have been overwhelmingly in favour of the new proposals. We have reflected these representations in the legislation.

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will review the annual upper limit of £1,500 for contributions to the All-Employee Share Scheme; and if he will make a statement. [126934]

Mr. Timms: The limit of £1,500 on the amount which employees may contribute annually from their salary under the new plan was arrived at after extensive consultation. We have no plans to review the limit at the present time.

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with employers about the cost and administration which will be involved in running the new All-Employee Share Scheme alongside existing schemes; and if he will make a statement. [126968]

Mr. Timms: Consideration of employers' costs in setting up and running the new plan has formed a major part of the consultation underlying the plan, and the views of employers have been sought at every stage. Improvements designed to reduce these costs have been made to the legislation currently going through Parliament. The Regulatory Impact Assessment published on 21 March sets out a detailed cost/benefit analysis.

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions with employers he had before deciding on an upper limit of £1,500 per year for employees purchasing shares under the new All-Employee Share Scheme; and if he will make a statement. [126961]

Mr. Timms: The limit of £1,500 on the amount which employees may contribute annually from their salary under the new plan was arrived at after extensive consultation involving their employers, their advisers and other interested parties. Over 1,000 written responses have been received during the consultation period, mainly from employers and their advisers. The process started in December 1998 and ended earlier this year, following the publication of the draft legislation in November 1999. An advisory group drawn from large and small companies, their advisers, the TUC and the academic world worked with officials on the detailed legislation, and a 60-strong group of large and small employers was consulted throughout.

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the number of employees who contribute more than £1,500 per year to purchase their employing company shares through a share scheme; and if he will make a statement. [126936]

Mr. Timms: A full picture of the distribution of amounts used by employees to purchase shares in the companies they work for is not available.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Interactive Voice Response Systems

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many telephone lines to his Department used by the general public are responded to by interactive voice response systems; [127119]

(2) how many agencies of his Department use interactive voice response systems when dealing with telephone inquiries from the general public. [127122]

Angela Eagle: There are three telephone lines used by the general public which are responded to by interactive voice response in the Department's Headquarters and one Agency (Benefits Agency).

These are the Child Benefit Centre, which is manned by operators until 5.30 pm and from 5.30–8.00 pm by interactive voice response, and the Customer Care Helpline, which gives the client two interactive voice response options before/instead of being put through to an operator.

The third is run on our behalf by a commercial organisation and deals with inherited SERPS inquiries.

Income Support

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the cost of restoring entitlement to Income Support to 16 and 17-year-olds; and if he will make a statement. [127496]

Mr. Bayley: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer I gave on 17 February 2000, Official Report, column 663W.

State Pension

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the cost in each of the five financial years beginning with 2001–02 of (a) linking the basic pension to earnings and introducing an age addition of £5 for pensioners aged 75 to 79 years, and £10 for pensioners aged 80 years and above and (b) introducing an increase in the basic pension in 2001–02 of £5 for pensioners aged 75 years, £10 for pensioners aged 75 to 79 years and £15 for pensioners aged 80 years or above, followed by price indexation of all rates of pension thereafter, in each case showing the cost net of savings on means-tested benefits and increased income tax revenue. [127881]

Mr. Rooker: The information is in the table.

£ billion

	Option (a)		Option (b)
	Gross	Net of means-tested benefits and income tax	Gross	Net of means-tested benefits and income tax
2001–02	2.3	1.5	4.4	2.9
2002–03	2.9	1.9	4.5	3.0
2003–04	3.6	2.3	4.5	3.0
2004–05	4.5	—	4.5	—
2005–06	5.3	—	4.6	—

Notes:

1. Option (a) assumes that the age addition is paid in full to all basic state pension recipients and is not uprated. Option (b) assumes age-related increases are paid pro-rata to those without full basic state pension.
2. Both options include the cost of benefits whose rates are linked to the rate of basic retirement pension.
3. Figures are rounded to the nearest £0.1 billion and are in 2000–01 price terms.
4. Gross costs estimated by the Government Actuary's Department. Costs net of income-related benefit savings are estimated using the Policy Simulation Model. Income tax revenues estimated by the Inland Revenue.
5. Estimates of income tax revenues not available beyond 2003–04.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Local Authority Funding

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the funds which are available to local authorities on application, indicating those for which the Torbay Unitary Authority has successfully applied in each of the last two years. [124197]

Mr. Nick Brown: Local authorities can apply for a range of funds managed by my Department, depending on their individual circumstances. My Department's records show that Torbay Unitary Authority had three successful applications under the Countryside Stewardship Scheme in 1998–99.

Organic Farming

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of those farmers requesting information from the organic conversion information service entered the organic farming scheme. [127027]

Mr. Morley: Precise figures are not available. However, we estimate that around 25 per cent. of farmers who contact OCIS eventually enter land into conversion.

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farmers requested information from the organic conversion information service in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [127028]

Mr. Morley: In the period 5 June 1999 to 2 June 2000, just over 2,000 farmers contacted the organic conversion information service.

Beta-sitosterol

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his policy towards beta-sitosterol products. [126892]

Ms Stuart: As responsibility for food safety and standards matters have now passed to the Food Standards Agency which reports to Parliament through Health Ministers, I have been asked to reply.

I am advised by the Food Standards Agency that products containing beta-sitosterol require pre-market approval under the European Commission Novel Foods Regulation 258/97 if they did not have a significant history of consumption in Europe at the time the regulations came into force.

ADVOCATE-GENERAL

Human Rights

28. Dr. Godman: To ask the Advocate-General what recent advice she has given to the Government concerning the cross-examination of complainers in court cases involving sexual assault and similar offences in relation to (a) the human rights of such witnesses and (b) the European convention on human rights. [126363]

The Advocate-General for Scotland: This raises difficult questions which require to be handled with great delicacy by policy Ministers. These questions include issues of human rights, of the complainer as well as of the accused. In England and Wales, this is the responsibility of the Home Secretary and legislation has been passed by Parliament. The relevant provisions of the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 will be brought into force once the necessary rules of court, which are at an advanced stage, have been made. In Scotland, where the matter is devolved, the Executive have announced their intention to examine options open to them.

Devolution Issues

29. Mrs. McKenna: To ask the Advocate-General in what type of cases, intimated to her as devolution issues, she has intervened. [126364]

The Advocate-General for Scotland: I have intervened in a variety of devolution issues cases. Each case is considered on its merits. In general terms I have intervened, for example, where important issues of principle have arisen particularly in cases which might have ramifications for the whole United Kingdom. I do not usually intervene until a case has reached appeal or Privy Council stage.

SCOTLAND

New Deal

6. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people in Scotland have moved in to unsubsidised employment as a result of the New Deal; and if he will make a statement. [126341]

Mr. Wilson: At the end of March this year, 28,795 people had moved in to unsubsidised employment as a result of participating in the New Deal in Scotland.

Scottish Constituencies

7. Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the time scale for reducing the number of hon. Members representing Scottish constituencies. [126342]

Dr. Reid: It is not possible to be precise on this. The Parliamentary Boundary Commission for Scotland has not yet formally started its next review. It is for the Commission to determine when this commences, keeping in mind the requirement that it needs to report between December 2002 and December 2006. Following the report, implementation will take some time.

9. Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with the Boundary Commission for Scotland about the Government's plan to reduce the number of hon. Members representing Scottish constituencies. [126344]

Dr. Reid: I have had no such discussions. The rules for the redistribution of parliamentary seats are set out in the Parliamentary Constituencies Act 1986, as amended, and the Scotland Act 1998. The Boundary Commission is required to follow these in any review of the number of constituencies in Scotland.

25. Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with the Prime Minister about reducing the number of hon. Members sitting for Scottish constituencies. [126360]

Dr. Reid: I have regular discussions with my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on various matters.

Pensioners

8. Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has made to the Secretary of State for Social Security regarding pensioners. [126343]

Dr. Reid: I have frequent discussions with my right hon. Friend. We are proud of this Government's record: we are spending an additional £6.5 billion on pensioners over the course of this Parliament.

Barnett Formula

10. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received on the operation of the Barnett formula in respect of the block grant to the Scottish Executive. [126345]

Dr. Reid: I have not received any such representations in the past six months.

Coalfield Communities

11. Mr. Eric Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action is being taken to regenerate coalfield communities in Scotland. [126346]

Dr. Reid: This Government are very aware of the specific problems faced by coalfield areas and remain committed to a long-term plan of action to regenerate coalfield communities. As I explained in my reply to my hon. Friend on 18 April, the work of the Coalfields Regeneration Trust is a matter for the Scottish Executive. With the publication of the report "Improving Lottery Funding Access and Delivery in the British Coalfields" on 5 June, this Government have signalled their intention to ensure that people in coalfields and other deprived areas can get the fullest benefit possible from the National Lottery.

National Minimum Wage

12. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many Scottish companies have had action taken against them to enforce the national minimum wage. [126347]

Mr. Wilson: Since the introduction of the minimum wage on 1 April 1999, national minimum wage inspectors in Scotland have taken action against 17 companies to enforce the national minimum wage. There are presently 229 cases being investigated by national minimum wage investigators. The Low Pay Commission reported on 15 February that the Inland Revenue has made a successful start to enforcement and was working proactively to ensure compliance with the legislation.

15. Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many workers in Scotland have benefited from the introduction of the national minimum wage. [126350]

Mr. Wilson: Over 100,000 workers in Scotland are entitled to higher rates of pay as a result of the introduction of the national minimum wage on 1 April 1999.

Assisted Areas Map

13. Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent discussions he has had with the Department of Trade and Industry and the Scottish Executive regarding the assisted area status map for Scotland. [126348]

Dr. Reid: I have had various discussions with both the Department for Trade and Industry and the Scottish Executive about the assisted areas map for Scotland. I am hopeful that the Commission will soon agree to a map that will secure a very favourable outcome for Scotland.

Planning Decisions

14. Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will raise in the joint Ministerial Committee between the Scottish Executive and the UK Government the subject of planning decisions with cross-border implications. [126349]

Mr. Wilson: My right hon. Friend has no plans to raise this issue in the Joint Ministerial Committee. Planning decisions are in the first instance a matter for local government, and it will generally be desirable that local authorities should discuss planning matters that span their boundaries with neighbouring local authorities, whether those authorities are in Scotland or England. The bilateral concordat between the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions and the Scottish Executive provides for communication and co-ordination between these central government bodies.

Fairness at Work

16. Mr. Russell Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the effects on employees and trade unions in Scotland of the proposals contained in the Government's "Fairness at Work" White Paper. [126351]

Dr. Reid: The Government have implemented the proposals contained in the "Fairness at Work" White Paper mainly through the Employment Relations Act 1999. Workers and trade union members in Scotland have benefited a great deal from the creation of decent minimum standards at work and the emphasis on a partnership approach to work.

Criminal Assets

17. Mr. Jim Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent discussions he has had about the seizure of criminal assets in Scotland. [126352]

Mr. Wilson: My right hon. Friend has regular discussions with both his Cabinet colleagues and Scottish Executive Ministers on various matters.

US Trade Dispute

18. Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with (a) industry and (b) others about the future of Scottish cashmere manufacturing. [126353]

Mr. Wilson: I meet representatives of the industry and of individual companies on a regular basis to discuss a range of issues affecting the industry. I have written to the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry about the current US Carousel retaliation threat to the cashmere and other industries, as well as discussing this with the US Ambassador to Britain. I am also in contact with the Scottish Executive on this issue.

The hon. Member will be aware that we still await the final retaliation list from the USTR. I continue to be hopeful that our efforts on behalf of the cashmere industry have been successful.

19. Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent discussions he has had with the Scottish textiles industry regarding the trade dispute between the USA and the European Union. [126354]

Mr. Wilson: I have had a range of discussions with the industry about the current trade dispute. I have also written to the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry about the current US Carousel retaliation threat to the cashmere and other industries as well as discussing this with the US Ambassador to Britain. I am also in contact with the Scottish Executive on this issue.

The hon. Member will be aware that we still await the final retaliation list from the USTR. I continue to be hopeful that our efforts on behalf of the cashmere industry have been successful.

Textiles Industry

23. Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the future of Scotland's textiles industry. [126358]

Mr. Wilson: The Government recently announced a twelve-point plan to support the British textile industry, which has, until now, lacked an overall strategy and adequate support. The strategy will help the competitiveness of the industry by addressing issues such as the supply chain, design and research, public procurement and exports. I was delighted that the excellent work of Heriot Watt University's Galashiels Campus has been recognised by its designation as a Centre of Manufacturing Excellence in Textiles

All the measures for the UK textile industry will equally apply in Scotland. I am delighted, however, that the Scottish Executive considers that the importance of the textile industry to the Scottish economy merits further action and is introducing a comprehensive package of additional measures to support the textile industry in Scotland.

Eurozone

20. Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent advice he has given to the Prime Minister regarding the readiness of the Scottish economy for entry into the eurozone. [126355]

Mr. Wilson: My right hon. Friend has regular discussions with the Prime Minister on a wide range of issues including the current healthy state of the Scottish economy.

Genetic Paternity Testing

21. Mrs. Irene Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what the implications are in Scotland of the recommendations made by the advisory committee on Genetic Paternity Testing; and if he will make a statement. [126356]

Dr. Reid: A draft Code of Practice on Genetic Paternity Testing is currently being considered by the Human Genetics Commission. The Government plan to publish the Code later this year. The intention is that the Code will cover the whole of the United Kingdom, including Scotland.

Drug Deaths

22. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action his Department is taking to reduce the number of drug deaths in Scotland as part of the UK anti-drugs strategy. [126357]

Mr. Wilson: Responsibility for action to reduce the number of drug deaths in Scotland lies with the Scottish Executive, working within the common UK-wide statutory framework. The reduction of drug-related deaths is a key objective of Scotland's drug strategy.

Poverty and the Knowledge Economy

24. Mrs. McKenna: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the joint management committees on poverty and the knowledge economy. [126359]

Dr. Reid: The Joint Ministerial Committees on poverty and the knowledge economy, which bring together Ministers from the UK Government and the devolved Administrations, both met on 26 May, in Edinburgh. The meetings were chaired by the Chancellor of the Exchequer. The Advocate-General for Scotland represented the Scotland Office. A wide variety of issues were discussed. Areas discussed at the meeting on poverty included the work being done to help pensioners; the Children's Fund and social inclusion. Areas discussed at the meeting on the knowledge economy included jobs and skills. It was agreed that a conference on services for pensioners should take place later this year. The next meetings of the Joint Ministerial Committees on poverty and the knowledge economy will take place in the autumn.

Road Accidents (A90)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) fatal and (b) serious injuries accidents occurred per vehicle mile on the A90 between Ellon and Aberdeen in (i) 1995, (ii) 1996, (iii) 1997, (iv) 1998 and (v) 1999. [127228]

Dr. Reid: Responsibility for statistics for fatal and serious accidents in Scotland is a matter for the Scottish Executive.

Orange Badges

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many valid orange disability badges are currently held by individuals resident within Scotland, broken down by local authority area. [127660]

Dr. Reid: Responsibility for statistics for orange disability badges in Scotland is a matter for the Scottish Executive.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Bananas

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on how her Department is working with Caribbean banana smallholders and the Fairtrade Foundation to encourage the introduction of fair trade bananas to the UK market. [127886]

Mr. Foulkes: I met with the Fairtrade Foundation on 13 June to discuss their request for DFID support for the launch of the Fairtrade Windward Island Banana Campaign later this year. We have agreed to provide support for this campaign, and discussions on the details are continuing.

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on how her Department is working with the EU and other institutions to assist Caribbean banana smallholders. [127887]

Mr. Foulkes: We are continuing to press the European Commission to reach an agreement on a successor bananas regime that will not be WTO-compatible but will enable the continuation of a viable—albeit restructured—banana industry in the Caribbean. We are also continuing to work actively with the European Commission and other donors in a programme to support and encourage necessary reforms to achieve a more commercially based banana industry in the Eastern Caribbean. This programme is being supported by substantial funding from the Stabex facility and the EC Special Framework of Assistance for banana industry restructuring, economic diversification and social safety net provision during the transition process.

Intellectual Property Rights

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent discussions she has had with developing countries in respect of the Trade Related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights Agreement; and if she will make a statement. [127464]

Mr. Foulkes: The WTO TRIPS Council is currently conducting its review of the implementation of TRIPS legislation for 13 of its developing country members. The Government will be following this review closely.

The Government are well aware that the TRIPS Agreement has been difficult for some countries to implement and that questions have been raised about its coverage and approach.

The Government stand ready to offer assistance to developing countries on understanding the implication of the Agreement for themselves and its implementation.

Our Department is actively funding programmes aimed at helping developing countries to better their Uruguay Round commitment including in the area of intellectual property rights.

The Government's position is to maintain an agreement on TRIPS. The Government are open to constructive suggestions on how to improve the TRIPS Agreement and as part of a new comprehensive round would be open to substantive negotiations on the Agreement.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development on how many occasions she has deposited papers in the Library in response to parliamentary questions tabled to her Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April. [127673]

Mr. Foulkes: Between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000 papers have been deposited in the Library on 16 occasions in response to parliamentary questions.

Burmese Refugees

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what measures the Government are taking to support Burmese refugees who have fled to (a) Thailand, (b) China, (c) India and (d) Bangladesh. [127802]

Mr. Foulkes: Over the last two years, DFID has given the Burma Border Consortium (a grouping of NGOs) a total of £537,500 for the provision of humanitarian assistance to around 110,000 Burmese refugees in Thailand. In Bangladesh, we have given UNHCR £250,000 for its programme to repatriate Burmese refugees. We understand that over 90 per cent. of these refugees have now returned to Burma, leaving some 22,500 in Bangladesh. In India and China, we understand that the number of registered Burmese refugees is very small (around 1,000 in total), and we have not targeted any assistance on these groups.

Development Policy Forum

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement regarding the Development Policy Forum held recently in Glasgow. [127720]

Mr. Foulkes: The Forum in Glasgow was one of a series of 11 being held across the UK between January and July this year. The Development Policy Forum process is designed to share thinking and ideas on development issues with groups and individuals from across society both to raise awareness of key issues and to deepen participants' understanding. This year's Forums have addressed three themes: achieving benefits for developing countries from the next round of World Trade negotiations, tackling corruption and aid untying.

All three themes were addressed at the Glasgow Forum on 23 May, with useful and lively discussions taking place. The Government team was led by myself.

Empowerment of Women

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps the Government are taking to support the efforts of international aid agencies to facilitate the empowerment of women. [127803]

Mr. Foulkes: The Department for International Development is working extensively to encourage international agencies to actively support the empowerment of women in all their programmes. This includes key agencies in the UN, the European Commission, the international financial institutions, and international organisations in civil society. More specifically, we have recently significantly increased our support to the United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM). Details of this support are published in our annual Departmental Report.

Departmental Cars

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is the (a) make, (b) model and (c) total number of each make and model of car (i) owned and (ii) leased by his Department; and what is the (1) purchase price and (2) annual cost of the lease of each car. [127395]

Mr. Foulkes: The Department for International Development makes use of three official cars, namely a Vauxhall Omega, a Vauxhall Vectra and a Ford Mondeo. All cars are used on a lease basis from the Government Car Service costing a total of £142,476.36 per annum.

Sudan

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what aid projects are currently financed by her Department in the Sudan. [127156]

Mr. Foulkes: Projects in the Sudan currently financed by the Department for International Development are listed.

DFID Funded Projects Active in Sudan, June 2000

Agency	Project	Amount
CARE	South Kordofan emergency water	195,439

CARE = Cooperation for Assistance and Relief Everywhere
IGAD = Inter-Government Authority on Development
MSF = Medecins sans Frontieres
OCHA = United Nations Office for the Co-ordination of Humanitarian Affairs
SCF = Save the Children Fund

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Bailiffs

36. Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the powers of bailiffs. [126372]

Mr. Lock: Professor Beatson of Cambridge University is conducting a review of bailiff law on our behalf, and will report to us this month. The National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux has published a report, entitled "Undue Distress", on bailiff powers and regulation. The Government have substantial concerns about the way some bailiffs operate and are regulated. We will look closely at the powers and role of bailiffs in the light of both these reports.

Shrewsbury County Court

37. Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on progress in refurbishing the Shrewsbury county court and the expected completion date thereof. [126373]

Jane Kennedy: The arrangement for payment of the agreed contribution of £40,000 to the Court Service from the local authority has now been resolved. There has been particular difficulty in reaching agreement with the Landlord; consequently it is anticipated that the new lease will not be signed before September 2000. Once the lease has been signed there will be a programme of works, approximately six months in duration, to be completed by the Landlord/Court Service. The completion date is dependent upon agreement of the lease and the Landlord disclosing the timetable for the works.

Domestic Violence

38. Ms Moran: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he intends to implement section 60 of the Family Law Act 1996 relating to domestic violence cases. [126374]

Jane Kennedy: Section 60 will allow third parties to apply for civil remedies in domestic violence cases on behalf of survivors of domestic violence. Those remedies are occupation orders and non-molestation orders. The implementation raises a number of questions which we are currently looking into. We will consider issuing a public consultation paper on this issue later this year.

Magistrates Courts (South Staffordshire)

39. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the administration of the magistrates courts in South Staffordshire. [126375]

Jane Kennedy: Decisions on the administration of magistrates courts in South Staffordshire are for the Staffordshire Magistrates Courts Committee to determine, in consultation with its local paying authorities.

Public Trust Office

40. Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the failure of the Public Trust Office Executive Agency to meet two of its key performance indicators for the 1999–2000 financial year. [126376]

Jane Kennedy: The Public Trust Office failed its Unit Cost and Charter Standard key performance indicators for 1999–2000 (these results are still subject to National Audit Office approval). The Unit Cost target for the 1999–2000 financial year was to generate an efficiency saving of 3 per cent. This target was failed because the Public Trust Office's cost base was increased during the year to take account of a revaluation of its building. This unexpectedly added £500,000 to annual costs. Although the Public Trust Office missed its target of achieving 98 per cent. of Charter Standards, actual performance was 96.6 per cent., a creditable result against a very demanding target.

Legal Services Ombudsman

41. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the performance of the Legal Services Ombudsman. [126377]

Mr. Lock: The Lord Chancellor published the first full review of the Office for the Legal Services Ombudsman on 29 March. The independent review, conducted by Miss Ann Chant, found that the Office is carrying out its responsibilities effectively, notwithstanding that its work load had doubled since its creation in 1990. The Office is described as professional, strongly committed to good client service and experienced in handling high volume cases economically and to a good standard. The Ombudsman's 1999–2000 annual report is to be published next month.

Rural Magistrates Courts

42. Mr. Paterson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the work of rural magistrates courts. [126378]

Jane Kennedy: There is no difference in the work of magistrates courts in either a rural or urban location. All magistrates courts have the same criminal jurisdiction.

I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave him on 25 January 2000, Official Report, column 180W. Magistrates courts are best managed locally by the relevant magistrates courts committee under the provisions of the Justices of the Peace Act 1997.

County Court Fees

43. Mr. Brady: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what meetings he has had with the Law Society to discuss the level of county court fees. [126379]

Mr. Lock: I have had no meetings with the Law Society to discuss the level of county courts fees, and there has been no request for such a meeting.

Solicitors (Supervision Office)

Ms Coffey: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the performance of the Office for the Supervision of Solicitors. [126369]

Mr. Lock: We have a number of concerns about the ability of the Office for the Supervision of Solicitors to meet the casework targets that the Lord Chancellor expects them to achieve, in particular in relation to the quality of adjudication and the turnaround times. However, we acknowledge that some progress has been made in reducing the backlog of outstanding cases since August 1999. We will continue closely to monitor their performance against the targets and timetable agreed by the Lord Chancellor.

Interactive Voice Response Systems

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many agencies of the Lord Chancellor's Department use interactive voice response systems when dealing with telephone inquiries from the general public. [127554]

Jane Kennedy: No agencies of the Lord Chancellor's Department use interactive voice response systems when dealing with telephone inquiries from the general public.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many departmental telephone lines used by the general public are responded to by interactive voice response systems. [127406]

Mr. Lock: The headquarters of the Lord Chancellor's Department does not use any interactive voice response systems.

Written Questions

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many written parliamentary questions were tabled to his Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April; and how many have not received substantive answers for reasons of disproportionate cost. [127682]

Mr. Lock [holding answer 26 June 2000]: In the relevant period, 345 parliamentary questions were tabled to the Lord Chancellor's Department for written answer. Of these, 11 parliamentary questions did not receive a substantive answer for reasons of disproportionate cost and a further six questions received a partial answer where a full answer could have been provided only at disproportionate costs.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Shootings

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the shooting dead of James Alfred Cornhill on 19 April. [123057]

Mr. Ingram: No. The matter is currently under investigation and the investigation is being supervised by the Independent Commission for Police Complaints.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the result of the ICPC inquiry into the shooting dead of Robin Charles Scott Maxwell in January 1994; and what were the findings of the coroner's inquest. [123056]

Mr. Ingram: The Independent Commission for Police Complaints issued a statement of satisfaction as to the conduct of the investigation.

A Coroner's inquest found that, on the evening of 27 January 1994 two masked men entered the High Trees Garage with the intention of robbing the premises. The owner, Mr. Weir, spotted the robbers and alerted two policemen who were hidden in the store at the rear of the shop. On entering the shop the policemen were confronted by the two robbers, one carrying a cudgel and one holding a firearm to Mr. Weir's head. The policemen issued a warning and the robber who held the cudgel fled from the premises pursued by Constable Fox. The other robber, Robin Charles Scott Maxwell, turned and pointed a weapon in the direction of Constable 'A', who, fearing that his and the owner's life was in danger, discharged his firearm, killing Mr. Maxwell almost instantaneously. The jury found that the police had no plan to intercept or arrest the robbers before their arrival at the premises.

Extraditions

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons sought by the (a) RUC and (b) other UK police forces were extradited from the Irish Republic to the UK in (i) each of the previous three years and (ii) the current year. [125543]

Mr. Mandelson: The table provides details of the numbers of persons sought by the RUC and other UK police forces who have been extradited from the Irish Republic to the UK in the last three years and the current year. The figures include both terrorist and non-terrorist cases. It should be noted that the figures for England and Wales are not necessarily complete, as the information is not collated centrally.

Given the complex nature of extradition proceedings, it is not possible to compare directly the number of extradition requests with the number of individuals extradited in any given year. With appeal proceedings the process may take a number of years to be completed.

Police

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on how arrangements for Best Value will be made within the proposed new structure for policing under the Police (Northern Ireland) Bill. [126577]

Mr. Ingram: The Police (Northern Ireland) Bill will provide for the new Policing Board to make arrangements to secure continuous improvement, or 'Best Value', in the way in which its functions are exercised. The Policing Board, in its capacity as a high level regulatory body, will have lead responsibility for economy, efficiency and effectiveness arrangements. 'Best Value' will provide a framework for the Board to deliver continuous improvement, and the Board will be held accountable to the people of Northern Ireland for ensuring that they achieve 'Best Value' from the police service.

The Government do not wish to be prescriptive about the exact arrangements. It will be for the Policing Board, in association with the Chief Constable, to determine the precise arrangements for managing 'Best Value', in accordance with best practice elsewhere.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

BSE

Mr. Drew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what access he has to the work of the Harvard University Center for Risk Analysis and United States Department of Agriculture on risk analysis relating to BSE. [123392]

Ms Quin [holding answer 25 May 2000]: Officials of my Department have been contacted by members of the Harvard University Center for Risk Analysis team, and have assisted them by providing information on request. The team also visited the UK in 1999 and spoke to both officials and external experts. We understand that they were gathering information to determine their own approach to BSE; not undertaking a risk analysis of the UK situation.

Farm Production Methods

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with his EU counterparts about the inspection of their farm production methods with particular reference to welfare, hygiene and environmental aspects of production; and if he will make a statement. [126954]

Mr. Morley: EU standards are negotiated and adopted in these areas by the Council of Ministers. Once EU measures have been adopted, checking that member states have taken proper steps to implement and enforce them is the responsibility of the European Commission. There have been no discussions with ministers from other member states on these matters recently, although at last week's Council of Ministers my right hon. Friend the Minister strongly urged his colleagues to enforce EU rules on the welfare of livestock in transit strictly, as we do in the United Kingdom.

Milk

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the EU intervention level for milk. [126958]

Ms Quin: There is no intervention price for milk under the CAP milk regime. The market is supported by means of intervention prices for butter and skimmed milk powder. The intervention price for butter is 3,282 euros per tonne and 2,055.2 for skimmed milk powder. The intervention prices expressed in sterling can vary on a daily basis since they are converted into national currency using the daily sterling/euro market rate of exchange.

EU Intergovernmental Conference

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his Department's negotiating objectives for the Nice Treaty. [127198]

Mr. Morley: The Government set out their objectives for the IGC in the White Paper presented to Parliament by the Foreign Secretary on 15 February.

Common Fisheries Policy

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list projects being assessed by his Department for potential submission for funding under EU budget line B2–903A: strengthening the dialogue with the fishing industry and groups affected by the Common Fisheries Policy. [127189]

Mr. Morley: Budget line B2–903A covers the costs of:

(a) Meetings arranged by European trade organisations to prepare for meetings of the Advisory Committee on Fisheries and Aquaculture, which advises the European Commission on matters concerning the Common Fisheries Policy;

(b) Regional workshops organised by the European Commission to address particular issues of local fisheries management; and

(c) Disseminating information and explanatory material on the Common Fisheries Policy to the fishing industry and others with an interest.

Applications for funding of national projects are not invited under this budget line.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the joint policy proposed by the Scottish Fishermen's Federation and the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations, A New Vision for Europe's Fisheries; and what assessment he has made of whether implementation of that policy would require the unanimous agreement of the Council of Ministers. [127843]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 26 June 2000]: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave to the hon. Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls) on 22 June 2000, Official Report, columns 302–04W.

Regional Offices

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what the staffing levels are in each of his Department's (a) regional offices in England and Wales and (b) offices in (i) Bristol, (ii) Exeter and (iii) Plymouth. [127730]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 26 June 2000]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins) of 9 June 2000, Official Report, column 427W.

This sets out the number of substantive staff on a full-time equivalent basis at each of the MAFF Regional Services Centres, on 1 May 2000, including the offices at Bristol and Exeter. There are currently seven staff based at the Ministry's District Fisheries Office at Plymouth.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much time officials in each of his Department's regional offices have spent in meetings with farmers in each of the last five years. [127731]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 26 June 2000]: The information in the form requested is unavailable. However, in 1999, farmers made some 79,000 visits to the nine MAFF Regional Service Centres, the equivalent of around 5 per cent. of the total estimated farmer contacts with the RSCs.

Diversification

Mr. Breed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the organisations that can advise farmers on diversification. [128057]

Mr. Morley: There are numerous organisations, both in the public and private sector, that can provide business advice to farmers on diversification. Guidance on these sources of advice will be set out in a new booklet on farm diversification to be published by this Department later this summer as part of the Action Plan for Farming.

Crop Contamination

Mr. Breed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what compensation he will make available to organic farmers whose crops and organic status are at risk from contamination from genetically modified crops on neighbouring farms; and if he will make a statement. [128044]

Mr. Morley: There is currently no commercial cultivation of genetically modified crops in the UK. Compensation for any detriment to a farmer as a result of activity on a neighbouring farm would be a matter between the farmer and those responsible for the activity.

International Whaling Commission

Mrs. Fitzsimons: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what the position of the United Kingdom will be at the forthcoming meeting of the International Whaling Commission. [128441]

Mr. Morley: The International Whaling Commission (IWC) will be holding its 52nd Annual Meeting in Adelaide between 3 and 6 July. I will be attending.

At this meeting I will be confirming that the UK remains strongly opposed to whaling, and that our ultimate aim is to secure a permanent, worldwide ban on all whaling, other than some limited aboriginal subsistence whaling. We will be seeking to build upon the successful outcome of the recent CITES meeting where all whale downlisting proposals were rejected and the primacy of the IWC reaffirmed.

There will be further discussions of proposals put forward by Ireland in 1997 for a package of measures on whaling. The Irish proposals would involve a ban on all whaling, including scientific whaling, outside coastal waters (in effect creating a global ocean sanctuary), with a possibility that countries might authorise whaling under IWC rules within their own coastal waters; there would be a ban on international trade in whale products. In these discussions we will maintain our previous position on these ideas: while we are prepared to discuss constructively all ideas for improving whale conservation, and strongly support some elements of these proposals, we have significant reservations about others, in particular those relating to coastal whaling. Nevertheless we are prepared to consider interim solutions on the way to our ultimate destination provided that these deliver very real benefits to whale conservation.

It is, however, unlikely that any progress will be made on the Irish proposals, as the whaling countries and their allies remain opposed to key aspects of them. Japan, in particular, has demonstrated that it is not prepared to consider ending scientific whaling or a ban on international trade in whale products. In these circumstances, the United Kingdom will continue to support the alternative ways of achieving our aims that we outlined at least year's meeting and subsequently reported to the House on 9 June 1999, Official Report, columns 348–50W.

A key element of our approach is support for the creation of regional sanctuaries, and we will be strongly supporting a proposal put forward by Australia and New Zealand to create a South Pacific Whale Sanctuary. The proposed sanctuary will afford greater protection to whales in a highly important breeding and feeding area, and one through which many other great whales migrate. The proposal has been endorsed by South Pacific Forum leaders.

At previous IWC meetings the UK, together with a majority of IWC members, has consistently criticised the whaling operations authorised by Japan under special permits—so called "scientific" whaling. It is, therefore, very disappointing that Japan has presented proposals, for discussion in the IWC Scientific Committee, to extend these whaling operations to cover two further species, Sperm and Bryde's whales. Under the IWC's parent convention, IWC approval for these proposals is not needed and it is for Japan to authorise whaling under special permit., We will, nevertheless, be registering the Government's strong objection to these proposals and will be urging Japan to withdraw them.

There will be further discussion of The Revised Management Scheme (RMS), which is being developed to regulate all aspects of any future commercial whaling. The IWC meeting will be preceded by a two day working group focusing, in particular, on the Inspection and Observation Scheme which would form an integral part of the RMS. It is important for the credibility of the IWC for it to be seen to be making progress on the development of the RMS, and the UK will continue to participate constructively in this work. We will be seeking a comprehensive RMS that would ensure that, if commercial whaling was ever authorised in future, it could not pose a threat to whale conservation and that catch limits and other rules would be strictly observed. The Government will also be making it clear that our participation in this work is without prejudice to our opposition in principle to commercial whaling.

As we have at previous meetings, the UK will again be expressing its concern about the cruelty involved in whaling; we also intend to raise the inhumane methods used and lack of regulation in the hunts for small cetaceans, such as dolphins and porpoises, that take place in some countries. Other topics on which we hope to make progress include the impact of environmental change and pollution on whales and other cetaceans and the encouragement of whalewatching.

We will report the outcome of the meeting to Parliament.

DEFENCE

Exposure Facility

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the safety regulations covering the new exposure facility which was opened in February. [127137]

Dr. Moonie: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

TRACER Programme

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much his Department has paid to date on the joint project to develop a system of Tactical Reconnaissance Armoured Combat Equipment; what is the planned final cost; if this project is running on time and at agreed budget levels; and if he will make a statement. [127181]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency. I have asked him to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Robert Walmsley to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 28 June 2000:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence on the collaborative Tactical Reconnaissance Armoured Combat Equipment Requirement (TRACER) programme. This matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief of Defence Procurement and Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency.

The joint programme with the United States to develop TRACER was formally launched with the signature of the programme Memorandum of Understanding in July 1998. Contracts for the current Project Definition phase were awarded to two UK/US industrial consortia in January 1999. These contracts will be of 42 month duration and are due to complete in July 2002. This phase of the programme is proceeding to schedule and within budget. UK expenditure on the joint programme to 31 March 2000 amounted to £30 million and the current estimate of the overall cost to the UK of this phase is £120M at current prices.

UK involvement in phases beyond Project Definition will be subject to further approval and will take account of parallel studies into the use of Unmanned Air Vehicles for battlefield reconnaissance. A realistic estimate of the total cost of the project is not possible in advance of the decisions on the balance of investment between platforms ie armoured reconnaissance and Unmanned Air Vehicles.

A feature of defence procurement is the need to accommodate new sophisticated systems within the resources expected to be available. Conflicting demands on the available resources inevitably lead to priorities being kept under review. The current budgetary review process in the US, which could have implications for the TRACER programme, is being closely monitored, and we are in regular contact with the US DoD.

Procurement Spending

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the percentage of GNP spent on defence procurement in each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [127176]

Dr. Moonie: Changes introduced under the European System of Accounts (ESA) 95 mean that GNP is no longer calculated. Gross National Income (GNI) is now recognised as the accepted, more accurate, standard and this has been used to provide the comparison with expenditure on Defence Equipment set out in the table. The GNI figure for 1999–2000 will not be available until the end of June and an updated reply will be made available at that time.

Financial year	Expenditure on defence equipment £ million	GNI £ million	Expenditure on defence equipment as a percentage of GNI
1998–99	9.785	866.461	1.13
1997–98	9.003	822.720	1.09
1996–97	9.100	771.837	1.18
1995–96	8.537	723.960	1.18
1994–95	8.819	689.421	1.28
1993–94	9.200	646.273	1.42
1992–93	8.711	609.755	1.43
1991–92	9.758	585.515	1.67
1990–91	8.838	556.784	1.59

Decorations

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence under what circumstances service decorations can be withdrawn from former members of the armed forces. [127875]

Dr. Moonie: As laid down in the Statutes and Royal Warrants which govern official British awards and at the discretion of the Defence Council, arrangements exist for the forfeiture of awards by any officer or member of the military forces, or former officer or member of the military forces. These include Orders, decorations and medals. Normally, forfeiture may be liable after conviction of offences by court-martial or by the Civil Power. The awards forfeited vary according to the gravity of the offence. The Statutes and Royal Warrants are reproduced in the Queen's Regulations for the Armed Services, copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Barracks

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if the Whittington Barracks near Lichfield will be designated a core location for the armed forces in the Midlands and the North; and if he will make a statement; [127222]

(2) when he expects to announce the names of the barracks to site the Army Training Regiment following completion of the review. [127470]

Dr. Moonie: The Army Training and Recruiting Agency (ATRA) is currently conducting a review into its strategic development over the next few years. This work will be taken forward in close co-operation with other studies being undertaken into the provision of training and the management of our training estate. Work is still at a very early stage and no decisions have been taken as to which sites will remain core ones within ATRA.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Incinerators

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what are the maximum toxic emission levels permitted for incinerators, broken down by individual toxic substances. [123488]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 23 June 2000]: Under Part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, emissions to air, water and land from larger plant regulated by the Environment Agency and emissions to air from medium and small plant regulated by local authorities are controlled through permits which impose emission limits on the basis of the site-specific BATNEEC principle (Best Available Techniques Not Entailing Excessive Cost) and relevant European legislation specifying emission limits. There are currently two municipal waste incineration Directives (89/369/EEC and 89/429/EEC) and a hazardous waste incineration Directive (94/67/EC) which specify emission limits, and a further Directive (Common Position (EC) No 7/2000) which will replace these earlier Directives and cover virtually all incineration plant is currently in the final stages of negotiations.

This latest proposed Directive would result in a ten-fold tightening of the municipal waste incinerator dioxins standard so that incinerators covered by it would be required to emit no more than 1 billionth of a gram of dioxins in a cubic metre of emissions to air.

Refrigerants

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment his Department has made of the risks to public safety from the use of volatile and flammable hydrocarbons as refrigerants. [126979]

Mr. Meacher: Health and Safety Executive carries out general research on the risks from flammable substances as part of the development of guidance and safety standards. However, no specific assessment has been made of the risks to public safety from the use of volatile and flammable hydrocarbons as refrigerants.

Land Remediation

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much of the contaminated land, required to satisfy his proposals for house building up to 2016, he estimates will be remediated using (a) process technologies and (b) excavation to landfill. [127581]

Mr. Mullin: One of the main objectives of national planning policy for housing (PPG3) is that authorities make far better use of previously developed land and buildings for meeting the country's housing needs. The Government have set a target that by 2008 60 per cent. of additional housing should be provided this way. It is not possible to forecast precisely how much of the previously-developed land used by 2016 will be contaminated land, nor how that land will be remediated.

However, the Environment Agency has carried out a survey of remediation activity in England and Wales from January 1996 until December 1999. Information was collected from local authorities, industry and the National House-Building Council (NHBC). The survey was not statistically representative of all the remediation which took place during that time, but it does give an indication of current practice.

Of the 367 sites identified from local authority and industry sources, 75 per cent. involved excavation and disposal off site and 21 per cent. involved process based methods.

Of the 1,189 sites recorded by the NHBC, civil engineering techniques (including excavation and off site disposal, site re-grading and containment) were used on 95 per cent. of sites. Process based methods were used on 5 per cent. of sites.

Pollution Prevention and Control

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the role of environmental impact assessments in the application of Pollution Prevention and Control Regulations; and if he will make a statement. [127579]

Mr. Hill: Installations covered by the draft Pollution Prevention and Control Regulations may also require an environmental impact assessment (EIA) under the planning system. The Regulations require the regulator to take account of any information supplied in the context of an EIA in determining the permit application. We are considering the case for reviewing the links between the planning and pollution control systems. A Regulatory and Environmental Impact Assessment for the Regulations has been placed in the Library of each House of Parliament.

Taxis (Wheelchair Access)

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of licensed hackney carriages in England and Wales were wheelchair accessible in (a) 1997, (b) 1998 and (c) 1999. [127583]

Mr. Hill: The licensing of hackney carriages—taxis—is a matter for individual local licensing authorities. Many of them have policies which require all or part of their fleet to be accessible to disabled people, for example all London taxis (some 19,000) were required to be accessible from 1 January 2000. Information on the number of vehicles that are accessible is not, however, held centrally.

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to ensure that licensed private hire cars are wheelchair accessible. [127582]

Mr. Hill: We have no powers to require that licensed private hire vehicles be wheelchair accessible. The powers provided in the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 to introduce accessibility regulations only apply to licensed taxis, buses and coaches and rail vehicles.

Our statutory advisers—the Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee—will, however, be considering the issue of access to private hire vehicles as part of their work programme.

Regional Planning Guidance (South-East)

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if additional sums were allocated to county councils for the purpose of distributing copies of the draft regional planning guidance for the South-east. [127799]

Ms Beverley Hughes: No extra finance was allocated to local authorities to distribute the document and leaflets to the libraries in their area. It is normal practice for such consultation documents to be sent to the county councils for distributing through their own distribution system to the local libraries. Further copies were sent by the Government Office to any individual or organisation that requested them.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many copies of the draft regional planning guidance for the South-east were sent to Buckinghamshire County Council. [127800]

Ms Beverley Hughes: Initially 50 documents and 150 leaflets were sent. Following a subsequent request from Buckinghamshire County Council during the consultation period on Proposed Changes to Draft Regional Planning Guidance (PRG9), further copies were sent.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 14 June 2000, Official Report, column 640–41W, on Regional Planning Guidance (South-east), if a copy of the draft regional planning guidance for the South-east was provided for every branch library in Buckinghamshire; and for what reason copies of the draft regional planning guidance for the South-east were not distributed direct from his Department to branch libraries in the South-east. [127832]

Ms Beverley Hughes: It is normal practice for the County Councils to distribute consultation documents through their distribution system to libraries within their area. Further copies were sent by the Government Office to any organisation or individual that requested them.

Railtrack

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with Railtrack concerning the possibility of the Government taking a share in the company; and if he will make a statement. [127805]

Mr. Hill: In the context of developing our 10 Year Plan for Transport, we have discussed with Railtrack and others ways of increasing investment in the railway. Our plans for rail investment will be set out in the 10 Year Plan, to be published next month, and in the shadow Strategic Rail Authority's subsequent strategic plan.

Rail Fares

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the powers of the Rail Regulator with regard to fare increases. [127643]

Mr. Hill: Responsibility for the regulation of rail fares lies with the Franchising Director not the Rail Regulator. Under the Railways Act 1993, the Franchising Director has powers to regulate fares where it is in the interests of passengers to do so. He has imposed a cap on the price of key fares, and operators are not able to increase those fares overall above the rate of inflation. Since January 1999, the key fares have been capped at 1 per cent. below the rate of inflation for each of the next four years. The key fares include all Saver tickets, unrestricted standard returns where there are no Savers, and all standard weekly season tickets. Other fares, including discounted fares for off-peak travel, are set by the train operators.

Busking and Begging

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures are being taken to tackle busking and begging on or near public transport. [127215]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 26 June 2000]: The problem of begging is a concern to all public transport operators and in particular the railways and London Underground. They are trying to increase public awareness of the associated problems and announcements are made on stations and trains requesting that the public refrain from giving money to beggars.

Various powers are available to the police forces dealing with both begging and busking under the Vagrancy Act, the Children and Young Persons Act and specialist railway legislation. Police forces adopt a proactive approach, especially where issues of safety are concerned, and have an agreed policy with the Crown Prosecution Service to charge and prosecute first time offenders where safety may be compromised.

A multi-agency group has also been formed to tackle the issues of begging and busking and meets four times a year. This group includes the Metropolitan Police, the British Transport Police, Thames Valley Constabulary, Social Services, Child Protection Teams and the Asylum Seekers Co-ordinator. They are currently producing a joint strategy to deal with begging.

The railway operators, London Underground and other light rail operators have submitted new byelaws to the Secretary of State for confirmation and these are currently being considered. The new byelaws include provisions to allow the operators to license buskers on their property. It is hoped that this measure will allow them easier control of the problems associated with busking.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures he will take to achieve his target for carbon dioxide reduction. [127898]

Mr. Meacher: The draft climate change programme that the Government published on 9 March sets out how we propose to reduce emissions of carbon dioxide and other greenhouse gases. It sets out proposals for policies and measures that will ensure the Government deliver their Kyoto target and move towards their domestic goal of reducing carbon dioxide emissions to 20 per cent. below 1990 levels by 2010. These measures include action to improve energy efficiency in business and the home; increase renewable energy and reduce emissions from the transport sector. A copy of the draft strategy is in the Library.

London Development Agency

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to support the London Development Agency in 2000–01. [128440]

Mr. Hill: Parliamentary approval for making grants to this Agency, which is to be an executive body working with the Mayor for London, is being sought in a Summer Supplementary Estimate for Housing, construction regeneration, regional policy, planning and countryside and wildlife Vote (Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, Class III, Vote 1). Pending that approval, urgent expenditure estimated at £7 million will be met by repayable advances from the Contingencies Fund.

The Agency has the same statutory purposes as the regional Development Agencies in the rest of England. The status of the Agency is described in the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions' Annual Report 2000. Financial provision for predecessor bodies was made in the Main Estimates 2000–01, so this announcement will not add to the total of public expenditure. The Ambit of the Supplementary Estimate will, however, clearly identify the Agency.

Roads

Mr. Ivan Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made on the M60 junction 12–18 study. [128481]

Mr. Hill: Phase 1 is complete and it will now be taken forward as a Multi-Modal Study. I expect work to begin this summer with completion in summer 2001.

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much was spent on the A55 in each of the last 10 years on (a) construction work and (b) maintenance. [124726]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I have been asked to reply.

During the 10 years up to 1 July 1999, the approximate investments into the A55 in Wales was (a) £247 million on construction and (b) £36 million on maintenance. The figures for maintenance of the A55 in Wales are not held in a suitable form to be broken down annually without incurring disproportionate cost.

Annual construction costs for the A55 in Wales for the 10 years leading up to 1 July 1999 were:

Year	Costs
1990	72,031,304.98
1991	58,039,274.90
1992	38,265,737.02
1993	50,778,935.95
1994	13,380,375.87
1995	4,729,880.48
1996	1,400,083.32
1997	3,966,241.82
1998	4,224,182.77
1999	115,916.18
Total	246,931,933.29

For that part of the A55 in England, the Highways Agency only hold information for the last two years (1998–99 and 1999–2000), when expenditure was:

	1998–99	1999–2000
Construction	219,500	120,000
Maintenance	67,500	1,032,500

All functions with regards to trunk roads and motorways in Wales were transferred to the National Assembly for Wales on 1 July 1999.

HEALTH

Meat Hygiene Service

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when, and for what reason, the St. David's Practice was awarded the Mead Webber contract by the Meat Hygiene Service; and how many other vets or vet practices were invited to bid for that contract. [122049]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 15 May 2000]: I am advised by the Food Standards Agency that a tender valuation panel met on 16 March 2000 to consider tenders submitted for the provision of official veterinary surgeon services to the plant operated by Mead Webber Limited. All tenders were assessed against a range of pre-determined criteria including quality and price.

The panel awarded the contract to the St. David's Farm and Equine Veterinary Practice on the basis that it provided overall best value when evaluated against these criteria.

Nine other veterinary practices or veterinary surgeons were invited to tender for this particular contract.

Public Health (West Midlands)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the priority given to public health and healthy living programmes in the plans of primary care groups and NHS trusts in (a) Coventry and (b) the West Midlands region. [125681]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 12 June 2000]: Health development groups working across agencies and organisations have been set in motion to develop the health improvement programme (HImP) in Coventry. I understand that primary care groups have had a key leadership and membership role in these groups. Each of the three PCGs in Coventry has identified its local priorities based on an assessment of health needs of its populations and aligned funding of its Primary Care Investment plans with the health improvement plans.

Regeneration in Coventry will be further supported through the development of a healthy living centre (HLC), subject to the success of the bid which was submitted at the end of May. HLCs are funded through the New Opportunities Fund (NOF) and are aimed at mobilising community activity in improving health and reducing inequalities. The HLC bid arose from extensive partnership working and more than 300 information packs were distributed to voluntary, community and statutory groups across Coventry. Coventry's bid is designed to complement other initiatives such as the HImP and the community plan and will focus on young people, their families and carers.

HImPs across the West Midlands include an assessment of the health needs of local populations. Priorities are determined locally and the funding of Primary Care Group investment plans is aligned with HImP priorities.

Primary care groups and National Health Service trusts have huge potential to improve people's health and prevent illness, and the West Midlands Regional Office will continue to support that developing role.

Children's Homes

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children have died while in children's homes in each decade since 1970. [126198]

Mr. Hutton: The estimated number of children who died while being looked after by local authorities in children's homes in England during the period 1 April 1992 to 31 March 1999 was 70. Over the same period an estimated 58,000 looked after children spent at least some time in a children's home.

The Department holds no information about looked after children's deaths by type of placement before this date.

Asthma

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what public information has been made available in the last three years, and where, by his Department on the relationship between asthma and environmental conditions; how much has been spent on providing such information; and what other agencies have been involved. [126103]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 19 June 2000]: In January 1998, the Department published an information pack, "Air Pollution and Health". It contains leaflets, contacts and statements on the relationship between asthma and air pollution from agencies such as the National Asthma Campaign, the Lung and Asthma Information Agency as well as the Department's Committee on the Medical Effects of Air Pollutants. Copies have been placed in the Library. The total design and printing costs of the pack were £23,500.

The Department offers health advice to other Government Departments from time to time on health aspects of their policies, in particular to the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions (DETR) on health and environmental issues. A relevant example here is the production of a DETR leaflet "Air Pollution—what it means for your health", published in July 1998. This was designed as a guide to the Air Pollution Information Service which DETR Ministers relaunched in October 1997. The service is available by freephone, Ceefax, Teletext and via the internet. The leaflets and an accompanying poster were distributed in general practitioners' surgeries, asthma and heart clinics, Citizen's Advice Bureaux and libraries. Copies are also now included as part of the Department's "Air Pollution and Health" pack.

The design and printing costs of the leaflets and posters were £25,142.

Public Health Report

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what reasons underlay his decision to discontinue the annual published report by the Chief Medical Officer on the state of the public health. [126665]

Yvette Cooper: The last Chief Medical Officer's report was published in August 1998 by Sir Kenneth Calman shortly before he left office. The present CMO came into post in late September 1998. He has taken stock of the publications issued by the Chief Medical Officer and introduced a number of changes. He is currently exploring the opportunities for greater use of web-based publishing methods.

After listening to a wide range of views he also intends to introduce changes to the format of his annual report. Although the previous format served its purpose well in the past, it is very detailed and it is not always clear in what areas action is being called for. The practice of the CMO's annual report containing descriptions of a wide range of government policies which are contained in other documents added to the detailed nature of the reports.

It is the intention of the CMO to produce the new format of the report in the autumn of 2000. It will be shorter, with a clear focus on areas for action and in a more accessible form.

Emergency Contraception

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about proposals to make emergency contraception available over the counter without prescription from dispensing chemists. [126112]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 20 June 2000]: The Medicines Control Agency is presently consulting on an application to reclassify levonorgestrel 0.75 milligrammes for emergency contraception from prescription only to pharmacy availability for women aged 16 years and over. This follows independent expert advice from the Committee on Safety of Medicines. The consultation period ends on 29 June 2000. The responses will then be considered by the Medicines Commission and their recommendations presented to Ministers for a decision.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made with pilot schemes for the prescription of emergency contraceptives by pharmacists; and when emergency contraception will be more widely available. [126997]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 21 June 2000]: There are currently two pilot schemes run by health action zones (HAZs) in Manchester, Salford and Trafford (MST) and Lambeth, Southwark and Lewisham (LSL) where emergency contraception is supplied by pharmacists, under a patient group direction. Both pilots form part of the HAZ's overall strategy to reduce the rate of unintended pregnancies locally. Both pilots are to be fully evaluated and the results will be published.

The Medicines Control Agency is presently consulting on an application to reclassify levonorgestrel 0.75 milligrammes for emergency contraception from prescription only to pharmacy availability for women aged 16 years and over. The consultation period ends on 29 June 2000. The responses will then be considered by the Medicines Commission and their recommendations presented to Ministers for a decision.

In addition the Integrated Sexual Health and HIV Strategy is looking at improving access to services including emergency contraception products.

National Poisons Information Service

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) for what reason the National Poisons Information Service has not submitted its annual reports, due in July 1999 and March 2000, to his Department; and what steps he has taken to ensure that the contractual commitments of the NPIS have been delivered; [127022]

(2) if he will list the members of the National Poisons Information Service Board; and how details of their meeting schedule, agendas and minutes can be obtained; [127020]

(3) what were the terms of the contracts between his Department and the National Poisons Information Service between 1995 and the current year. [127023]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 20 June 2000]: The National Poisons Information Service (NPIS) provides a service to health care professionals. It consists of six poison information centres situated at Belfast, Birmingham, Cardiff, Edinburgh, London and Newcastle, and the Tablet and Capsule Identification System (TICTAC) at St. George's. The UK Departments of Health, (in Wales the Specialist Health Services Commission on behalf of health authorities), commission the NPIS Centres to provide information and, on request, clinical advice to health care staff on the diagnosis, treatment and management of patients who have, or are suspected to have, been poisoned. The service is available 24 hours per day, 365 days per year.

The NPIS Board was set up to advise the UK Health Departments on matters such as policy and the strategic direction of the service, and to scrutinise its work. The Board's membership consists of representatives from the four UK Health Departments who have executive powers and nine non-executive members representing health professionals. The Board aims to meet quarterly (providing there is sufficient business to warrant a meeting). It is an internal management committee and as such its agendas and minutes are not published.

Formal agreements have existed between the Secretary of State for Health and providers of poisons information services over the period 1995 to 1999. The exact terms of these agreements will have varied between each year and between each NPIS Centre. Broadly, such agreements will have set out details of the levels and quality of service to be provided as well as financial arrangements.

For the calendar year 1998, NPIS Centres were required to compile a report to the Department of Health to comply with the provisions of EC Resolution 90/C 329–03. All Centres met with this requirement. Under the terms of agreements with the Secretary of State for Health for the financial year 1999–2000, the three English NPIS Centres were required to submit information for management purposes. To date, one of the Centres has submitted a written report for the year 1999–2000 and the two other Centres have been requested to provide written reports by the end of June. These reports are for internal use only and therefore are not published.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health since 1990, what work on pesticides has been carried out by the Medical Toxicology Unit (Guy's and St. Thomas' Hospital Trust) and the NPIS (London) under contract to agrochemical companies; what equipment, facilities and staff funded by his Department have been used for this purpose; what agreements with his Department have been made to cover this activity; if he will publish details of those contracts; and if he will make a statement. [127021]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 20 June 2000]: The laboratory of the Medical Toxicology Unit at Guy's and St. Thomas' National Health Service Hospital Trust has never carried out any work under contract on pesticides. Any work in relation to pesticides has been part of the trust's NHS function in providing services for diagnosing poisoning.

Funding by the United Kingdom Departments of Health for National Poison Information Service services covers only the inquiry services, contribution to the maintenance and development of a poisons database (TOXBASE), and outreach to, and training of, health professionals in the use of the service. This funding is not provided for the purposes of other associated activities at the Medical Toxicology Unit (Guy's and St. Thomas' Hospital NHS Trust) or at any other of the Centres.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospital beds were available in (a) Great Britain and (b) each NHS trust in (i) 1979, (ii) 1990 and (iii) each year since 1992 for which figures are available. [126921]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 21 June 2000]: Copies of the information available have been placed in the Library. This relates to all types of beds and is for England only. Hospital beds in Northern Ireland, Scotland and Wales are a matter for the devolved administrations. The information is subject to the following caveats:

Information on the average daily number of beds is now collected annually, on a financial year basis, from National Health Service providers. Prior to 1987–88 information was collected on a calendar year basis.

Figures for 1989–90 were collected at district health authority level.

From 1991–92 to 1994–95 NHS beds were provided by a mix of NHS trusts and directly managed units. The information in the tables is split into beds provided by NHS trusts and beds provided by directly managed units. From 1995–96 all beds were provided by NHS trusts.

Such information is published annually in 'Bed Availability and Occupancy, England', copies of which are in the Library.

Spiritual Healers

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had with the Home Secretary about the Charity Commission's approach to the proposed registration of the National Federation of Spiritual Healers Charitable Trust Ltd. as a charity; and if he will make a statement. [126473]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 22 June 2000]: None. This is a matter for the Charity Commission, which is answerable to the High Court for its legal decisions and its interpretation of charity law.

Eye Tests

Mr. Hurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many free eye tests have been undertaken for pensioners under the current scheme; and what is the cost of the scheme to date. [127587]

Mr. Denham: We estimate that 2.5 million additional people aged 60 or over received National Health Service sight tests in the financial year from April 1999 and that the cost of our decision to restore eligibility for free tests to this population group is about £40 million per annum.

National Plan

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress he has made on compiling the National Plan; and if he will make a statement. [127650]

Mr. Denham: We have now received working papers from each of the modernisation action teams; reports on the consultation with National Health Service staff from each of the NHS Executive regional offices; responses from around 50 national and local organisations; and over 219,000 responses from staff and members of the public. We are now in the process of synthesising the material and will publish the National Plan next month.

MRSA (Greater London)

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many outbreaks of MRSA there have been in each of the last five years for which figures are available in (a) Greater London and (b) Enfield and Haringey Health Authority; how many wards were closed as a result and what the average length of closure was; and if he will make a statement. [127841]

Mr. Denham: The Public Health Laboratory Service (PHLS) compiles aggregate data on numbers of incidents of MRSA (three or more patients infected or colonised by the same strain of MRSA in a month) that are reported voluntary by NHS Trusts.

Data are available by health service region. The health regions that include Greater London have changed twice in the past five years. Data on MRSA incidents in the Thames regions (1995–98) and London and South East regions (1999) are summarised in the table.

MRSA incidents, South East England 1995–99

Region	1995	1996	1997	1998	1999
North East Thames	266	245	[1]158	—	—
North West Thames	300	294	[1]141	—	—

Total	943	960	929	509	460

[1] Data from January to June 1997
[2] Data from July to December 1997

The PHLS does not collect data for individual health authorities.

Health Action Zones

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans the Government have to announce a further bidding round for health action zones; and if he will make a statement. [127840]

Mr. Denham: There are no plans for a further bidding round for health action zones (HAZs). We are however committed to spreading learning and good practice from the existing 26 HAZs into other areas and seeing the services and approaches being developed by HAZs integrated into mainstream activity throughout the country. An example of this is the new premises flexibilities that were developed with HAZs and that I announced to all health authorities on 20 January.

Coronary Heart Disease

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the implementation of the National Service Framework for Coronary Heart Disease. [127430]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 23 June 2000]: The National Service Framework (NSF) which sets national standards for improved prevention, diagnosis and treatment of coronary heart disease (CHD) was published on 6 March.

Action is progressing on a number of fronts:

National Priorities Guidance (NPG) identifies developing and implementing local prevention policies on CHD and stroke by March 2001, increasing the number of coronary revascularisations (CABG/PTCA) by 3,000 by April 2002 and achieving the NHS milestones for April 2001 as priorities for the National Health Service.

We have appointed Dr. Roger Boyle as National Director for Heart Disease. Dr. Boyle's first priority is to work with NHS and Regional Offices on drawing up plans for guidance on the immediate priorities including plans for expenditure of £50 million (announced last October) to increase the numbers of heart operations.

Plans are also being worked up for spending the further £50 million (announced on 6 March) for establishing rapid access chest pain clinics, speeding up ambulance response times and purchasing defibrillators and other equipment.

£3 million of the £50 million will also be used to reduce waiting times for treatment by developing projects to test out better and more streamlined ways of delivering services, the CHD partnership programme. Plans to take this forward are in hand.

Health authorities and their partner organisations are establishing local implementation teams to draw up comprehensive local delivery plans, to be completed and agreed by October 2000.

We are in the process of setting up the National Coronary Heart Disease Implementation Group which will oversee national progress on implementation.

Surgical Services

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the effect of clinical governance on the continuing provision of in-patient surgical services at (a) smaller hospitals and (b) in general. [127797]

Mr. Denham: Clinical governance is central to our plans to provide a health service that continually improves the overall standard of clinical care it delivers, reduces unacceptable variations in treatment outcomes, and ensures that clinical decision making is supported by evidence of effectiveness. It represents a systematic approach to clinical quality assurance and improvement, but does not dictate how services should be managed or delivered. This is the responsibility of local commissioners who must ensure that high quality surgical services are provided safely, taking into account local circumstances such as geography and the need for remote smaller services to be linked into wider clinical networks.

Acute Services

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many acute hospital beds are available at NHS hospitals within the Greater London Authority area. [127847]

Mr. Denham: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer of 17 May 2000, Official Report, column 128W.

The average daily number of available acute hospital care beds in the London region in the financial year 1998–99 was 17,022.

Internet

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he has taken to provide protection to patients who utilise the Internet for health information services and products. [127883]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 27 June 2000]: The success of the Internet has been partly due to the ease with which people can access and create information. While it is not possible to restrict what patients see on the Internet, we recognise the need to signpost information sources, and to give easy access to relevant quality information that the public and patients can rely on, and which is presented in a clear and intelligible way.

A number of information initiatives are being put in place to improve the quality and range of information available about health and health services:

The National Health Service Executive has set up the Centre for Health Information Quality (CHiQ). The role of CHiQ is to work with the producers of information for the patients and the public to improve its quality, accessibility and evidence base. The CHiQ work uses the DISCERN tool for evaluating health literature. DISCERN was developed by the UK academic sector in collaboration with healthcare professionals and is funded by the NHS Executive.

NHS Direct Online (www.nhsdirect.nhs.uk) is a highly successful gateway to health information on the Internet attracting 25,000 users a week and complementing the NHS Direct telephone advice service. NHS Direct Online is managed by the CHiQ on behalf of the NHS Executive.

nhs.uk will provide a strongly branded gateway (www.nhs.uk) to NHS websites and licensed or accredited websites and services. Close working relationships with the Department of Health, NHS Executive, other NHS Information Authority programmes and the NHS are in place.

The National Electronic Library for Health (NeLH) will provide a common point of public access to a wide range of health knowledge bases. The NeLH will emphasise the need for all clinical practitioners to critically evaluate sources.

There is currently no formal process of NHS accreditation of the vast amount of clinical and health related reference material already available on the Internet. Feedback from the consultation exercise on the NHS National Plan has indicated that there is a need to identify NHS approved quality resources by means of a NHS "kitemark". The work being undertaken by CHiQ and the NHS Information Authority to develop NHS Direct Online and the National Electronic Library for Health will help to identify practical options for achieving this.

Ultimately however the responsibility rests on individual clinicians, patients and members of the public to make their own judgments about the validity of the material they access.

NHS Management Spending

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was spent on NHS management and administration in each region in England in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [127689]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 27 June 2000]: Management costs expenditure is shown in the tables.

Therapeutic Cloning

Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects the Donaldson inquiry on therapeutic cloning to report. [127987]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 27 June 2000]: The Chief Medical Officer's expert group on therapeutic cloning has completed its work on the potential benefits, risks and the ethical issues raised by developments in stem cell research and cell nuclear replacement. We are now considering the report's recommendations.

Hospital Waiting Times

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the cost of reducing (a) inpatient and (b) outpatient waiting times to (i) six months or less and (ii) three months or less; and if he will make a statement. [127499]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 27 June 2000]: We are determined to reduce waiting lists and times for all patients. As part of the National Plan for the National Health Service, the Patient Care: Speed of Access Modernisation Action Team is looking at improving patient's access to NHS services.

Respite Care

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of the population is entitled to respite care in each local social services authority. [127894]

Mr. Hutton: Respite care is provided by or on behalf of local authority social services departments. The supply of short-term breaks is not entitlement-based but is governed by the assessment of individuals' needs.

Terminally Ill Children (Southend)

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the investigations into the allegations relating to the treatment of terminally-ill children within the Southend Community Services Trust. [128060]

Mr. Denham: We are aware of the police investigation which is clearly a matter of major concern. We understand that the South Essex Mental Health and Community Care NHS Trust is co-operating fully with Essex Police. As the matter is at present under police investigation it would be inappropriate to comment further.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Canadian Memorial Fountain, Green Park

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when the Canadian Memorial Fountain in Green Park will be switched back on; and if he will make a statement. [126589]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 19 June 2000]: Responsibility for the subject of the fountain has been delegated to the Royal Parks Agency. As its Chief Executive, William Weston, has not yet taken up his appointment, I have asked the Agency's Head of Policy, Viviane Robertson, to reply on his behalf.

Letter from Viviane Robertson to Mr. Paul Marsden, dated 28 June:

The new Chief Executive has not yet taken up his appointment and I have been asked by the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport to answer your Parliamentary Question about the Canada Memorial Fountain, because Green Park is the responsibility of the Agency.

The Canada Memorial is maintained by the Canada Memorial Foundation, not by the Agency, although we let them know whenever our contractors or park management staff report that it is not working. I understand that the water was flowing intermittently at the weekend and the Foundation have been informed of this.

Buildings at Risk

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what action he proposes in response to the publication by English Heritage of the Register of Buildings at Risk 2000; and if he will make a statement. [127306]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 22 June 2000]: I very much support the Buildings at Risk initiative which is a valuable tool in directing funding to the most important of England's historic buildings which are in urgent need of conservation. Removal of buildings at risk from the register is a key target in the Funding Agreement between my Department and English Heritage (EH), although the exact allocation of resources to this activity is a matter for EH's Commissioners. It is also important that owners of these buildings play their part in funding conservation works.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Opinion Research

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 12 June 2000, Official Report, column 466W, on opinion research, what information is held centrally about the results of his Department's market and opinion research. [127644]

Dr. Howells: There is no central point where all the results of the Department's market and opinion research is held.

National Weights and Measures Laboratory

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has for the National Weights and Measures Laboratory in Teddington; and if he will make a statement. [127863]

Dr. Howells: The National Weights and Measures Laboratory is an Executive Agency of my Department. The status of Executive Agencies is regularly reviewed. A review of the status of the National Weights and Measures Laboratory has just been undertaken. The reviewer consulted widely. The staff and the customers of the Laboratory were among those consulted. The reviewer's recommendations have only very recently been sent to Ministers. No decisions have been taken. A further statement will be made after Ministers have considered the reviewer's report.

Small Business

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what percentage of the work carried out by the Small Business Unit is focused on (a) urban and (b) rural areas. [128053]

Ms Hewitt: The support and advice being provided by the Small Business Service, both on a national basis and through the new network of Business Links, will be available to all small businesses and those considering starting up in business. The new Business Links will be expected to tailor services to the particular needs of their areas; the Small Business Service will be working to ensure, during the planning stages, that the services provided reflect the needs of their local business communities.

Post Offices

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will publish the report by the Performance and Innovation Unit on rural post offices. [128054]

Mr. Alan Johnson: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made by my right hon. Friend earlier today, Official Report, columns 907–09.

PRIME MINISTER

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to the answers of the Foreign Secretary of 8 May 2000, Official Report, column 258W, on sanctions, what the value is of the contracts in respect of Iraq checked to date. [127221]

The Prime Minister: The Oil for Food programme began on 10 December 1996. As at 31 May 2000, 12,675 contracts with a total value of $15.6 billion had been received under the programme. As indicated previously, the UK checks all contracts to ensure that the goods will be used for their stated purpose.

HOME DEPARTMENT

National Infrastructure Security

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the responsibilities of the National Infrastructure Security Co-ordination Centre; and if he will make a statement. [126287]

Mr. Straw: The responsibilities of the National Infrastructure Security Co-ordination Centre (NISCC) are to co-ordinate and develop existing work on protecting the Critical National Infrastructure within Government departments and the private sector from the threat posed by Electronic Attack. This will include developing arrangements to monitor and increase awareness of the threat, to defend against it and to respond to incidents. The monitoring and advice aspects of this work are achieved through Unified Incident Reporting and Alert Scheme (UNIRAS), which is operated by the NISCC.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment his Department has made of the vulnerabilities of the United Kingdom's critical infrastructure. [126288]

Mr. Straw: At this time there is no evidence to suggest a significant risk from Electronic Attack to the United Kingdom's Critical National Infrastructure. The National Infrastructure Security Co-ordination Centre (NISCC) is, however, working in partnership with organisations which own systems that are critical to the national infrastructure, in order to obtain assurances that their systems are appropriately safeguarded against the threat posed by Electronic Attack.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many baboons and cynomolgus monkeys are held within United Kingdom laboratories awaiting xenotransplantation procedures; and if he will make a statement; [125262]

(2) how many baboons and cynomolgus monkeys intended for xenotransplantation research have been killed without any xenotransplantation procedures being completed on them in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement; [125263]

(3) what was the (a) longest and (b) average recorded journey time for non-human primates imported into the United Kingdom for research purposes during 1999 from (i) China, (ii) Mauritius, (iii) Indonesia, (iv) the Philippines and (v) Israel; and if he will make a statement; [125266]

(4) how many cynomolgus monkeys were imported into the United Kingdom for the purpose of xenotransplantation research, broken down by (a) where the monkeys were imported from, (b) how many died during transport, (c) the date of deaths, (d) the causes of death and (e) action taken by his Department as a result, in (i) 1995, (ii) 1996, (iii) 1997, (iv) 1998, (v) 1999 and (vi) 2000; [125259]

(5) how many cynomolgus macaques and baboons were used in xenotransplantation research in (a) 1995, (b) 1996, (c) 1997, (d) 1998, (e) 1999 and (f) 2000; and if he will make a statement; [125267]

(6) how many baboons were imported into the United Kingdom for the purpose of xenotransplantation research; and (a) where they were imported from, (b) whether they were wild-caught, (c) how many died during transport, (d) the date of deaths, (e) what were the causes of death and (f) what action was taken by his Department as a result, in (i) 1995, (ii) 1996, (iii) 1997, (iv) 1998, (v) 1999 and (vi) 2000; [125260]

(7) when current project licences to conduct pig primate xenotransplantation research will expire; and whether he is considering future pig-to-primate xenotransplantation licences. [125261]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 9 June 2000]: The Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 requires that non-human primates are only used in scientific procedures if no other species is suitable. In deciding whether to grant a licence for any regulated procedure, the 1986 Act requires that the likely benefits of the programme be weighed against the likely adverse effects on the animals concerned (the cost/benefit assessment) and that there are no alternatives which either replace animal use entirely, reduce the number of animals needed or refine the procedures to minimise suffering. We must also be satisfied that the procedures are likely to achieve the stated objectives.

In addition to regulatory testing to help ensure the safety of medicines, non-human primates are also used for other important areas of fundamental research aimed primarily at better understanding the causes of disease in man and developing potential new treatments.

They contribute, for example, to programmes of work relating to Parkinson's disease, visual impairment, stroke, diabetes, disorders of reproduction, xenotransplantation and vaccine development.

There are no cynomolgus macaques or baboons known to be awaiting xenotransplantation procedures at the present time in United Kingdom designated establishments.

According to our records, journey times for non-human primates imported into the United Kingdom for research purposes in 1999 were:

	Number-imports	Longest (hours)	Average (hours)
China	5	46	43
Mauritius	21	34	29
Indonesia	0	—	—
Philippines	1	34	34
Israel	9	16	Less than 10

In accordance with measures introduced in 1996, the Home Office requires only an estimated total journey time to be provided prior to each acquisition and that, after each acquisition, confirmation be provided that the importation was in accordance with what had been authorised. There has been no obligation to provide precise journey times. Data have also been drawn from copies of journey details required by and supplied to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, who would be the more appropriate Department to provide such data in future.

The Welfare of Animals (Transport) Order 1997, which is administered by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, governs the transportation of live animals, including primates. It requires that the animals must be fit to travel, carried in a way that does not cause injury or unnecessary suffering and be accompanied by someone competent to look after their welfare. Import licences specify the intended use and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food receives details of deaths arising.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Leyton and Wanstead (Mr. Cohen) by the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department, my hon. Friend the Member for Knowsley, North and Sefton, East (Mr. Howarth) on 8 June 1999, Official Report, columns 262–63W, which provided details of deaths and serious injury in primates arriving in the United Kingdom for use in regulated procedures. I will, however, repeat the relevant parts of this information for ease of reference.

Twelve wild-caught baboons were imported from Kenya in 1996 for the purpose of xenotransplantation research, the earliest year for which we hold such records. A further 28 were imported in May 1999. There have been no subsequent importations of baboons for this purpose. No deaths or serious injuries have been reported in baboons during transportation.

In 1995, one cynomolgus macaque was found to be dead on arrival in the United Kingdom from Mauritius. The cause of death was believed to be enteritis.

In 1996, one cynomolgus macaque was found to be dead on arrival in the United Kingdom from Mauritius. The cause of death was believed to be shigellosis.

In 1997, one cynomolgus macaque was found to be traumatised on arrival in the United Kingdom from Mauritius, possibly as a result of being pair-housed during transport. It was euthanased and all primates are now individually housed during transport. Another cynomolgus macaque was found to be dead on arrival in the United Kingdom from the Philippines. The cause of death was probably a trauma to the head.

In 1998, three cynomolgus macaques were found to be dead on arrival in Paris from the Philippines. The causes of death were not ascertained, but it is believed that they were probably due to a combination of factors:

the animals concerned were larger than normal;

although International Air Transport Association minimum dimensions were not breached, the containers were not large enough to allow these particular animals to stand up and turn around freely; and all the dead animals had been in central compartments, which were less well ventilated.

The containers have been enlarged and redesigned to rectify these problems. Another cynomolgus macaque was found to be dead on arrival in the United Kingdom from Israel. There was no obvious cause of death.

It is not possible to give an accurate figure for how many cynomolgus macaques intended for xenotransplantation have been imported and we cannot, therefore, confirm whether all of the animals listed above were to be used for this purpose.

Airlines refusing to fly animals directly to the United Kingdom as a result of harassment from animal rights activists has led to longer journey times. This may have contributed to deaths associated with transportation in some instances.

Eighty wild-caught baboons were used in xenotransplantation research in 1995, 29 in 1996 and 16 in 1997, three in 1998 and none subsequently.

Thirty-one cynomolgus macaques were used in xenotransplantation research in 1996, 67 in 1997, 78 in 1998, 49 in 1999, and five in 2000.

It is not possible to give an accurate figure for how many baboons and cynomolgus monkeys intended for xenotransplantation research have been killed without any xenotransplantation procedures being completed on them. The intended purpose is known to the Home Office in the case of animals acquired directly from overseas breeding centres by project licence holders. However, if animals are obtained from a designated supplier within the United Kingdom or from stock already held by the establishment, there is no requirement for reference to be made to the Home Office. The estimated number of animals expected to be used is provided in each project licence application but this does not necessarily mean that the animals are acquired in advance. We do not hold records of individual animals which are subsequently not used for the intended purpose.

There are currently two project licences authorising pig to primate xenotransplantation procedures, one expiring in 2003 and the other in 2004. There are no new applications under consideration at this stage. Any future applications received will be considered on their merits.

Police Pensions

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate for planning purposes of net pensions fund obligations, pensions less contributions, for (a) the Metropolitan police and (b) all UK police forces in (i) 2000–01, (ii) 2001–02, (iii) 2005–06 and (iv) 2010–11; and how these obligations will be financed. [127330]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The available figures for England and Wales, provided by the Police Service Expenditure Forecasting Group, are:

£ million

	Metropolitan police	England and Wales[1]
2000–01	251	1,054
2001–02	273	1,143

[1] The England and Wales figure is inclusive of the Metropolitan police

Under the Central Local Partnership the Home Office works closely with the Forecasting Group to assess future resource demands for the following three years. The Group does not prepare longer range projections. Its assessments of future funding pressures, including pensions, are taken into account by the Government in the Spending Review process.

The Police Funding Formula takes account of police pensions expenditure. 14.5 per cent. of funding is currently allocated through a component for pensions.

The provision of revenue funding for the police forces in Scotland and Wales is the responsibility of the devolved administrations.

Assaults, Alton Railway Station

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Chief Constable of Hampshire on the attack on Dr. Burhan al-Chelabi and Detective Constable Stephen Longshaw on 30 April; and if he will make a statement. [127170]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The attack on Dr. Burhan al-Chelabi and Detective Longshaw took place at Alton Railway station in Hampshire and was investigated by the British Transport police. I understand that Dr. al-Chelabi was assaulted by Mr. Colin Smith who also subjected him to racist abuse. Detective Constable Longshaw, a serving officer with the Metropolitan Police Service, who was enjoying an outing with his family in the company of Dr. Burhan al-Chelabi and his wife, prevented Mr. Smith from attacking Dr. al-Chelabi with a sword. During the incident Mr. Smith also attacked Detective Constable Longshaw who received a cut across his nose.

Mr. Smith was arrested by Detective Constable Longshaw and subsequently detained under the Mental Health Act 1983.

Mike Tyson

Ms Jenny Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what checks were made on personnel who have entered the UK with Mike Tyson with regard to establishing previous convictions for serious offences; [127398]

(2) who entered the UK accompanying Mike Tyson. [127476]

Mr. Straw: Mike Tyson was accompanied on his flight to the United Kingdom by his manager and two trainers.

The personnel accompanying Mike Tyson were treated in accordance with current immigration procedures. Under these, arriving passengers are not routinely questioned at ports of entry to establish whether they have criminal records. Where there is reason to believe that someone has a criminal record hitherto unknown to the Immigration Service, further examination would take place to establish whether there were grounds for refusing entry to that person.

Transsexuals

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representation he has received about transsexual men and women being treated in law as being of the same sex as when they were born. [127645]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Since 15 February 2000, we have received representations from 26 members of the public and one organisation. Several hon. Members have also written about this matter. In addition, following their meeting in January with the Interdepartmental Working Group on Transsexual People, representatives of six organisations representing the transsexual community (Gender and Sexuality Alliance, Gender Trust, Gender Identity Research and Education Society, Change, Liberty, and Press for Change) submitted further information.

Policing Costs (Stonehenge)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the cost was to (a) Wiltshire Constabulary and (b) English Heritage of police operations at Stonehenge on 20 and 21 June; if (i) public order and (ii) other offences were committed; and if he will make a statement. [127710]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The estimated cost to the Wiltshire Constabulary of police operations at Stonehenge on 20 and 21 June was £50,000. English Heritage were not charged for police costs arising from this operation. No persons were arrested for public order offences and no offences in connection with the event at Stonehenge have been reported to police. Five people were arrested on the night of 20 June at the temporary car park on suspicion of drink driving and vehicle theft. One person was subsequently charged with a drink driving offence while the other four persons were released without charge. I should like to take this opportunity to express my appreciation of the roles played by both Wiltshire Constabulary and English Heritage in ensuring that the event passed off peacefully.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) Turkish and (b) Kurdish refugees have applied for asylum in the United Kingdom in each of the last five years; how many of these applications have been granted in each of those years; how many are still outstanding; and if he will make a statement. [127829]

Mrs. Roche: The available information is given in the table. Applications for asylum are recorded on a nationality basis, therefore, Kurdish refugees are not separately identifiable within the statistics. An applicant's ethnic origin could only be obtained by examination of individual case records.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers were held under immigration law in (a) Campsfield, (b) Haslar, (c) Oakington and (d) Her Majesty's prisons in each of the last 12 months. [127903]

Mrs. Roche: The information requested, on numbers of asylum applicants held under immigration law in Campsfield House, Haslar, Oakington and Her Majesty's prisons in each of the last 12 months, is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The latest available information on immigration detainees relates to 30 April 2000. On that date, a total of 1,107 persons were detained in immigration detention centres and prison establishments in the United Kingdom solely under Immigration Acts powers. This figure is not recorded in such a way as to identify those who had applied for asylum at some point.

The latest reliable snapshot of detained asylum seekers related to those asylum applicants detained in immigration detention centres, prison establishments and police cells solely under Immigration Acts powers as at 30 December 1998 for port applicants and 4 January 1999 for in-country applicants. On those dates 741 such persons were recorded. Data recording problems mean that an updated figure is not currently available.

The most recent data available for persons detained at Oakington show that up to 18 June a total of 439 principal asylum applicants and 33 dependants of asylum seekers have been detained at varying times since it opened on 20 March 2000.

Terminally Ill Children (Southend)

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Chief Constable of Essex Police on the progress of police inquiries into allegations about the treatment of terminally ill children within the Southend Community Care Trust. [128061]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I understand from Essex Constabulary that the investigations are at an early and extremely sensitive stage.

Passport Agency

Mr. Hope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish the report on the United Kingdom Passport Agency Quinquennial Review. [128296]

Mr. Straw: I have today published the United Kingdom Passport Agency Quinquennial Review Report and I have placed copies in the Library.

Immigration

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in the case of Mr. K. (reference K422196/2); when this case is likely to be concluded; and if he will make a statement. [127910]

Mrs. Roche: Mr. K.'s application for a reconsideration of his case will be reviewed shortly and he will be contacted directly once a decision is made.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Animal Welfare

Mr. Prosser: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps she is taking to discourage developing countries from adopting industrial animal husbandry systems which have been shown by scientific research to have adverse implications for animal health and welfare; and if she will make a statement. [127849]

Mr. Foulkes: DFID's involvement in the livestock sector is based on an appreciation of the diverse contribution livestock make to the livelihoods of the poor and vulnerable.

We are supporting the international "Livestock, Environment and Development" initiative, which seeks to identify policy interventions to correct the market distortions that currently favour industrial livestock production in many developing countries.

We are also developing a programme of support to FAO aimed at strengthening international norm-setting in the livestock sector: norms that will undoubtedly address issues of animal health and welfare.

DFID has anticipated the impact of globalisation on animal welfare and trade in developing countries. We already have guidelines on the use of animals in development programmes, which will now be revised in the context of global shifts in livestock production and markets. Dialogue with UK and international welfare groups and other stakeholders is under way.

Heavily Indebted Poor Countries

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with other Government departments regarding relief of debt to UK companies who supply services and goods to heavily indebted poor countries as a result of tied aid. [127902]

Mr. Foulkes: None. Debt relief is not provided to UK companies. It is provided to governments of Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) who are committed to eradicating poverty, to benefit the poor. The Government have agreed to provide complete relief on all debts owed to the Export Credit Guarantee Department for those countries which qualify for the HIPC initiative. Aid debts have already been cancelled.

Uganda

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with the Government of Uganda concerning the abolition of primary school fees once debt relief has taken place. [127900]

Mr. Foulkes: There has been no need for discussions on this particular issue as the Government of Uganda abolished primary school fees in all Government schools, with the exception of those in municipal areas, in January 1997. HIPC1 is on-going and HIPC2 has yet to be finalised; both sets of resources will be used to support the Government of Uganda's primary education programme.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with the UN concerning the suspension of debt relief to Uganda. [127899]

Mr. Foulkes: My right hon. Friend had no discussions with the UN concerning debt relief to Uganda. We agreed that Uganda's debt relief could not be finalised by the Paris Club of government creditors at their May meeting as planned, because of Uganda's involvement in fighting at Kisangani. We want an early and lasting resolution to the situation, and we urge all sides to implement their obligations under the Lusaka Accord. When Uganda has fulfilled the undertakings it has given on Kisangani, we will support their return to the Paris Club. Uganda is receiving interim relief from the IMF and the World Bank, and we believe this should continue.

Montserrat

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many Montserratians who temporarily took refuge in the UK following the volcanic eruption in Montserrat have returned home; and if she will make a statement on (a) conditions in Montserrat and (b) the aid which is provided there. [127895]

Mr. Foulkes: Since May 1996, about 3,000 Montserratians have come to the United Kingdom because of the volcanic activity on the island. In May 1999, DFID introduced a Return Air Fare Scheme to provide assistance to those people who, having relocated to the UK or the Caribbean region, wished to return to Montserrat and had suitable accommodation on island. During the first year, 109 applications were received from people living in the UK and, as at the 31 May 2000, 83 people had returned to Montserrat.

Statistics are not held by Her Majesty's Government or the Government of Montserrat on the number of people returning without assistance from the Return Air Fare Scheme.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with the Government of Montserrat concerning funding for the Reporter news-sheet. [127896]

Mr. Foulkes: None. Officials have discussed the matter with their counterparts on island, and the Chief Minister. The Montserrat Reporter received start up capital from HMG and for several years since has received budgetary aid from DFID, paid through the Chief Minister's Office in exchange for publishing Government news. The Government of Montserrat have recently concluded in a Public Service Inquiry that these payments did not represent value for money. DFID officials have now decided to withdraw the support, which was never intended as a permanent arrangement.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the cost of (a) restoring the severe disablement allowance and (b) reversing the changes to Incapacity Benefit entitlement made since May 1997; and if he will make a statement. [127497]

Mr. Bayley [holding answer 27 June 2000]: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer I gave the hon. Member for Moray (Mrs. Ewing) on 8 February 2000, Official Report, columns 129–30W.

Housing Benefit

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the impact of Housing Benefit shortfalls on the family budgets of households on Income Support/Incapacity Benefit. [127006]

Angela Eagle: Restrictions on the rent met by Housing Benefit can arise for a number of reasons. For example, any rent met by Housing Benefit will be net of ineligible service charges. It is a basic principle of the scheme that such costs should be met from clients' other income, including Income Support.

Restrictions may also be made under the local reference rent scheme. This scheme is designed to give tenants an interest in their housing costs and to deter private sector landlords from charging higher rents to those claiming Housing Benefit than they would be able to get from tenants who are not in receipt of Housing Benefit.

The available information on family units receiving Housing Benefit and Income Support and Incapacity Benefit who were assessed under the local reference rent scheme in May 1998 (the latest date for which figures are available) is set out in the tables. It is important to note that there is no direct correlation between the average amounts of rent restriction shown in the tables and families' actual incomes which will vary with individual circumstances. For a family on Income Support their actual income may be higher than Income Support levels because of the various disregards on both earned and unearned income. In addition, local authorities have discretionary powers to make additional payments where they judge that the rent restriction would cause the family exceptional hardship.

Notes:
1. Information refers to the number of benefit units.
2. The figures are rounded to the nearest thousand and the average amounts of restriction or deduction are rounded to the nearest 10 pence.
3. Some people claim both IS and IB. Therefore, there is some overlap in the tables above.
4. Families are couples and benefit units with children; the tables exclude single people with no dependants.

Housing Benefit Management Information System, annual 1 per cent. sample, taken on the second Thursday of May 1998.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) when he expects to receive a report from his inspectorate on Housing Benefit in Islington; and if he will make a statement; [127905]

(2) what representations he has received on the competence of IT Net to administer Housing Benefit in Islington; [127906]

(3) what steps are being taken by his Department to ensure that Housing Benefit claimants in Islington receive an appropriate level of service. [127907]

Angela Eagle: The Benefit Fraud Inspectorate has recently started an inspection of the administration of Housing and Council Tax Benefit in the London borough of Islington. This inspection is part of a programme to inspect the 30 authorities with the highest Housing Benefit programme spend. The Benefit Fraud Inspectorate is working closely with the authority and expects to present the report to me for publication early in 2001.

The Department is aware of media reports on the administration of Housing Benefit in Islington and of the hon. Member's interest in this issue. However, we have not received any other representations on Housing Benefit administration in Islington.

Where local authorities choose to contract out support functions for their benefit services, the local authority remains statutorily accountable for the service. It is their responsibility to manage these contracts robustly.

The Benefit Fraud Inspectorate's work will contribute to ensuring that Islington's claimants receive an appropriate level of service. Where the inspection report identifies weaknesses we shall expect the authority to remedy them. If appropriate the Secretary of State has powers to direct authorities on the standards they are to meet and the timescales for achieving them.

More widely, Best Value performance indicators have also been introduced from this April for all local authorities. The indicators we have set for Housing Benefit delivery are designed to ensure that authorities provide their communities with a faster, more accurate service which is more secure against fraud, and which provides value for money and takes account of the views and needs of clients.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what his Department's estimate is of the profits made to date by IT Net from the Housing Benefit contract with the London Borough of Islington. [127908]

Angela Eagle: Information on any profits made by IT Net is not held by the Department.

Advertising

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much has been spent by his Department on advertising in each year since May 1997. [125696]

Mr. Bayley [holding answer 20 June 2000]: The information is in the table.

The totals given for 1999–2000 are estimated outturns. The budget for 2000–01 has not yet been finalised.

The figure given for 1997–98 reflects the low advertising activity carried out in the immediate post election period and subsequent review of Departmental policies. The figures for 1998–99 and 1999–2000 are consistent with the amounts spent on advertising in the five years prior to 1997–98.

Year	£
1997–98	1,958,231
1998–99	6,529,593
1999–2000	4,791,178

Pensioner Incomes

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will conduct an analysis of the comparative position of pensioners in (a) the UK and (b) other EU states; and if he will make a statement. [127617]

Mr. Rooker: Analyses of the comparative position of pensioners in the UK, in terms of income, are included in the publications "Households Below Average Income" 1994–95 to 1997–98 and "The Pensioners' Incomes Series" 1997–98, both of which are available in the Library.

Aspects of pensioner income and poverty in different EU states are covered in selected papers in the "Statistics in Focus" series, published by Eurostat. Copies are held in the Library. There are no plans for the Department to conduct a separate analysis of the comparative position of pensioners in other EU states.

Disability Living Allowance (Epileptics)

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on (a) the special needs of people affected by epilepsy in applying for Disability Living Allowance and (b) Government proposals to improve the application process relating to them. [127722]

Mr. Bayley: Eligibility for Disability Living Allowance (DLA) is based on a person's needs, and not on recognition of their specific medical condition. People with epilepsy, as with other potentially disabling conditions, are therefore asked by the Benefits Agency to state their care and mobility needs arising from their condition when completing a DLA claim form. Decision makers are given information on the care and mobility needs arising from disabilities, including epilepsy, in the "Disability Handbook", which is compiled by senior doctors in the Department and approved and monitored by the Disability Living Allowance Advisory Board. People claiming DLA are also able to make free calls to the Benefits Inquiry Line to help them with their application.

It is particularly important, given the potentially vulnerable nature of claimants and their carers, that the application process for disability benefits is as straightforward and sensitive as possible. In consultation with a small group of disability organisations, we are trialling improved ways of gathering the information we need to deal with claims. This includes visiting claimants in their homes, to help us get a clearer picture of their disability and how it affects them.

Social Fund

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to increase the level of the Social Fund; and if he will make a statement. [127838]

Angela Eagle: The gross discretionary Social Fund budget increases each year, mainly through the recycling of loan repayments. Since the fund started, almost 17 million loans worth over £3 billion have been made for a net cost of £492 million.

Between 1997–98 and 2000–01 the gross budget has increased by over £128 million or 27 per cent. The size and allocation of the gross budget for 2001–02 will be announced in late March.

Information on expenditure is contained in the Secretary of State's Annual Reports on the Social Fund, copies of which are available in the House Library.

Details of the discretionary Social Fund budget for 2000–01 are available in the written answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Blackpool, North and Fleetwood (Mrs. Humble) on 3 April 2000, Official Report, column 339W.

Minimum Income Guarantee

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) pensioners and (b) families in Morecambe and Lunesdale benefit from the Minimum Income Guarantee. [127633]

Mr. Bayley: The information is in the table.

Numbers benefiting from the Minimum Income Guarantee in Morecambe and Lunesdale

	Number
Pensioners	3,000
Pensioners with dependants	100

Notes:
1. Pensioners-are defined as where the claimant, and/or partner are aged 60 or over.
2. Pensioners with dependants—are defined as pensioners with dependants aged 18 or under.
3. Figures are based on a 5 per cent. sample and are rounded to the nearest 100. They are therefore subject to a degree of sampling error.
4. Figures under 500 are based on very few sample cases and so subject to a higher degree of sampling error and so should only be used as a guide to the current situation.

Opinion Research

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 8 June 2000, Official Report, column 324W, on opinion research, what steps have been taken to ensure that his Department makes such results publicly available in the form required by paragraph 19 of the Cabinet Office Guidelines into Public Attitudes and Opinion Research. [127792]

Mr. Rooker: In line with Cabinet Office guidelines, public attitude or opinion research commissioned by the Department is generally either published or made available on request.

The Communications Directorate of the Department commissions research to develop and evaluate publicity campaigns or to inform other presentational issues. All reports are either placed in the Library or are available on request. If a report is not available, this may be because the full research has not yet been completed (ie reports not yet finalised by contractors, or the fieldwork is still in progress) or findings are still being employed to inform the communications activity.

Minimum Funding Requirement

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will announce the results of the review of the minimum funding requirement; and if he will make a statement. [127801]

Mr. Rooker: We have now received the report from the Faculty and Institute of Actuaries on the review of the minimum funding requirement and are considering it. We will be consulting on any proposals for change.

Widows Benefit

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has to compensate widowers following the recent ruling of the European Court of Human Rights declaring Widows Benefit to be discriminatory. [127864]

Angela Eagle: There has been no such ruling from the European Court of Human Rights. The ECHR's published judgments on two cases explained that, having reached a friendly settlement, these cases have been struck out of the list.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many parliamentary questions were tabled to his Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April which requested information, pursuant to his previous answers. [128007]

Mr. Rooker: Between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000 we received 57 questions which requested information pursuant to previous answers.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Serbia

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Serbia's exports of wheat and maize to (a) Libya, (b) Iraq and (c) Syria. [126627]

Mr. Vaz [holding answer 19 June 2000]: We do not have reliable statistics on the volume of Serbian or Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY) grain exports to Iraq, Libya and Syria. However, according to official FRY figures, FRY exports to all developing countries represent only 7.3 per cent. of total exports and are unlikely to do much to reduce the FRY's growing trade deficit. We do not believe that stocks available for export are high.

Qualified Majority Voting

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the matters currently decided by the Department of Health which could be determined by a qualified majority vote in the EU if the Draft Treaty of Nice is agreed. [126576]

Mr. Vaz [holding answer 19 June 2000]: Extension of QMV is on the agenda of the Intergovernmental Conference, but we are still at a relatively early stage in the negotiations. There is no draft Treaty. The Commission has put forward its opinion on the IGC, but Treaty change is a matter for the member states. The Presidency report to the European Council in Feira outlined areas for discussion in the second half of this year. However, except for the rules of procedure of the European Courts, no area has yet attracted consensus for a move to QMV.

Visit Visas

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list, for each British post abroad which operates a preliminary assessment sift system for people applying for visit visas, how many people (a) were advised to withdraw their applications and (b) followed that advice in 1999. [127110]

Mr. Vaz: I regret that we do not maintain statistics on the number of people advised to withdraw applications. However, our records show that just over 55,000 applicants actually withdrew during 1999. This figure was broken down as follows:

	Number
Abu Dhabi	60
Accra	1,405
Addis Ababa	2,210
Amman	344
Amsterdam	254
Bangkok	46
Banjul	687
Beirut	3
Bombay	5,212
Bucharest	214
Cairo	302
Calcutta	109
Canberra	52
Casablanca	330
Colombo	13
Copenhagen	40
Damascus	924
Dhaka	1,002
Dubai	192
Dublin	177
Dusseldorf	564
Geneva	105
Islamabad	22,943
Kampala	21
Kiev	1
Kingston	858
Lagos	1,341
Los Angeles	2,435
Madras	1,101

Latvia

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements there are for housing the commercial section of the British Embassy in Riga; how many staff are employed by the commercial section, broken down by (a) UK-based and (b) locally-employed staff; how much space the section occupies; and what plans he has to rehouse the section in preparation for the British Week to be held in Riga in 2001. [127858]

Mr. Vaz: The Commercial section in Riga is in the main Embassy building. The Embassy is currently undergoing refurbishment and reorganisation, which will improve the quality of Commercial Section accommodation and make it more accessible to visitors.

There are four full-time commercial staff in Riga: one UK-based and three locally engaged.

The Commercial Section occupies approximately 52m^2. An additional 28m^2 is available on the lower ground floor.

There are no plans to rehouse the Section in preparation for British Week in 2001: we do not regard this as necessary.

Kosovo

Ms Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the export of de-mining vehicles to the HALO Trust in Kosovo. [128297]

Mr. Vaz: The Government have granted a licence for the export to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY) of an armour protected wheel loading tractor for use by the HALO Trust, an organisation engaged in humanitarian de-mining activities in Kosovo on behalf of the United Nations Interim Administration Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK). This vehicle is rated on the UK's Military List.

Although UN Security Council resolution (UNSCR) 1160 (1998) imposed an arms embargo on the FRY, UNSCR 1160 shall not apply to the sale or supply of arms and related material for use by the international civil and security presence in Kosovo. We have notified the UN FRY Sanctions Committee of this export and they have raised no objection.

Thailand

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he made about the case of Sandra Gregory during his recent visit to Thailand; and if he will make a statement. [128147]

Mr. Hain: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State was briefed on the case of Sandra Gregory before his visit to Thailand. However, he did not raise any consular issues during his visit.

Ms Gregory submitted a Royal Pardon Petition in May 1997. Ms Gregory is waiting for His Majesty the King of Thailand to make his decision on her application. Our Embassy in Bangkok continues to make regular inquiries with the Thai authorities on the progress of Ms Gregory's Royal Pardon Petition.

Jordan

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to visit Jordan to discuss trade issues. [127811]

Mr. Hain: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs visited Jordan in January 2000 and I did so in March 2000 when trade issues were discussed.

Indonesia (Arms Exports)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent assessment he has made of the (a) use and (b) location of British arms exported to Indonesia; and if he will make a statement. [127891]

Mr. Battle: We are in close touch with our Embassy in Jakarta on this issue and we have seen no evidence that any of the reduced amount of military equipment supplied by this Administration has been used for internal repression in Indonesia. We have asked for and received assurances from the Indonesian Government that UK supplied equipment, wherever it is located in Indonesia, is not used for internal repression.

Saudi Arabia (Human Rights)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Saudi Arabia concerning abuse of human rights; and if he will make a statement. [127892]

Mr. Hain: We are firmly committed to constructive engagement on human rights with Saudi Arabia and discuss the issue regularly with the Saudis. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary did so most recently on 22 May at the EU/GCC Joint Ministerial Meeting in Brussels with the Saudi Foreign Minister.

West Papua

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which representatives from the British Embassy in Jakarta, Indonesia, attended the congress for self-determination in Japura, West Papua; and if he will make a statement. [127904]

Mr. Battle: No representatives from the British Embassy attended the Papuan Congress in Jayapura. In light of the declaration made by the Congress, the EU issued a statement on 8 June stressing its support for a strong, democratic, united and prosperous Indonesia. It also reaffirmed its support for Indonesia's territorial integrity and for the efforts of the current Indonesian Government to solve problems, such as in Aceh and West Papua, through peaceful negotiation.

TREASURY

Working Families Tax Credit

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many families have received the Working Families Tax Credit in the Crosby constituency. [127168]

Dawn Primarolo: The number of families in receipt of Working Families Tax Credit at the end of April 2000 is provisionally estimated at 1,053,000. Available figures by constituency are given in tables which have been deposited in the Library.

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the practicalities of paying Working Families Tax Credit by means other than through employers; what assessment he has made of the impact of the Convention for the Protection of Individuals with regard to automatic processing of personal data (ETS No. 108, 28.1.1981) on his policy on payment of Working Families Tax Credit; and what assessment he has made of Recommendation No. R(90) 19, adopted by the Committee of Ministers, on the Protection of Personal Data used for payment and other related operations on 13 September 1990. [128025]

Dawn Primarolo: Paying Working Families Tax Credit (WFTC) through the wage packet helps to demonstrate the rewards of work and to make work pay for families on low incomes. An employee applying for WFTC will be paid the tax credit by his or her employer as part of the pay packet and will be able to see clearly the amount of tax credit being paid in each pay period. If the applicant is self-employed or is not working the tax credit is paid by the Inland Revenue either by Automatic Credit Transfer (ACT) into a bank account or by Order Book.

The Government's policy on payment of WFTC does not conflict with the provisions of the Council of Europe Convention for the Protection of Individuals with regard to automatic processing of personal data (ETS No. 108, 28.1.1981) or the associated Recommendation No. R(90) 19.

Stress Audit

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library a copy of the independently conducted Stress Audit of the Treasury. [127885]

Mr. Timms: I have done so.

Correspondence

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire will receive a reply to his letter of 3 April on behalf of his constituent the Reverend Mr. Leeke. [127890]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I replied to the right hon. Member on 5 June. A further copy will be forwarded.

National Minimum Wage

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the numbers of people in the Crosby constituency that have benefited from the minimum wage. [127171]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mrs. Curtis-Thomas, dated 28 June 2000:

As National Statistician I have been asked to reply to your recent question regarding the number of people who have been affected by the national minimum wage in the Crosby constituency.

Definitive estimates on the number of people that have been affected by the national minimum wage are not yet available. Currently available estimates for assessing the effect draw on data from both the New Earnings Survey and the Labour Force Survey, and recognise the particular value that each survey adds to the quality and analytical details that can be provided. However, the latest adjusted estimates are mainly based on data for the spring (March-May) 1999 Labour Force Survey. Because the reference period spans the implementation date for the National Minimum Wage Act on 1 April 1999, these adjusted estimates are unlikely to accurately measure the effect of the Minimum Wage legislation since there are employees who could have been earning below the minimum wage rates in March 1999, before the law took effect.

The currently available estimates for March-May 1999 were published in an Office for National Statistics (ONS) First Release on 14 October 1999 and show that the number of people earning below the minimum wage rates set in April 1999 had fallen significantly between 1998 and 1999. A copy of this first release is available in the House of Commons Library.

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate how many people in Morecambe and Lunesdale have benefited from the national minimum wage. [127632]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Miss Geraldine Smith, dated 28 June 2000:

As National Statistician I have been asked to reply to your recent question regarding the number of people who have been affected by the national minimum wage in the Morecambe and Lunesdale constituency (127632).

Single Currency

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how the rate of entry for Sterling into the euro will be determined; what the scope is for negotiation of the rate; how long the exchange rate has to be maintained before entry; and if the relativity to be maintained to the euro allows for changes in the euro rate. [127557]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The rate at which sterling would enter the single currency would need to be consistent with economic fundamentals in the UK and compatible with sustainable convergence between the UK and other euro area economies.

Average Wage (Young People)

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the average wage paid to 16 and 17 year-olds in full-time work with no training. [127616]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Vernon Coaker, dated 28 June 2000:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent question regarding the average wage of 16 and 17 year-olds in full-time work with no training. (127616)

The Labour Force Survey (LFS) is National Statistics' major source of labour market data on individuals and is the most appropriate source of data to answer this question. LFS estimates show that in the UK in winter (December to February) 1999/2000, the average gross weekly earnings of 16 and 17 year-old full-time employees who had not received any job-related training in the last 13 weeks and were not currently enrolled on an education course was £139. This estimate is not seasonally adjusted.

Internet Access

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 19 June 2000, Official Report, column 105W, on the knowledge economy, how he defines access to the internet through a public access point; on what terms such access shall be available; and if he will make a statement. [127865]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Public internet access points are defined as any facility, whether provided by the public, voluntary, or private sector, which provides internet access for the general public. The Government are making community internet access points available through a number of initiatives, including ICT learning centres, and putting libraries on-line.

Non-contributory Benefits

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much was paid from the National Insurance Fund to pay for non-contributory benefits in the last financial year. [127986]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 27 June 2000]: Appendix 4 of the Government Actuary's Benefits up-rating report (Cm 4587) lists the estimated payments from the National Insurance Fund for both contributory and non-contributory benefits.

Motor Fuel

Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what study his Department has made of the implications for the United Kingdom economy of rising motor fuel prices; [127733]

(2) if he will assess the impact for the United Kingdom economy of petrol prices reaching £4 per gallon before 31 March 2001. [127734]

Mr. Timms: The Budget economic forecast took into account developments in motor fuel prices up to mid-March and their implications for both economic activity and inflation. The Treasury's next assessment of economic prospects, including the impact from higher world oil prices, will be published in the pre-Budget Report later this year.

Interactive Voice Response Systems

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many agencies of his Department use interactive voice response systems when dealing with telephone inquiries from the general public; [127117]

(2) how many of his Department's telephone lines used by the general public are responded to by interactive voice response systems. [127389]

Miss Melanie Johnson: There are no Voice Recognition Systems used.

Electronic Data Systems

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which Government Departments have (a) contracts and (b) framework agreements with Electronic Data Systems. [121789]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 12 May 2000]: The following Government Departments currently have contracts with Electronic Data Systems (EDS):

Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions

Department for Education and Employment

Department of Social Security

Home Office (Prison Service)

Inland Revenue

Lord Chancellor's Department

Ministry of Defence

Treasury (Office of Government Commerce).

Of the contracts listed, three are framework agreements (one with MOD and two with the Treasury (OGC)).

Road Tolls (VAT)

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the amount of VAT which the UK would be required to collect if the proposed extension of VAT to road tolls were to be applied retrospectively. [127384]

Dawn Primarolo: If, in its judgment due on 12 September, the European Court of Justice agrees with the earlier opinion of the Advocate-General—that VAT should be charged on road tolls—VAT will not be imposed upon motorists or toll operators retrospectively. It may, however, be necessary for the UK to recalculate contributions made to the European Commission budget from 1984. While it is not possible accurately to calculate the amount involved, it will be very small in relation to our overall contribution.

Tax Demands

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many income tax demands for amounts under £5 were dispatched in the last tax year; what the total value of the tax billed in these demands was; and what the estimated cost of recovering the tax was. [127649]

Dawn Primarolo: Taxpayers within Self Assessment are issued with statements at specific points in their tax affairs showing the current position, which may include small amounts. Information on how many such debts there are at any given time is not available.

Pensioners (Self-assessment)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to simplify tax self-assessment for pensioners; and what advice and support the Inland Revenue provides for the completion of such forms. [127878]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government want to minimise the number of people who have to complete self-assessment tax returns. That is why last July I announced changes to the criteria determining who should receive self-assessment tax returns which meant that up to 200,000 older people should no longer have to complete returns. The Inland Revenue are considering whether there are other changes which can be made.

For those pensioners who have to complete a tax return the Revenue is committed to giving the help they need. The Inland Revenue will help pensioners complete any forms if they cannot complete them themselves. They will visit the pensioner in his or her home if a face-to-face discussion is necessary and the pensioner is too infirm to get to the local tax office. Most Inland Revenue offices are equipped with magnifying lenses and induction loops—and all will be within the next few months. For those who prefer to contact the Revenue by telephone, they can contact their own tax office or use the helpline on 0845 9000 444. Research shows that the Revenue's help is valued as pensioners are the Inland Revenue's most satisfied customer group.

Tax Credits

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many claimants of Family Credit there were in (a) the North-East region, (b) the City of Newcastle and (c) the constituency of Newcastle upon Tyne, Central in April 1997; what was the average payment of Family Credit in each area; how many claimants of the Working Families Tax Credit there are for (a), (b) and (c); and what has been the average payment of Working Families Tax Credit (i) with and (ii) without child care tax credit. [127880]

Dawn Primarolo: The estimated numbers of families in receipt of awards are as follows:

	Estimate of number of recipients of Family Credit (FC) at the end of April 1997	Provisional estimate of number of recipients of Working Families Tax Credit (WFTC) at the end of April 2000
North-East region	45,900	61,000
Newcastle upon Tyne local authority	4,300	5,200
Newcastle upon Tyne, Central constituency	1,100	1,300

Note:
All the estimates in the table are based on 5 per cent. samples of awards and are therefore subject to sampling error. This should be borne in mind when making comparisons over time, by area, and between types of award.

For the North-East region, the average FC award at April 1997 was £58 per week, and the provisional estimate of the average WFTC award at April 2000 is £71 per week. The corresponding figures for WFTC awards with and without the child care tax credit are £88 per week and £70 per week, respectively. There are too few sample cases to provide reliable estimates of average awards at the local authority or constituency level.

IR35

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer of the IR35 contracts examined by the Inland Revenue, what were the job categories of the contracts submitted; how many were found to be (a) exempt and (b) not exempt from the IR 35 rates; and if he has revised the expected revenue yield from IR35. [127868]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer the hon. Member to the remarks I made in the course of the Finance Bill Standing Committee Debate on 6 June 2000, Official Report, Standing Committee, column 450.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 19 June 2000, Official Report, column 106W, on what date he will answer the question tabled by the right hon. Member for Birkenhead on 9 May. [128034]

Mr. Timms: I have done so today, at column 541W.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

ONE Service

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what back-up systems exist to assist jobseekers in the case of the (a) breakdown and (b) malfunctioning of the ONE system; when he will review the operation of the ONE system; and if he will make a statement. [125891]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 13 June 2000]: The ONE Call Centre service, one of the three main variants of the ONE model, is proving popular with clients and staff. It streamlines the service and makes it more convenient to clients, who are able to provide information by telephone.

The ONE Call Centre service is delivered from four sites. Each pilot has agreed contingency plans in the event of a breakdown or malfunction of systems, which ensures that the delivery of services to jobseekers is not put at risk.

The advantage of having four sites sharing the same telephony and IT is that, should a breakdown or malfunction occur in one site, the service can be offered by telephone from one of the other three call centres. Additional contingency plans involve the delivery of services face to face and the use of clerical records and forms rather than IT systems. These contingencies have been tested by the pilots in a number of situations since they became operational on 29 November 1999 and have proven robust.

The operation of the ONE pilots is under constant review and regular reports are provided to Ministers. The pilots are due to run for three years (to March 2002) and a formal evaluation will be completed at that time.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment which organisations and individuals he has consulted while undertaking the cross departmental review on Welfare to Work and ONE; in what form he has consulted them; on how many occasions he has met them; and if he will make a statement. [126294]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 19 June 2000]: All the Departments involved have consulted widely with both individuals and groups from all the Departments. This was reinforced by a seminar which included many people from the academic and wider policy community held on 18 January 2000 to discuss policy priorities. We have also sought other advice during the course of the review, for instance, from the New Deal Task Force.

The Welfare to Work and ONE Spending Review is progressing well. In due course details of all aspects of the 2000 Spending Review will be included in a Spending Review White Paper in the normal way.

Teachers (Early Leavers)

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) primary and (b) secondary school teachers left the teaching profession before reaching the age of 40 in each of the last 10 years; and how many of them did so within five years of qualifying as a teacher. [126315]

Ms Estelle Morris: The following table shows the number of maintained nursery, primary and secondary full and part-time teachers in England who left the maintained nursery, primary, secondary, special and PRU sector[1, 2] under age 40 and the number who left within five years of qualifying as a teacher.

	Nursery/primary teachers aged under 40		Secondary teachers aged under 40
Financial year	All leavers	Leavers within five years	All leavers	Leavers within five years
1988–89	6,300	1,300	10,000	2,300
1989–90	5,900	1,800	8,900	2,400
1990–91	6,800	2,200	8,600	2,400
1991–92	5,900	2,000	6,600	2,000
1992–93	5,100	1,800	5,700	1,800
1993–94	4,600	1,800	5,100	1,700
1994–95	5,100	2,100	5,400	2,100
1995–96	4,400	1,900	5,000	2,300
1996–97	4,700	2,100	4,900	2,400
1997–98	5,000	2,200	5,100	2,500

[1] Excludes those leaving sixth form colleges. Sixth form colleges became part of the FE sector as at 1 March 1993.
[2] Includes those taking ill-health retirement, barred and dying in service, which amounts to less than 200 in either phase for any year
Note:
Figures are rounded to the nearest 100.

There was a growth in total numbers of 3,500 full-time equivalent regular teachers in maintained nursery/primary schools and 3,100 full-time equivalent regular teachers in maintained secondary schools between January 1998 and January 2000.

Cars for Work Scheme

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many people he estimates will participate in the Cars for Work scheme; [126844]

(2) if he has made an environmental impact assessment of the implementation of the Cars for Work scheme; [126842]

(3) how the Cars for Work scheme will be evaluated; and if he will make a statement. [126843]

Ms Jowell: Car loan or leasing schemes may form part of the forthcoming Action Teams for Jobs initiative. In these areas we are setting up specialist teams to tackle the barriers that stop jobless people in deprived communities taking up work. Each team will have the flexibility to focus its resource on solving the problems unique to its area. This will include solutions to transport problems but will also cover other barriers to finding, keeping and progressing in work. Action Teams will be fully evaluated and the findings published in due course.

New Deal

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people had left the New Deal for Lone Parents in (a) Edinburgh and (b) Edinburgh, East and Musselburgh, up to (i) the end of March and (ii) the latest available date by immediate destination, including those who (1) left income support and went into employment, (2) left income support and transferred to other benefits, (3) left income support and became ineligible for NDLP, (4) were still on income support and went into employment, (5) were still on income support and declined to join the caseload and (6) were still on income support and withdrew for other reasons. [125751]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 20 June 2000]: The information requested is in the following table:

	(a) Edinburgh	(b) Edinburgh East and Musselburgh
(1) left Income Support and went into employment	198	33
(2) left Income Support and transferred to other benefits	5	1
(3) left Income Support and became ineligible for NDLP	39	5
(4) were still on Income Support and went into employment	3	1
(5) were still on Income Support and declined to join the caseload	10	1
(6) were still on Income Support and withdrew for other reasons	166	31

Note:
These figures are cumulative to the end of March 2000

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people were on the New Deal for Lone Parents in (a) Edinburgh, (b) Edinburgh, East and Musselburgh, (c) Scotland and (d) Great Britain (i) at the end of March and (ii) at the latest available date who were (1) receiving advice and guidance, (2) in education and training, (3) receiving in work support on income support and (4) receiving in work support off income support; and how many people in total have been in categories (i) and (ii). [125752]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 20 June 2000]: The information requested is in the following table:

	(a) Edinburgh	(b) Edinburgh, East and Musselburgh	(c) Scotland	(d) Great Britain
(1) receiving advice and guidance	340	79	4,305	48,640
(2) in education and training	72	11	660	7,500
(3) receiving in work support on IS	3	0	69	1,070
(4) receiving in work support off IS	161	42	1,599	17,940

Note:
These figures are cumulative to the end of March 2000

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people in (a) Edinburgh, (b) Edinburgh, East and Musselburgh, (c) Scotland and (d) Great Britain, (i) up to the end of March and (ii) up to the latest available date have (1) found sustained subsidised employment, (2) found sustained and unsubsidised employment, (3) found subsidised employment for less than 13 weeks and (4) found unsubsidised employment for less than 13 weeks. [125753]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 20 June 2000]: The information requested, covering the period from June 1998 to the end of March 2000, the latest date for which information is available, is contained in the table:

	Edinburgh	Edinburgh, East and Musselburgh	Scotland	Great Britain
Sustained subsidised employment	43	7	766	7,800
Sustained unsubsidised employment	167	38	2,092	26,920
Subsidised employment less than 13 weeks	2	0	62	600
Unsubsidised employment less than 13 weeks	30	4	538	5,830

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what change in the level of unemployment has occurred in the Crosby constituency as a result of the New Deals. [127172]

Ms Jowell: The New Deal for Young People is aimed at people aged 18–24 who have been claiming unemployment benefits for six months or more.

Claimant unemployment among this group has fallen by 70 per cent. in the three years since April 1997 and by 56 per cent. since April 1998 when the New Deal was introduced. Part of this fall is due to the delivery of a strong and stable economy, but the New Deal for Young People has helped unemployment to fall even faster. The fall of 56 per cent. since the New Deal was introduced compares with a fall of 18 per cent. in total unemployment, 23 per cent. in total youth (18–24) unemployment and 26 per cent. in the total number unemployed for six months or more. The positive effect of the New Deal is confirmed by independent research from the National Institute of Economic and Social Research.

It is not possible to measure the New Deal effect exactly in each constituency. However, in Crosby the falls in unemployment among the New Deal client group have also been substantially faster than for other groups. In Crosby constituency in the two years since April 1998 claimant unemployment among those aged 18–24, unemployed for six months or more, has fallen by 52 per cent. from 161 to 77. This compares with a fall of 19 per cent. in total unemployment, 31 per cent. in total youth (18–24) unemployment, and 20 per cent. in the total number unemployed for six months or more.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the total number of people in (a) Scotland, (b) Great Britain, (c) Edinburgh and (d) Edinburgh East and Musselburgh involved in the New Deal for 25-plus, (i) at the end of March 2000 and (ii) at the latest available date, who (1) had been in the advisory interview process, (2) had found unsubsidised jobs through the advisory interview process, (3) had transferred to other provision, (4) had entered subsidised employment, (5) had taken education and training opportunities, (6) had entered Training for Work and (7) had entered Follow Through. [126307]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 22 June 2000]: The information to the end of March 2000 is contained in the table.

	Edinburgh	Edinburgh East and Musselburgh	Scotland	Great Britain
Starts to Advisory Interview Process	1,573	236	23,180	232,010

Starts to Follow Through	28	4	350	4,050

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the total number of people in (a) Scotland and (b) Edinburgh who had (i) joined the 18–24 New Deal, (ii) gained subsidised jobs from the 18–24 New Deal, (iii) gained unsubsidised jobs from the 18–24 New Deal, (iv) started on the 18–24 New Deal Gateway, (v) entered each of the 18–24 New Deal options and (vi) been on Follow-Through by (1) the end of March 2000 and (2) the latest available date. [126308]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 22 June 2000]: The information to the end of March 2000, which is the latest available, is as follows:

	Edinburgh	Scotland
New Deal 18–24 starts	3,099	50,560
subsidised job starts	[1]232	[1]4,420
unsubsidised job starts	1,238	20,900

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people in Morecambe and Lunesdale have participated in New Deal programmes. [127637]

Ms Jowell: Latest figures to the end of March 2000, show that in Morecambe and Lunesdale parliamentary constituency, 873 young people have started the New Deal for Young People, 461 have started the New Deal for long-term unemployed people aged 25 or over, and 229 have started the new Deal for Lone Parents. It is a measure of the success of the Government's Welfare to Work policies that 573 people in Morecambe and Lunesdale have found work through the New Deals. Many other people in Morecambe and Lunesdale are benefiting from the New Deals for the disabled, partners of the unemployed and 50 plus.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people in Carlisle have (a) joined the New Deal for 18 to 24 year olds, (b) gained subsidised jobs, (c) gained unsubsidised jobs and (d) started on the New Deal Gateway to date. [127808]

Ms Jowell: Latest figures to the end of March 2000, show that in Carlisle parliamentary constituency, 681 young people have started New Deal. 334 of these have gained unsubsidised jobs and 85 started on the subsidised Employment option. 622 young people have started on the New Deal Gateway. We are well on target to meet our commitment of helping 250,000 young people into jobs through the New Deal.

Equal Rights

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the impact of the decisions made by the European Commission in its meeting of 7 June on equal rights legislation in the United Kingdom; and what his policy is thereon. [127185]

Ms Jowell: On 7 June the European Commission adopted a Communication on a Community framework strategy on gender equality 2001–05. The strategy includes a proposal that there be a Council Decision on a support programme. The Commission also adopted a proposal that there be a European Parliament and Council Directive amending the Equal Treatment Directive (76/207) on equality for men and women. The Government will study each of the proposals carefully (including any impact on domestic legislation such as the Sex Discrimination Act 1975) and report to Parliament in accordance with the usual procedures for scrutiny of European legislative proposals.

Class Sizes

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the primary schools in Morecambe and Lunesdale which have received additional money to reduce class sizes. [127635]

Ms Estelle Morris: The schools in Morecambe and Lunesdale which have received additional funding as part of the Government's initiative to limit infant classes to 30 pupils are listed. £620 million is available to support the initiative, and allocations so far to Lancashire LEA amount to nearly £15 million. This has helped to reduce the size of the average Key Stage 1 class in Morecambe and Lunesdale to 26.0. The figure in January 1997 was 29.1.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many five, six and seven-year-olds in Warrington North constituency were being taught in classes of over 30 (a) in May 1997 and (b) on the most recent date for which figures are available. [127320]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 26 June 2000]: The latest available information on class sizes in the Parliamentary constituency of Warrington, North is shown in the table.

Provisional national estimates of Key Stage 1 class sizes for January 2000 were recently published in a Statistical First Release "Class sizes in maintained schools in England: January 2000 (15/2000)" on 12 April 2000. Class size information broken down by local education authority area is also available from the House of Commons Library.

National figures for infant class sizes in September 1999 were published in Statistical First Release "Infant class sizes in England (2/2000)" on 21 January 2000.

The Government are well on course to limit all infant classes for five, six and 7-year-olds to 30 or below by September 2001 at the latest.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the cost of (a) reducing all primary school class sizes to 25 pupils or fewer and (b) introducing a maximum average class size of 25 in primary schools; and if he will make a statement. [127507]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 27 June 2000]: It has been estimated that the cost of reducing class sizes to 25 for all primary school children would be around £3 billion. We have not made an estimate of the cost of a maximum average class size of 25 in primary schools.

The size of the average primary class fell for the second year running between January 1999 and January 2000, from 27.5 to 27.1, after rising for the previous 10 years. The size of the average primary class in the Truro and St. Austell parliamentary constituency has gone down from 27.5 in January 1997 to 27.2 in January 2000.

At the same time, we are well on the way to delivering our pledge to limit infant classes to 30 pupils. £620 million is available to support the pledge, and allocations so far to Cornwall LEA amount to some £3.5 million. This has helped to reduce the size of the average Key Stage 1 class in Truro and St. Austell to 24.9. The figure in January 1997 was 25.4.

Disability Access

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many toilets at buildings owned or controlled by his Department (a) have and (b) do not have access for disabled people. [127598]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 27 June 2000]: Central records are not kept on the total number of toilets in buildings owned or controlled by the Department. This information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Specialist toilet facilities for disabled people are currently available in over 700 (64 per cent.) of these buildings, and we intend to increase the number of buildings that have facilities for disabled people as soon as practicable.

Teacher Vacancies

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many teacher vacancies in (i) maintained nursery schools, (ii) maintained primary schools and (iii) maintained secondary schools there were in (a) Great Britain and (b) each local education authority, for each year since 1997; and if he will make a statement. [127208]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 23 June 2000]: The following table shows the number of full-time teacher vacancies in maintained nursery and primary schools[1] and maintained secondary schools, in England, January 1997 to 2000, by local authority[2].

[1] Teacher vacancies in nursery schools are not collected separately.

[2] New unitary local authorities created by local government re-organisation are shown immediately following the reference to their former local authority.

The supply of teachers in Scotland is the responsibility of the Scottish Parliament, and in Wales, the responsibility of the National Assembly for Wales.

Numeracy and Literacy Strategies (Hampstead and Highgate)

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will estimate the number of children (a) in the UK and (b) in Hampstead and Highgate who have benefited from current national numeracy and literacy strategies. [127852]

Ms Estelle Morris: Up to 4,000,000 pupils in England, and 4,600 pupils in Hampstead and Highgate, have benefited from the introduction of the National Literacy Strategy and National Numeracy Strategy in September 1998 and September 1999 respectively.

Women

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the findings of the consultation conducted by the Women's Unit in respect of stereotyping experienced by girls in subject and career choice counselling. [127248]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 26 June 2000]: Young people were consulted about their job expectations and asked to examine the different expectations of boys and girls. Young women felt that despite their better performance than boys in school exams, the full range of career choices was not always presented to them. As a result we have developed a range of work experience programmes for girls with major companies and the Ministry of Defence to give girls an experience of different non-traditional work areas such as IT, engineering, construction, property and the armed forces.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans have been made for the summit for Women in the New Economy. [127250]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 26 June 2000]: The Government are planning to organise a two day event early next year that will focus on women in the UK maximising their potential in the labour market, whether it be starting a business, returning to work, considering a career change, or wishing to progress within their current organisation. Women from a range of backgrounds and locations will be given the opportunity to explore the choices available. The event will include exhibitors, (both public and private sector), workshops and seminars and women will be encouraged to participate in all of these.

Highly Able Pupils

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to develop provision for highly able pupils in schools. [127253]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 27 June 2000]: From this September, the gifted and talented strand of Excellence in Cities will be improving provision in over 20 per cent. of maintained secondary schools, and a pilot scheme will be operating in some 400 primary schools. This summer's national programme of 500 summer schools for gifted and talented pupils aged 10–14 will extend to almost all local education authorities and Education Action Zones. Planned expenditure for this financial year is over £40 million. Future provision depends on the outcomes of the spending review.

Education Funding

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much money Devon LEA received from (a) his Department through the SSA, (b) New Deal for Schools and (c) public-private partnership schemes in the last twelve months. [128000]

Ms Estelle Morris: Devon's education SSA for 1999–2000 was £243.8 million, an increase of £15.9 million on the previous year. £7,416,360 was allocated to Devon LEA on 11 April 2000 through the New Deal for Schools programme. No allocations have been made to Devon in the last 12 months for public private partnerships.

Learning and Skills Councils

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the progress being made on the appointment of the chairmen of the Local Learning and Skills Councils. [128259]

Mr. Wicks: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has today appointed the chairs of 21 of the Local Learning and Skills Councils. They are:

Local Learning and Skills Council	Chair
East of England
Bedfordshire	Jim McGivern
Essex	Mike Malone-Lee
Cambridgeshire	Sal Brinton
Hertfordshire	Stelio Stefanou
Norfolk	Geoff Loades
Suffolk	Tony Preston
East Midlands
Derbyshire	John Kirkland
Leicestershire	Ashwin Mistry
Lincolnshire	Roger Begy
Northamptonshire	Christopher Ripper
Nottinghamshire	Duncan Sedgwick
South East
Surrey	Robert Douglas
Sussex	Norman Boyland
Oxford/Bucks/Milton Keynes	Patrick Upson
Kent/Medway	Alan Chisholm
Hampshire/Isle of Wight	Penelope Melville-Brown
Berkshire	Tom Melvin
North East
Northumberland	Barry Morgan
Tyne and Wear	Ashley Winter
County Durham	Olivia Grant
Tees Valley	Miles Middleton

We will be announcing further appointments shortly and a list of the remaining appointments will be placed in the Library in due course.

The local Chairs bring with them a wealth of experience, not least from business, which will be a positive force for success in shaping the work of the Local Learning and Skills Councils.

School Milk (Northern Region)

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the (a) infant, (b) junior and (c) primary schools in the Northern Region that are in receipt of the European subsidy for school milk; and if he will make a statement. [127009]

Ms Quin: I have been asked to reply.

Of the 159 local education authorities which claim the EU School Milk Subsidy, 42 claim in the Northern Region on behalf of approximately 5,000 schools. The information requested on the breakdown between infant, junior and primary schools is not held centrally.

WALES

Poverty

10. Ms Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on progress in the Joint Ministerial Committee on tackling poverty. [126703]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Joint Ministerial Committee on Poverty held its second meeting on 26 May. The Committee agreed that the Government and the devolved Administrations should participate in a joint programme to increase the take-up of the minimum income guarantee, as well as other benefits and services for pensioners.

The Committee provides an excellent opportunity for the UK Government and the devolved Administrations to work together to tackle the problems of poverty and social exclusion. It enables us to ensure that we can share information and learn from each other's best practices.

New Deal

11. Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of the New Deal for 18 to 24-year-olds in Wales. [126704]

Mr. Hanson: The New Deal has more than proved how successful it has been by achieving beyond its original target of 13,000 by employing 14,400 18 to 24-year-olds up to March 2000.

Since the New Deal was launched throughout Wales, there has been a 62 per cent. fall in the number of 18 to 24-year-olds unemployed and claiming Job Seeker's Allowance for six months or more.

24. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for Education and Employment on the New Deal in Wales. [126717]

Mr. Hanson: Last month I attended a New Deal checkpoint meeting with other ministerial colleagues and colleagues from the devolved administrations, chaired by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Employment, Welfare to Work and Equal Opportunities. We welcomed the success to date of New Deal, which had succeeded in securing jobs for some 21,500 people in Wales by the end of March this year, and discussed ways of building on this success in the future.

Mr. John Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for Education and Employment on the operation of the New Deal in Wales. [126707]

Mr. Hanson: Last month I attended a New Deal checkpoint meeting with other ministerial colleagues and colleagues from the devolved administrations, chaired by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Employment, Welfare to Work and Equal Opportunities.

The Government's aim has always been to reconnect people with the labour market, so that they can play a full and productive part in society. At the end of March 2000 over 21,000 people had entered employment through the New Deal programme in Wales.

Police Funding

12. Mrs. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent discussions he has had with Welsh Chief Constables about the funding of police authorities in Wales. [126705]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I met the Chief Constables on 17 March. We discussed a wide range of issues including developments in modern policing, and staffing and funding levels.

Joint Ministerial Committee on Health

13. Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the Joint Ministerial Committee on Health which met on Friday 16 June. [126706]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The purpose of the Joint Ministerial Committee on Health was to provide an opportunity for all parts of the UK to share ideas and best practices.

I know that everyone has found the exchange of experiences a useful tool for putting together plans for the future.

Following the three meetings held so far I understand that Jane Hutt, the Assembly Health and Social Services Secretary will be making a statement to the National Assembly for Wales in July on progress in improving the NHS in Wales and her plans for further action.

Cross-border Issues

15. Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had recently with the First Secretary on Welsh-English cross-border issues; and if he will make a statement. [126708]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I meet the First Secretary regularly to discuss a range of issues including this one.

Where decisions affect communities on the English/Welsh border, the Assembly engages in discussions with the lead Whitehall department. I would become involved only if I were asked to intervene to help resolve a difficulty.

Sheepmeat Premium

16. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has held with the Agriculture and Rural Development Secretary of the National Assembly for Wales regarding the sheepmeat premium. [126709]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I discuss a wide range of topics with my colleagues in the National Assembly for Wales on a regular basis and my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary meets the Assembly Secretary for Agriculture and Rural Development every quarter. The UK Agriculture Ministers have been in discussion to agree a UK position on the anticipated Commission proposals for reform of the sheepmeat regime, expected in the autumn. The Assembly Agriculture and Rural Development Secretary is responsible for these matters in Wales, but my office is being kept fully informed of progress.

Hunting with Hounds

17. Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the impact of a ban on hunting with hounds on (a) the Welsh countryside and (b) employment, tourism and economic development in Wales. [126710]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I have made no specific assessment of the impact of a ban on hunting with hounds. However I am following this issue very closely as the potential repercussions on the Welsh countryside and employment, tourism and economic development in Wales are of course of great importance to me. The decision on the merits of hunting is a matter for Parliament and a free vote. It is a matter for each Member of Parliament to reach their own conclusion in the light of information which the Burns Report has added to the debate.

21. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had this year about further transfer of powers to the Welsh Assembly relating to hunting. [126714]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I regularly discuss a wide range of topics with my colleagues both in Whitehall and the National Assembly for Wales. It is anticipated that a Government Bill containing a series of legislative options will be introduced early in the next Parliamentary Session. As my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary stated in the House on 12 June 2000, Official Report, columns 639–41 Wales and England are one common-law jurisdiction and as such the issue is not the responsibility of the National Assembly for Wales. We have no plans for a transfer of functions to the Assembly in relation to hunting.

29. Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent representations he has received about banning the hunting of foxes with dogs. [126722]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I have received no specific representations about banning the hunting of foxes with dogs, but am in close contact with colleagues in Whitehall as Government policy on this issue progresses.

Unemployment

18. Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the First Secretary about the number of unemployed people in Wales in May 1997 and May 2000. [126711]

Mr. Hanson: My right hon. Friend regularly meets the First Secretary and discusses a wide range of issues including employment in Wales. In addition, I hold quarterly liaison meetings with the Assembly Secretary for Education and Training.

This Government's record of continuing commitment to getting people off benefits and back into work is highlighted by the fact that the number of claimants on Jobseeker's Allowance for April 2000 has been significantly reduced to 59,170 compared to 80,322 for May 1997 when this Government took office.

22. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on assistance for long-term unemployed people over the age of 25 years. [126715]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The New Deal programmes, Work Based Learning for Adults, "Employment Zones", and a range of Employment Service programmes provide training to equip workless people aged 25 and over with the skills they need to gain and hold down a job. The latest statistical information on the "New Deal for 25 Plus" indicates that, in Wales, 13,200 people had joined the programme, and 2,700 had entered employment (of which 2,300 had secured sustained jobs).

Some improvements, including the introduction of a New Deal Gateway and access to a range of external Gateway services, were put in place on the "New Deal for 25 Plus" in April. A more comprehensive package of measures will operate from April 2001, with the aim of broadening the attractiveness of the programme to clients by providing a wider range of opportunities.

Hospital Waiting Lists

19. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent discussions he has had with the First Secretary on the impact of funding on the change in NHS waiting lists in Wales for those waiting over six months since 1 May 1997. [126712]

Mr. Hanson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I regularly meet the First Secretary and the Assembly Health and Social Services Secretary to discuss the wide range of health issues affecting Wales.

The subject of waiting lists and the impact on them of additional funding allocated by the Assembly is, of course, an important part of these discussions.

Severn Bridge

20. Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussion he has had with the First Secretary on charging VAT on crossing the Severn bridge. [126713]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I have regular discussion with the First Secretary on a wide range of transport issues and I recognise the significance of this issue to Wales.

The issue of whether to charge VAT on toll charges is presently the subject of proceedings before the European Court of Justice. We understand that the judgment of the court is not due until 12 September.

The Severn Crossings, which are mainly in England, remain the responsibility of the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions.

Assisted Areas

23. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the First Secretary of the National Assembly and with officials of the EU Commission on the introduction of the new regional development maps for Wales. [126716]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Assisted Areas map is a matter for the UK Government, but I have, of course, discussed the designation of Welsh areas with the First Secretary and the UK Government maintain close contact with both the European Commission and the National Assembly for Wales on this issue.

The Government are still in discussion with the European Commission and are pressing for early approval of the Assisted Areas map. Within the framework set by the European Commission, all concerned have tried to include, so far as possible, revised proposals reflecting local and national priorities. The Government will make an announcement when the map is approved.

NHS (Private Capital)

25. Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the First Secretary and the Welsh Health and Social Services Secretary with regard to the use of private capital in the running of the NHS. [126718]

Mr. Hanson: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State and I have regular discussions with the First Secretary and the Assembly Health and Social Services Secretary about the wide range of issues that affect the NHS in Wales.

It is encouraging to see the range of schemes that are being provided under the Private Finance Initiative.

Local Government

26. Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the consequences arising from the proposed Cabinet structure for local government for those councils which consist mainly of independent councillors. [126719]

Mr. Hanson: I have discussed the proposals with Welsh local councils individually and with the WLGA. The majority of Welsh councils—including some of those consisting mainly of independents—are currently piloting some form of executive style decision making. We have made no general assessment of pilots individual councils are currently pursuing, however these innovations are being carried out under the existing legislative framework which is not designed for executive arrangements.

The Local Government Bill [Lords] provides a tailor made framework for executive arrangements including cabinets and directly elected mayors. The National Assembly for Wales will have the power to make further forms of executive available to Welsh councils if appropriate.

Knowledge Economy

27. Mrs. Betty Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on progress in the Joint Ministerial Committee on developing the knowledge economy. [126720]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The subjects covered by the Joint Ministerial Committee on the Knowledge Economy includes both responsibilities which have been transferred to the Assembly and some which have not. The Committee provides a forum for the UK Government and the devolved administrations to exchange information and best practice.

The Committee's remit includes consideration of the level and availability of Information Technology training in the UK; the uptake by business of E-Commerce processes; and liaison between the administrations on electronic procurement. The Committee's remit also covers the employment opportunities created by the knowledge economy.

Transport Links

28. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the First Secretary on improving transport links between Wales and continental Europe. [126721]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I meet the First Secretary regularly and discuss a wide range of transport issues. The Assembly, who have responsibility for the majority of transport policy in Wales, continue to consider transport links to continental Europe when formulating their policies.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many of the written parliamentary questions tabled to his Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April have not received substantive answers, citing as the reason that the information is (a) not held centrally, (b) not held in the form requested and (c) not available. [128012]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The information requested is as follows: (a) three, (b) nil and (c) two.

In some of these answers we provided part of the information requested, while citing the above reasons for not providing all of the information requested.

Electoral System

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent discussions he has had with the First Secretary about the working of the Government of Wales Act 1998 and the electoral system. [126700]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I meet the First Secretary regularly to discuss a range of issues.

CABINET OFFICE

Interactive Voice Response Systems

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many Government Departments and agencies use interactive voice response systems to deal with inquiries from the general public departments. [127116]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I have been asked to reply.

This matter comes under the responsibility of the Office of Government Commerce, which has been a Treasury Department since April 2000. Each Government Department is responsible for deciding the most appropriate telecommunications systems to meet its business requirements. Obtaining records from each of these on any use of interactive voice response systems to deal with public inquiries would be disproportionately costly.

Statistics

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what statistics relating to the responsibilities of her Department are collated by parliamentary constituency, indicating the dates covered in each case. [123848]

Mr. Stringer: My Department does not routinely collate any statistical data at parliamentary constituency level.

The Cabinet Office does, however, compile statistics in response to specific inquiries from hon. and right hon. Members at constituency level.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office for how many parliamentary questions tabled between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000 her Department has given advice on answers; how many of these questions were instances of the same question being tabled to different Departments by the same hon. Members; and how many such questions there were. [127105]

Marjorie Mowlam: Detailed information in the form requested is not held centrally. My Department issues advice to Departments on a range of issues including Parliamentary Questions where appropriate. This is the practice adopted over many years by successive Administrations.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many parliamentary questions were tabled to her Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April which requested information, pursuant to her previous answers. [128008]

Mr. Stringer: Between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000 there were 18 parliamentary questions tabled to my Department which requested information pursuant to previous answers.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Judicial Appointments

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will place in the Library a copy of the report into QC and judicial appointments by Dr. Kate Malleson. [127727]

Jane Kennedy: Dr. Kate Malleson and Dr. Fareda Banda recently completed research into the factors that affect decisions to apply for judicial appointments and Queen's Counsel. A copy of their report has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the findings of the independent report commissioned by his Department from Dr. Kate Malleson into the system of appointment of QCs and judges. [127726]

Jane Kennedy: In December 1998, the Lord Chancellor's Department commissioned research into the factors that affect decisions to apply for judicial appointment and Queen's Counsel. Dr. Kate Malleson and Dr. Fareda Banda undertook the research and their report was published on 15 June 2000. The research found that there is a wide range of factors that affect decisions to apply for judicial appointment and/or Queen's Counsel. Some respondents did not have a judicial appointment in their career plan, while others were concerned about the consultation procedures for assessing candidates for judicial office; concerns based on largely inaccurate perceptions of how the system actually works. The report made no findings into the system of appointment of QCs and judges.

Conveyancing

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on progress with the trials of the new system for home buying and selling. [127700]

Mr. Lock: The seller's information pack pilot project under way in Bristol is now two thirds complete. Citizens' workshops to test how packs might operate in relation to lower value properties have been undertaken in Burnley and Bradford. A summary of the interim research findings was published on 27 June and copies have been placed in the House of Commons Library. A final research report is expected to be published later in the year.

Family Law

Mr. Leslie: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when the Lord Chancellor's Advisory Board on Family law plans to publish its Third Annual report. [128442]

Jane Kennedy: The Lord Chancellor's Advisory Board on Family Law has today published its Third Annual Report and copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

HEALTH

Breast Screening

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the North of London Breast Screening Unit based at Edgware Community Hospital; and what proposals he has arising out of that assessment. [126161]

Yvette Cooper: As part of its regular visiting programme, the London Region Breast Screening Quality Assurance Reference Centre visited the North of London Breast Screening Service on 25 November 1999. Following that visit, a number of recommendations were made to strengthen the service and improve quality. An action plan taking account of them is due to be submitted shortly to the region's quality assurance director.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) on what date and at what location a mobile breast screening unit last operated in Brent; [126082]

(2) what bids he has received from Brent and Harrow Health Authority for funding from the New Opportunities Fund to provide additional mobile breast screening units; [126160]

(3) on what date and at what location a mobile breast screening unit last made a visit in the Brent and Harrow Health Authority Area; [126081]

(4) how many mobile breast screening units serve the Brent and Harrow Health Authority area; how many of these are fully functioning; and how many of the fully-functioning mobile breast screening units serving that area have been mobile in the year 2000 to date. [126164]

Yvette Cooper: There is currently one mobile breast screening unit that serves the Brent and Harrow Health Authority area. This unit is fully functional and forms a part of the North of London Breast Screening Service based at Edgware Community Hospital, which is managed by the Barnet and Chase Farm Hospitals National Health Service Trust. The service provides breast screening for the population of Brent and Harrow, Barnet and part of West Hertfordshire Health Authorities. Following a successful bid from the Barnet and Chase Farm Hospitals Trust, the New Opportunities Fund notified the trust in December 1999 that it would provide the capital necessary for the replacement of this and one other unit and for the purchase of one additional trailer. The London Regional Office of the NHS Executive has agreed to meet capital costs for associated equipment.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what delays there have been in (a) assessing women who have been found to have abnormal mammograms and (b) reporting results to such women in the Brent and Harrow Health Area in the past year. [126163]

Yvette Cooper: The national standard is that women should be assessed within three weeks. During the period 1 April 1999 to 31 August 1999, the time taken for assessment of women in the Brent and Harrow Health Authority area whose mammograms were abnormal was:

less than three weeks: 30 women (23.62 per cent.)

four weeks: 55 women (43.30 per cent.)

five weeks and over: 42 women (33.08 per cent.)

Source:

NHS Breast Screening Programme—London Quality Assurance Reference Centre.

All women should be given an outline of the diagnosis on the day of assessment and, if any further results were to be given, would return within a week to receive them.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the spending (a) in the current financial year, (b) committed and (c) projected on breast screening, assessment and surgery of (i) Brent and Harrow Health Authority, (ii) Barnet Health Authority, (iii) Ealing, Hammersmith and Hounslow Health Authority, (iv) Hillingdon Health Authority, (v) Camden and Islington Health Authority and (vi) Kensington, Chelsea and Westminster Health Authority. [126159]

Yvette Cooper: Data in the form requested are not held centrally. The following figures are for individual health authorities spending in 2000–01 on breast screening services:

	£000
Brent and Harrow Health Authority	343
Barnet Health Authority	245
Ealing Hammersmith and Hounslow Health Authority	547
Hillingdon Health Authority	202
Camden and Islington Health Authority	292
Kensington Chelsea and Westminster Health Authority	290

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of women (a) nationally and (b) in the Brent and Harrow Health Authority Area receive regular screening within the time periods recommended by his Department for the different age groups. [126165]

Yvette Cooper: Women in the target age group 50 to 64 are invited for breast screening every three years. Information about coverage of the target age group for 1999, the latest year available, is in the table.

	Eligible population (thousand)	Coverage percentage[1]
England	4,261.5	67.6
Brent and Harrow HA	39.2	58.3

Infertility Treatment

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations he has received in the last 12 months for increasing infertility treatment provision; and if he will make a statement. [126270]

Yvette Cooper: We have received 251 representations for increasing infertility treatment in the last 12 months.

We share the concerns about the postcode lottery in infertility services. We will shortly be publishing a survey into infertility provision across the country which demonstrates variations in the service. The Department will be examining ways to tackle the postcode lottery while continuing to target our priority areas of cancer and heart disease.

Alcoholism

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the total cost was of treatment services for alcoholics and alcoholism, including in-patient and out-patient care and prevention schemes, in (a) 1970, (b) 1980, (c) 1990 and (d) 1999. [126837]

Yvette Cooper: Estimates of the cost to the National Health Service of alcohol-related illnesses and injuries vary widely. The total cost of alcohol-related illnesses treated by hospitals is information that is not collected centrally and therefore no data are available for the periods in question.

The most recent academic estimate of which we are aware is for the costs of alcohol misuse in the NHS in England and Wales in 1992 and is reproduced in the table.

£ million

	Cost
Inpatient costs—direct alcohol diagnosis	40.8
Inpatient costs—other alcohol-related diagnosis	120.2
General practice costs	3.1
Total	164.0

Heart Disease

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the incidence was of (a) pulmonary heart disease, (b) chronic obstructive pulmonary heart disease and (c) lung cancer in (i) 1970, (ii) 1980, (iii) 1990 and (iv) 1999; and how much it cost to treat each of those diseases in those years. [126825]

Yvette Cooper: Information about the incidence of pulmonary heart disease (PHD) and chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD) is derived from the morbidity studies from general practice in the years 1991–92 (the latest year available), 1981–82 and 1971–72. Figures in the table represent patients in England and Wales who consulted their GP for the first time.

per 10,000 population

	PHD	COPD
1971–72	4.0	84
1981–82	2.0	122
1991–92	more than 0.5	107

In order not to place too large a burden on the National Health Service, data collected centrally on expenditure do not permit analysis at the level of detail requested.

Office for National Statistics data shows that the number and rates per 100,000 of new cases of lung cancer in 1971, 1980, 1990 and 1996 (provisional figures) are as follows:

Lung cancer—number and rates per 100,000 new cases, England and Wales

	1971	1980	1990	1996[1]
Number of registrations
Male	25,711	27,791	25,037	22,300
Female	5,767	8,837	11,567	12,700
Age standardised rate per 100,000 population[2]

Midwives

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many midwives were in training in NHS hospitals in the Greater London area on 1 May. [127869]

Mr. Denham: The responsibility for the training of midwives rests with higher education institutions rather than National Health Service trusts. Trusts do however provide clinical placements for student midwives and continuing professional development opportunities. The information requested is not collected centrally.

Beta Interferon

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to receive from NICE its assessment of the efficacy of beta interferon in treating persons with MS. [127860]

Mr. Denham: I understand that the National Institute for Clinical Excellence plans to issue its guidance to the National Health Service in early August, unless one of the parties concerned appeals formally against the outcome of the appraisal.

Foster Care

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his plans to provide for young people to remain in foster care beyond the age of 18 years. [128315]

Mr. Hutton: Under the Children Act 1989, children can be looked after until they reach the age of 18. Foster care therefore comes to an end at 18. However, it would be possible, if desired, for the young person to continue to live with his former foster parents, for example under a supported lodgings arrangement. In addition, under section 20(5) of the Children Act a council can provide accommodation in a community home for a person aged between 16 and 21 should his welfare require it.

The Children (Leaving Care) Bill does not affect either of these provisions. However, the Bill does create significant new aftercare duties which will require councils to continue to assist care leavers, should their welfare require it, until they are 21, or beyond if they are still in an agreed programme of education or training.

Waterhouse Report

Mrs. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to publish the Government's response to the report of the Tribunal of Inquiry into the abuse of children in care in the former county council areas of Gwynedd and Clwyd since 1974, entitled "Lost in Care". [128313]

Mr. Hutton: I am pleased to announce that the Government's response to Sir Ronald Waterhouse's report into the tragic events in North Wales is being published today. The response is called "Learning the Lessons" and copies have been placed in the Vote Office and the Library.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Income Support

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioner claimants of income support there were in (a) the North East, (b) the City of Newcastle upon Tyne and (c) the constituency of Newcastle upon Tyne and what the average payment of income support was in each of the last three years; how many claimants of the pensioners' income guarantee there now are for the same areas; and what was the average payment of income support in each of the last three years. [127973]

Mr. Bayley: The Minimum Income Guarantee is delivered through Income Support. It was designed to provide poorer pensioners with a higher income threshold and this April was increased in line with average earnings. The current rates are £78.45 for a single pensioner and £121.95 for a couple. The information is in the table.

Income Support pensioners in Newcastle Central Parliamentary constituency, Newcastle City local authority, and North-east Government Office region—February 1998 to 2000

	Number	Average weekly amount (£)

Winter Fuel Allowance

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people over 60 in Morecambe and Lunesdale are eligible for the Winter Fuel Allowance. [127642]

Angela Eagle: In the previous winter (1999–2000), 18,928 people in the Morecambe and Lunesdale constituency received a winter fuel payment automatically, by virtue of their entitlement to a Social Security benefit. Actual numbers of beneficiaries for winter 2000 will not be known until later in the year (the qualifying week is 18 September 2000). In addition 10,087 claims forms/ mailshots have also been issued to people in the constituency, who based on Departmental records, may be eligible for winter fuel payments for both previous winters and this coming winter as a result of the European Court judgment.

A national and regional advertising campaign will commence early July 2000 to encourage people who have not received a claim form to contact the Winter Fuel Helpline.

ACT (Fraud Savings)

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the fraud savings resulting from automation of benefit payments at post offices. [126521]

Mr. Rooker: The move to Automated Credit Transfer as the normal method of payment will bring significant savings from reduced levels of fraud. The move will begin in 2003, but full savings will not be realised until 2005, when the transition from current paper based methods of payment is complete.

A large number of fraud prevention measures are in place to manage the fraud risk relating to order books and girocheques but latest figures indicate that despite these measures around £100 million was lost in 1998–99.

The modernisation and automation of methods of payment will virtually eliminate instrument of payment fraud.

Benefit Fraud Inspectorate

Mr. Leslie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will publish the reports of the Benefit Fraud Inspectorate in respect of Southwark and Maidenhead councils; and what arrangements have been made to support local authorities in their efforts to counter Housing and Council Tax Benefit fraud through the promotion of good practice guidance. [128863]

Mr. Rooker: Benefit Fraud Inspectorate reports have been published today in respect of Southwark and Windsor and Maidenhead Councils. From these reports, and others, it is clear that many local authorities are failing to reach adequate standards of performance to secure Housing and Council Tax Benefit administration and counter the threat of fraud.

We have already introduced a number of initiatives aimed at helping councils and I am pleased to announce another measure that will provide practical support. The Benefit Fraud Inspectorate (BFI) has today published its second Local Authority Good Practice Guide. This Guide provides first hand experience from the BFI's inspection work and addresses a large range of issues. The BFI has worked closely with other Agencies as well as council staff to provide authorities with an in-depth understanding of what risks and threats they face, as well as various measures that can be taken to counter them.

This is an important step forward in the intelligence available to authorities and one I expect will be used. The BFI's reports provide an early warning on local authority benefit performance standards and I will be monitoring the progress of authorities taking up these good practices through future inspection reports.

Copies of the Benefit Fraud Inspectorate reports and the Local Authority Good Practice Guide have been placed in the Library.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Access Funds

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when the report of the Review of Access Funds and Hardship Loans will be available. [128757]

Mr. Wicks: Copies of the Report have today been placed in the Library of the House. My noble Friend the Minister for Education and Employment is sending copies of the Executive Summary to every higher education and further education institution which administers Access Funds or Hardship Loans in England and Wales.

The Review looked at ways in which these two schemes can be used more effectively to widen access and prevent hardship, with a particular emphasis on mature students. My right hon. Friend attaches great importance to widening access and £87 million will be available next year through the Access Bursary and Hardship Funds. Hardship Loans were introduced by this Government to provide extra targeted help for students in financial difficulty.

The Review concluded that changes in the arrangements for offering help to students through these schemes were needed. The Report contains a total of 20 recommendations on administration of the Funds, as well as further support for mature students. Many of the recommendations addressed to the Department have already been implemented or are being put in place for 2000–01.

A package of measures to provide additional help for mature and disadvantaged students was announced on 25 January. This package includes £17 million for non-repayable Bursaries in 2000–01 for mature students; a new Childcare Grant from 2001–02 and £10 million for Opportunity Bursaries to improve access to higher education for bright pupils from lower socio-economic groups. In addition, we have provided £2 million to help higher education institutions with the cost of administering the Bursaries for mature students in 2000–01.

"Teachers"

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what has been the total cost of the magazine called "Teachers" since its inception. [128067]

Mr. Wills: The average cost of each issue of "Teachers" magazine is 32p per head. The magazine is subsidised by advertising which keeps this cost down.

The magazine is around £108,000 an issue or £650,000 a year. The magazine was launched in February 1999 and is published six times a year. We have published 10 issues of the magazine so far.

The magazine is a simple and effective way of communicating directly with teachers. It gives professional advice and provides a platform to share good practice to help raise standards.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many written parliamentary questions tabled to his Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April have not received substantive answers, citing as the reason (a) commercial and (b) other confidentiality. [128016]

Mr. Wills: Of replies to parliamentary questions tabled to the Department during the period stated, five concerned matters which were commercial in confidence, two stated information was commercially confidential and one referred to a document which was commercially sensitive.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment on how many occasions he has deposited papers in the Library in response to parliamentary questions tabled to his Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April. [127674]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 26 June 2000]: Papers were deposited in the Libraries in response to parliamentary questions on 60 occasions between the dates in question.

New Deal

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) small, (b) medium and (c) large businesses in (i) Coventry and (ii) the UK are participating in the New Deal. [127456]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 27 June 2000]: Over 73,000 employers have signed employer agreements nationally, 355 of whom are in the Coventry area. The majority of agreements are at local level, with small and medium sized businesses. Many thousands of other employers who have not signed agreements also participate in New Deal, for example by employing New Dealers in unsubsidised jobs.

Medical Students

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many medical students were at medical schools in the UK on 1 April. [127848]

Mr. Wicks: Data from the Higher Education Statistics Agency show the number of full-time first degree medical students in the UK as at 1 December was 23,700.

Disability Access

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what action he is taking to encourage employers to improve facilities for disabled access to toilets. [127599]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 27 June 2000]: I have been asked to reply.

Under health and safety legislation employers are required to ensure that suitable and sufficient toilet facilities are provided for all employees. Therefore, any worker with a disability must have access to toilet and other welfare facilities that are suitable for his or her use. In addition, the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 also places a duty on an employer who has 15 or more employees to provide reasonable adjustments for disabled employees to ensure that they are not substantially disadvantaged. This could include providing access to toilet facilities. The newly formed Disability Rights Commission will be working to help employees enforce their rights and employers to understand their duties under the Act.

In the case of new buildings Part M of the Building Regulations covers access and facilities for disabled people and all new employment buildings are required to make reasonable provision for the sanitary arrangements of disabled people.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

ICT Access

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what Government help is available to provide access to the internet for poorer individuals. [127631]

Mr. Wills: I have been asked to reply.

We are taking forward a range of measures to help those on low incomes and benefits to access the internet. Excellent progress is being made in improving computer:pupil ratios to ensure that, in future, school leavers are able to use and benefit from new technologies.

We are providing £252 million to fund around 700 ICT learning centres in England. These centres are targeted within the 2,000 most deprived local authority wards, and rural areas with significant transport and deprivation problems. They will support disadvantaged client groups with low or no ICT skills.

50,000 additional free computer training courses will be available for jobless people across the country. We are also establishing a pilot scheme to wire up all the homes in some of our most deprived communities. And we are introducing the "Computers within Reach" pilot scheme to enable around 100,000 low-income learners and families to acquire reconditioned computers. We will continue to work with partners and the private sector to address the issue of closing the digital divide.

Small Business Unit

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what expertise the Small Business Unit has to advise farmers on diversification; and if he will make a statement. [128052]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 28 June 2000]: The new service, which will offer tailored business advice to help farmers faced with fundamental changes in their marketplace to develop better business practices and take strategic decisions about the future of their businesses, will be delivered through the Small Business Service, working with the Business Link partnerships, other relevant organisations (eg the NFU, Lantra) and the farming industry. Farm Business Advisers delivering the service on the ground will have business expertise and knowledge of the farming industry and should be well placed to offer advice on diversification.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on how many occasions he deposited papers in the Library in response to parliamentary questions tabled to his Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April. [128011]

Mr. Byers: My Department deposited in the Library papers associated with 43 parliamentary questions tabled between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many of the written parliamentary questions tabled to his Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000 have not received substantive answers, citing as the reason commercial confidentiality or other confidentiality. [127436]

Mr. Byers: Answers to 11 written parliamentary questions tabled between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000 have not received substantive answers for reasons of commercial or other confidentiality.

Rail Locomotives

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many diesel engines for rail locomotives were manufactured in the UK in each of the last five years for which figures are available; what action he is taking to encourage passenger and freight operators to invest in UK-manufactured engines, locomotives and rolling stock; and if he will make a statement. [127408]

Mr. Alan Johnson: According to the Office for National Statistics, 103 rail traction diesel or semi-diesel engines were sold in 1996. No data have been published in the remaining years of the five-year period for reasons of commercial confidentiality. No data on production are available.

UK rail passenger and freight operating companies make their own commercial decisions on the purchase and maintenance of rolling stock and locomotives. The same applies to the manufacturers of such vehicles sourcing diesel engines.

DTI is working with the Railway Industries Association on an initiative to improve supply-chain performance within the sector.

Engineering

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which organisations were consulted on Stage 1 of the Hawley Review Group; and if he will publish the responses of those who replied to the consultation on the stage one report. [127723]

Mr. Alan Johnson: This is a matter for the Engineering Council, whose review this is.

I understand that the Engineering Council sought views from nearly 700 organisations and individuals and is still receiving, considering and reviewing the many contributions it has had from various parts of the engineering community as part of its continuing work. Outcomes will be part of the Group's final report.

Director General of Fair Trading

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he intends to publish the report by the Director General of Fair Trading for the year 1999. [128758]

Mr. Byers: The 26th Annual Report of the Director General of Fair Trading has been published today. It covers the period from 1 January 1998 to 31 December 1999. Copies of the report have been laid before Parliament.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Staff Secondments

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many staff from his Department were seconded to private sector companies in (a) May 1997 to April 1998, (b) May 1998 to April 1999 and (c) May 1999 to April 2000; and if he will list in each case the companies to which staff were sent, the names and ranks of the staff involved and the duration of the secondment. [123419]

Mr. Mandelson: The information is contained in the following table.

RUC (Annual Report)

Mr. Savidge: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects to make available the annual report for 1999 of the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary. [128693]

Mr. Ingram: Copies of the Chief Constable's annual report for 1999–2000 will be placed in the Library tomorrow. It is a general report on the carrying out by the RUC of their functions during 1999, which is submitted to the Police Authority for Northern Ireland and also to me for laying before Parliament in accordance with sections 48 and 49 of the Police (Northern Ireland) Act 1998.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions he deposited papers in the Library in response to parliamentary questions tabled to his Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April. [128010]

Mr. Robin Cook: 25 papers were deposited in the Library in response to parliamentary questions tabled between 19 October and 20 April.

Diplomatic Immunity

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many serious offences were alleged to have been committed in 1999 by persons entitled to immunity by virtue of their employment by a diplomatic mission or an international organisation. [128625]

Mr. Vaz: From a community of over 17,500 persons entitled to immunity, 36 serious offences, allegedly committed by such persons, were drawn to the attention of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in 1999. "Serious offences" are defined in accordance with the 1985 White Paper on Diplomatic Immunities and Privileges; i.e. as offences that would in certain circumstances carry a penalty of 12 months or more imprisonment.

Iran

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he is proposing to travel to Iran. [128754]

Mr. Hain: The visit to Iran of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has been postponed, owing to the busy schedule and travel commitments of Dr. Kamal Kharrazi, the Foreign Minister of the Islamic Republic of Iran. Both he and Dr. Kharrazi are keen for the visit to proceed and will be consulting to find a mutually convenient date.

Staff Secondments

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Harrogate and Knaresborough (Mr. Willis) of 11 February 2000, Official Report, columns 337–38W, on secondments, if he will give the names, grades and job titles of the staff seconded into his Department from each organisation mentioned, stating in each case the name of the section they were seconded to and a summary of the work that they were involved with. [128242]

Mr. Battle: As soon as the information can be compiled I shall write to the hon. Member, and place a copy of my letter in the Libraries of the House.

Burma

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take steps to discourage UK firms from promoting tourist travel to Burma. [127853]

Mr. Battle: Since 1998 we have written to tour operator associations and to travel companies drawing attention to the views of Burmese democratic leaders that tourism to Burma is inappropriate. We cannot stop British citizens choosing Burma as a holiday destination, but we hope that any who go there are aware of the political and human rights situation. They should also be aware that they have to exchange $300 on arrival. Every one of these dollars will directly support the regime.

Entry Clearance

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a decision will be made on the application for entry clearance by Shamsad Anwar, lodged at Islamabad in November 1998, reference C4694. [128255]

Mr. Vaz: This application, by Muena Fatima and a child, Aisha Shamshad, to join Mr. Shamsad Anwar in the UK, is the subject of ongoing inquiries, including DNA testing, at our High Commission in Islamabad. I shall be writing separately to my hon. Friend to provide the background to this application.

Embassies

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the start-up costs were for each embassy established in Eastern European countries and the former states of the USSR since 1990. [127813]

Mr. Hain: It will take some time to collate the information requested. I will write to the hon. Member shortly with the information. Copies of the letter will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Sierra Leone

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what (a) technical and (b) financial assistance the Government have provided to ECOMOG in Sierra Leone. [128093]

Mr. Hain: We have provided around £5 million worth of practical support for the ECOMOG peacekeeping forces in Sierra Leone. This support included vehicles, ration packs, boots, tents, communications equipment and the funding of helicopter hours.

The ECOMOG peacekeeping force has now left Sierra Leone.

HOME DEPARTMENT

R v. Weir

Mr. Hope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking following the judgment of the Court of Appeal (Criminal Division) in R v. Weir and the Attorney-General's Reference No. 3/1999 on 26 May. [128626]

Mr. Straw: I am looking at what steps need to be taken, including possible revisions to section 64 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984.

Cyclists

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) on how many occasions in each of the last five years cyclists have been prosecuted for exceeding the speed limit; [127980]

(2) how many prosecutions there have been in each of the last five years of cyclists for cycling the wrong way down one-way streets; [127968]

(3) how many prosecutions there have been in each of the last five years of cyclists for riding on pavements; [127971]

(4) how many prosecutions there have been in each of the last five years of cyclists for cycling through traffic lights at red; [127979]

(5) how many prosecutions there have been in each of the last five years of cyclists for using footpaths designated for pedestrians; [127969]

(6) how many prosecutions there have been of cyclists for failing to carry cycle lights at night in each of the last five years. [127970]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Available information for 1994 to 1998 taken from the Home Office Court Proceedings Database is given in the table. Data for 1999 will not be available until the autumn.

The fixed penalty system is also used for several pedal cycle offences, but information specific to such offences is not recorded centrally.

Number of defendants prosecuted for offences connected with pedal cycles, England and Wales 1994–98

Offence description	1994	1995	1996	1997	1998
Neglect of traffic directions	125	155	181	92	121
Riding on footpath	219	314	423	648	1,055
Failing to obey signal	19	11	24	43	19
Lighting and reflector offences	293	332	382	412	624
Other pedal cycle offences	2	11	16	7	16

Notes:

1. The offence of 'failing to comply with traffic light signals' may be recorded under 'Neglect of traffic directions', Failing to obey signal' or 'Other pedal cycle offence'.
2. The offence of 'Cycling the wrong way down a one-way street' may be recorded under 'Neglect of traffic direction' or 'Other pedal cycle offence'.
3. The offence of 'exceeding the speed limit' may be recorded under 'Neglect of traffic directions' or 'Other pedal cycle offence'.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many compensation claims for lost passports were lodged with the Immigration and Nationality Directorate in each year since 1992. [127975]

Mrs. Roche: The number of claims for lost passports lodged in the last four financial years is set out in the table. Information for earlier years is not available.

	Number
1996–97	30
1997–98	60
1998–99	85
1999–2000	94

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost to the Immigration and Nationality Directorate of settling compensation claims for lost passports in each year since 1992. [127976]

Mrs. Roche: The cost of settling claims for lost passports in each of the last four financial years is set out in the table. Information for previous years is not available.

1996–97	3,000
1997–98	11,500
1998–99	12,000
1999–2000	20,000

Clandestine Entrants

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many notices of objection lodged by hauliers allegedly transporting clandestine entrants into the UK have been (a) upheld and (b) rejected in each month since the coming into force of the Carriers' Liability (Clandestine Entrants and Sale of Transporters) Regulations 2000. [127874]

Mrs. Roche: As at 25 June 2000, there have been 159 cases where notices of objection have been lodged against a penalty imposed in accordance with the Civil Penalty provisions of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999. Of those that have been determined, four notices of objection have been upheld and 62 rejected.

It is not possible to break these figures down on a monthly basis.

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many haulage contractors were charged under the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999, in each month since April, with bringing clandestine entrants into the UK. [127978]

Mrs. Roche: The number of haulage contractors charged under the Civil Penalty provisions of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999 in each month since April was:

Month	Number
April	72
May	84
June (to 25)	55
Total	211

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the average fine imposed on hauliers for transporting clandestine entrants into the UK since the coming into force of the Carriers' Liability (Clandestine Entrants and Sale of Transporters) Regulations 2000. [127873]

Mrs. Roche: The Carriers' Liability (Clandestine Entrants and Sales of Transporters) Regulations 2000 enables the imposition of a penalty of £2,000 for each clandestine entrant transported to the United Kingdom.

As at 25 June, 211 penalty notices, with a total value of £2,336,000 had been served in relation to 1,168 clandestine entrants. Twenty-four of the penalty notices served relate to vehicles that between them carried 367 clandestine entrants, with an average penalty of £30,000 in respect of 15 entrants for each vehicle. The remaining 187 penalties relate to vehicles that between them carried 801 clandestine entrants, with an average penalty of £8,000 in respect of four entrants for each vehicle.

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the value of fines levied on hauliers charged under the Carriers' Liability (Clandestine Entrants and Sale of Transporters) Regulations 2000 in each month since April. [127872]

Mrs. Roche: As at 25 June, the value of penalties raised on persons under the Carriers' Liability (Clandestine Entrants and Sales of Transporters) Regulations 2000 in each month since April were as follows:

Month	£
April	848,000
May	838,000
June	650,000
Total	2,336,000

Criminal Assets

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on progress made at the Council of Ministers on fixing minimum standards for tracing and confiscating assets from crime. [128258]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The European Union Heads of State and Government meeting at the special European Council at Tampere in October 1999 called for action with regard to the approximation of criminal law and procedures on money laundering, with particular reference to the tracing, freezing and confiscation of the proceeds of crime. It has been proposed that a new ad hoc working group, which has still to be set up, will carry this work forward.

Separate discussions are taking place with regard to the application of the principle of mutual recognition to asset freezing and restraint. This will involve consideration of the minimum standards which should be applied to permit recognition of orders between member states.

The incoming French Presidency of the European Union has made action against financial crime and money laundering one of its priorities and it is clear that this will involve some action in the area of the tracing and confiscation of the proceeds of crime.

Staff Secondments

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 19 January 2000, Official Report, column 471W, on secondments, if he will give the names, grades and job titles of the staff seconded into his Department from each organisation mentioned, stating in each case the name of the section they were seconded to and a summary of the work that they were involved with. [128249]

Mr. Straw: Secondments and attachments are part of the Interchange Initiative which promotes the exchange of people and good practice between the civil service and other organisations. Before an Interchange can occur all parties must be satisfied that no conflict of interest arises.

The details of the two private sector staff seconded to my Department are as follows:

The first secondee was from Barclay's Bank to the Planning, Finance and Performance Group from January 1997 to January 1999. The secondee was employed on various project management activities.

The second secondee is from PriceWaterhouseCoopers to the Immigration and Nationality Directorate for 12 months from 4 August 1999. The secondee has had responsibility for various project management and operational activities.

Police Secondments

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers are seconded on duty abroad; how many officers were seconded in each of the previous five years; and if he will make a statement. [128165]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Each police force keeps its own records and comprehensive figures are not currently held centrally. Figures are available on the number of United Kingdom police officers participating in international peace-keeping missions overseas. On 28 June 2000, the United Kingdom had 264 police officers working in Bosnia, Croatia, Kosovo and East Timor.

Departmental Bills

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Bills his Department has sponsored in each of the last 20 years; how many have been enacted; and if he will list the Bills and Acts per year. [128164]

Mr. Straw: Since the 1979–80 parliamentary session, the Home Office has sponsored 89 Bills, of which 79 have passed into law. The Acts listed are in Royal Assent order for their respective session followed by details of any unsuccessful legislation.

[2] By agreement with the Opposition Parties in both Houses, Part 1 of this Bill dealing with the setting up of the Serious Fraud Office was enacted before Dissolution: the rest of the Bill was lost.

Police Radio Frequencies

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy in relation to the future of the existing police radio frequencies; what is the estimated commercial value of expected surplus frequencies; what is his current estimated timescale for the changes to the use of radio frequencies; and if he will make a statement. [128166]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The majority of the radio frequencies currently used by the police service, in England and Wales, will be returned to the central Government pool once the Public Safety Radio Communications service (PSRCS) is fully operational and the frequencies are no longer required. This is expected to occur in 2005.

The spectrum returned will be used to assist in re-organising the civil spectrum to improve its quality by aligning it with usage in Europe. This re-alignment will take many years and we do not expect that any parts of the spectrum currently used by the Home Office will be available for sale or for further allocation until this programme has been completed.

Police Funding

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans he has to alter the formula for funding police forces in England and Wales; [126424]

(2) what plans he has to introduce a sparsity factor into the process of allocating funds to rural police forces; [126426]

(3) if it is his policy to accept the findings of the ORH study into police funding in respect of the additional costs of policing sparsely populated rural areas; [126423]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Government set considerable store by stability in the grant system to help police authorities plan ahead. In July 1998, the Government announced a three-year freeze on changes to Standard Spending Assessment funding formulae pending the wide ranging review of the revenue support grant system across local government. In view of the moratorium, my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary decided that it would not be appropriate to make substantive changes to the method of police grant distribution for 2000–01. That position remains unchanged.

The fundings of the Operational Research in Health (ORH) report on policing areas of rural sparsity were considered by a Home Office chaired Working Group, which includes representatives of the police service, police authorities and local authorities. That report was placed in the Library. Implementing the findings of the report would have meant the redistribution of around £30 million of funding almost entirely from the metropolitan forces to shire forces where call response times are longer. There was no agreement in the working group about the best way to proceed.

However, the opportunity has now arisen as a result of additional funds being made available through the budget, for the Government to recognise the special needs of rural policing. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has therefore agreed to make £15 million available for the remainder of this year to enhance the policing service in rural areas at no cost to the metropolitan forces. Funding for future years will be considered as part of the spending review 2000 process.

TREASURY

Spectrum Auction

Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what account under resource accounting rules is to be taken of the right of third generation mobile spectrum licensees to amortise the cost of their licences from the amount of their future taxable profits and of the consequential future reduction in tax revenue. [128071]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 28 June 2000]: Tax relief for the amortisation of third generation spectrum licence costs will reduce corporation tax yields over the lives of the licences. Currently, the resource accounting rules apply only to departmental resource accounts and not to corporation tax. However, subject to the passing of the Government Resources and Accounts Bill, the same accounting principles will apply in due course to the Whole of Government Accounts, which will include corporation tax revenue.

Children's Tax Credit

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the total cost of administering the Child Tax Credit in financial year 2001–02; and if he will make a statement. [128167]

Dawn Primarolo: The administration of the children's tax credit during the financial year 2001–02 will be part of the Inland Revenue's routine work and will not be separately identified in running costs.

Working Families Tax Credit

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many people in Hampstead and Highgate benefit from the (a) child care tax credit, (b) Sure Start maternity grant and (c) New Deal for Lone Parents; [127851]

(2) how many families in Hampstead and Highgate receive the Working Families tax Credit; and how many will benefit from changes allowing claims to be made immediately after the birth of a child; [127911]

Dawn Primarolo: For a provisional estimate of the number of recipients of Working Families Tax Credit (WFTC) in Hampstead and Highgate at the end of April 2000, I refer my hon. Friend to my answer given on 28 June 2000, Official Report, column 537W to my hon. Friend the Member for Crosby (Mrs. Curtis-Thomas).

It is estimated that, in a full year, up to 70,000 families could benefit from the reforms to WFTC for mothers of new children announced in this year's Budget. No estimate is available of the number of these in Hampstead and Highgate.

About 10 per cent. of awards of Working Families Tax Credit include a child care tax credit. We are unable to provide a reliable estimate of the number of awards with a child care tax credit in Hampstead and Highgate.

The Sure Start maternity grant has been claimable from 27 March 2000 for babies due on or after 11 June and is gradually replacing the social fund maternity payment. I understand from the Department of Social Security (DSS) that figures are not available by constituency.

I understand from the Department for Social Security that, since October 1998, 40 lone parents in Hampstead and Highgate have found employment as a consequence of the New Deal for Lone Parents, and 21 lone parents have started Training and Education. 174 lone parents have joined the programme.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many families in (a) Coventry, South, (b) the West Midlands region and (c) nationally (i) receive the Working Families Tax Credit and (ii) will benefit from the changes allowing families to make a claim as soon as a baby is born. [127252]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 26 June 2000]: The number of families in receipt of the Working Families Tax Credit (WFTC) at the end of April 2000 is provisionally estimated at 1,053,000, of which 107,000 were in the West Midlands region.

I refer my hon. Friend to my answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Crosby (Mrs. Curtis-Thomas) on 28 June 2000, Official Report, column 537W for the number of WFTC awards in Coventry, South.

It is estimated that, in a full year, up to 70,000 families could benefit from the reforms to WFTC for mothers of new children announced in this year's Budget. No estimates are available of the number of these in Coventry, South or the West Midlands region.

Car Scheme Rates

Mr. Rammell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will authorise a review of the Inland Revenue's fixed profit car scheme rates which were last reviewed in 1997, with special reference to petrol prices for motorists; [128038]

(2) if he will place in the Library details of the methodology used by the Inland Revenue in calculating the motor mileage rates used in the fixed profit car scheme. [128035]

Mr. Timms: Under the current system, authorised mileage rates are calculated by reference to typical tax allowable motoring costs for cars with different engine sizes. The costs include both running costs (petrol, oil, tyres, repairs, replacements and servicing) and standing costs (VED, insurance, depreciation and subscriptions).

The Budget Day 2000 press release REV6 B—"Protecting the environment: reform of company car taxation" announced a review of the authorised mileage rates system which is now under way. The announcement stated that:

> The Inland Revenue will be considering how the authorised mileage rates for drivers who use their own cars for business journeys (which underpin the Inland Revenue's fixed profit car scheme) might be improved, on a revenue neutral basis, to send better environmental signals.

The level and structure of the authorised mileage rates will be considered in the course of the review. Comments are welcome and should be sent by 30 September 2000 to:

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many written parliamentary questions tabled to his Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April have not received substantive answers, citing as the reason (a) commercial and (b) other confidentiality. [128015]

Mr. Timms: Five and eight respectively, either wholly or in part, of the 1,479 answers given.

Hydro-electric Schemes

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what criteria (a) existing and (b) proposed hydro-electric schemes will have to meet in order to be eligible for exemption from the climate change levy; [127150]

(2) if electricity generated by hydro-electric schemes constructed under the non-fossil fuel obligation arrangements will be exempt from the climate change levy; [127149]

(3) if additional renewable energy generating capacity created by the refurbishment and upgrade of existing hydro-electric schemes in Scotland will be exempt from the climate change levy; [127151]

(4) if additional renewable energy generating capacity created by the construction of new hydro-electric schemes will be exempt from the climate change levy; and if he will make a statement. [127152]

Mr. Timms: Electricity generated from hydro-electric installations producing more than 10 MW will be subject to the climate change levy under the normal rules. Electricity from hydro-electric installations producing less than 10 MW will be exempt from the climate change levy if supplied under an approved contract.

This principle applies whether the installations concerned are new, proposed, refurbished, upgraded or constructed under the non-fossil fuels obligation arrangements.

Government Audit

Mr. Russell Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made on appointing members to the steering group for the review of the audit and accountability arrangements for central Government. [128798]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I am pleased to announce that the following persons have so far agreed to serve on the Steering Group:

Sir John Bourn, KCB, Comptroller and Auditor General

Sir Brian Carsberg, Chairman, International Accounting Standards Committee

Right hon. David Davis MP, Chairman, Public Accounts Committee, House of Commons

Andrew Likierman, Director, Financial Management Reporting and Audit Directorate, HM Treasury

Iain Plaistowe, Chairman, Auditing Practices Board

David Rendel MP, Member, Public Accounts Committee, House of Commons

Lord Sainsbury of Turville, Parliamentary Under Secretary of State, Department of Trade and Industry

Right hon. Andrew Smith MP, Chief Secretary to the Treasury

Rosemary Thorne, Group Finance Director, Bradford and Bingley Building Society

Professor Sir David Tweedie, Chairman, Accounting Standards Board

Right hon. Alan Williams MP, Member, Public Accounts Committee, House of Commons.

The remaining appointments to the Steering Group will be announced shortly.

PRIME MINISTER

OSCE

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Prime Minister what changes there are in the composition of the United Kingdom Delegation to the Parliamentary Assembly of the Organisation on Security and Co-operation in Europe. [128755]

The Prime Minister: The right hon. and noble Lord Jopling, currently a substitute member is to become a full representative replacing the noble Viscount Montgomery of Alamein. The noble Earl of Northesk is to become a substitute member of the delegation.

DEFENCE

Defence Evaluation and Research Agency

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many staff employed at the DERA base at West Freugh, Wigtownshire are employed by (a) DERA, (b) the MOD, (c) SERCO and (d) other non-military companies and organisations. [127870]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Alasdair Morgan, dated 29 June 2000:

I am replying to your parliamentary question about the number of staff employed at the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA) range at West Freugh since such matters relate to the operation of the range.

A total of some 200 staff are currently employed at DERA West Freugh. This comprises 26 DERA staff, 23 MOD, 131 SERCO and 16 others.

I hope the above is helpful.

Northern Ireland

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 19 June 2000, Official Report, column 34W, on Northern Ireland, under what section of Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Government Information he based his reply. [128026]

Mr. Spellar: The information was withheld under Section a of Exemption 1—information whose disclosure would harm national security or defence.

Anglo-Irish Meeting

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 19 June 2000, Official Report, column 36W, under which section of Exemption 14 his decision to withhold information was based. [128022]

Mr. Spellar: Details of the individual referred to in my answer of 19 June 2000, Official Report, column 36W were withheld under Exemption 14(a) (information supplied in confidence by a person who was not under any legal obligation to supply it and who has not consented to its disclosure), as well as under Exemption 4(f) (information whose disclosure could identify the source of information or assistance in confidence for law enforcement or security purposes) and Exemption 12 (privacy of an individual).

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will reply substantively to the question from the hon. Member for Dudley, South (Ref. 122262). [126599]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 19 June 2000]: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 26 June 2000, Official Report, column 408W.

Battle of Britain

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what initiatives his Department is taking this year, at which (a) stations and (b) establishments, to mark the commemoration by the Royal Air Force of the sixtieth anniversary of the Battle of Britain. [127735]

Dr. Moonie: The RAF is very conscious that the year 2000 marks the 60th Anniversary year of the Battle of Britain and the RAF is participating in many events nationwide throughout the year to commemorate the Battle.

A Battle of Britain Service and Reception at Westminster Abbey on 17 September is the main official commemoration of the campaign. The Westminster Abbey service is held annually in September each year, but is enhanced on this occasion in recognition both that it is the 60th Anniversary and that it is likely to be the last major commemorative event of the Battle that many of the participants will be able to attend. Members of the Government, High Commissioners, the Air Force Board and representatives of the aviation industry attend each year and, in view of the importance of this particular anniversary, members of the Royal Family have also been invited.

A Battle of Britain Dinner at RAF Bentley Prior is being hosted on 15 September by the Air Force Board for members of the Battle of Britain Fighter Association, ground crew and plotters. It is planned that Service personnel, aviation industry representatives and others with a connection to the Battle will attend. Members of the Royal Family and Defence Ministers will also be invited.

The Battle of Britain Memorial Trust Day will be held on 9 July. The Battle of Britain Memorial Trust is arranging a ceremony at Capel le Ferne on the cliffs of Dover at the site of the Trust memorial to commemorate the Battle. The Lord Lieutenant of Kent will preside over the event, which will be fully supported by the RAF, with aircrew from the 13 extant Battle of Britain Squadrons, a flypast by the Battle of Britain Memorial Flight, Bands of the RAF Regiment and Air Training Corps cadets. Members of the RauxAF will also be supporting the event. A short memorial service will be conducted by the Chaplain in Chief (RAF).

Finally, the Battle of Britain Memorial Flight is in high demand this year and will be representing the RAF at events throughout the UK and displaying for some of our WWII allies in Europe. The Battle of Britain Memorial Flight have or will be taking part in some 41 events with a Battle of Britain 60th Anniversary theme during the period April-September.

The following table lists details of all the events the RAF is supporting which will in part commemorate the 60th Anniversary of the Battle of Britain:

Medical Personnel

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the average number of fully trained, dedicated medical personnel deployed in-theatre as a proportion of the total armed forces personnel deployed in-theatre at the time of highest United Kingdom deployment during conflicts in (a) the Falklands, (b) the Gulf, (c) Kosovo and (d) Sierra Leone; and if he will make a statement. [127472]

Mr. Spellar: I will write to the right hon. and learned Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his policy is on the optimum in-theatre deployment of fully trained, dedicated medical personnel as a proportion of total armed forces personnel; what factors he takes into account in deciding this policy; and if he will make a statement. [127471]

Dr. Moonie: The optimal quantity and configuration of medical support is calculated individually for each operational deployment to ensure that the support is tailored to the particular task in hand. Factors taken into account in reaching a decision on the level of medical support required include the type of operation; the force size and composition; military threat and risk assessments; possible casualty rates; risk of disease and other non battle injuries; local environmental factors, such as climate and water availability and quality; and the availability of medical resources provided by allies.

Staff Secondments

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Harrogate and Knaresborough (Mr. Willis) of 8 February 2000, Official Report, columns 109–10W, on secondments, if he will give the names, grades and job titles of the staff seconded into his Department from each organisation mentioned, stating in each case the name of the section they were seconded to and a summary of the work that they were involved with. [128238]

Dr. Moonie: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Sierra Leone

Ann Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the Government will respond to requests for arms and ammunition from the Government of Sierra Leone. [128694]

Mr. Hoon: The Government have made it clear that they will consider requests for assistance from the Government of Sierra Leone. Following a request for ammunition to meet urgent operational needs, therefore, Ministers have agreed that the Government will supply five million rounds of 7.62mm rifle ammunition and four thousand rounds of 81mm mortar ammunition, which are available as surplus from MOD stocks. This will be transported to Sierra Leone subject to the Government of Sierra Leone securing formal agreement from the ECOWAS Secretariat that this ammunition can be imported as an exception to their Small Arms Moratorium. In accordance with UNSCR 1171 (1998), this shipment will be notified to the UN Sanctions Committee. The Government have received confirmation from President Kabbah that the ammunition will be used only by regular Sierra Leone Army soldiers, in accordance with international humanitarian law and human rights standards, and not by child soldiers. The Government remain prepared to consider further requests for assistance from the Government of Sierra Leone.

Defence Diversification Agency

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with the Department for Trade and Industry concerning the Defence Diversification Agency. [128092]

Dr. Moonie: Officials are in regular contact with the DTI on this subject.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the annual report of the Defence Diversification Agency will be published. [128094]

Dr. Moonie: The activities of the Defence Diversification Agency since its establishment last year will be reported on in this year's Annual Report of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency, of which the Defence Diversification Agency forms a part. We expect that that report will be laid before Parliament next month.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Waste Management

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to introduce a risk-based system for the inspection of licensed waste management sites; and if he will make a statement. [128760]

Mr. Meacher: Following the publication last year of the consultation paper on "Operator Pollution Risk Appraisal (OPRA) for waste," I am issuing revised guidance to the Environment Agency to enable the introduction of a risk-based system for the inspection of sites licensed under Part II of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

We must ensure that waste is recovered or disposed of in ways which protect the environment and human health. The site inspections which the Agency carries out are a vital part of this process. The new system will further improve standards by targeting inspections on those sites where they are most needed and making more effective use of the Agency's waste inspection resources.

It will also provide site licence holders with a risk management system which enables them to identify the environmental risks associated with their site and the operations they carry out; and to assess and improve the quality of their performance in managing those operations and their environmental risks. A copy of the revised guidance, which I am issuing to the Agency under section 35(8) of the 1990 Act, is being placed in the Library of the House.

GLA Election

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what reports he has received from the Greater London returning officer on the election of the Mayor and Assembly for London; and if he will make a statement. [128464]

Mr. Hill: I have now had advice from the Greater London Returning Officer (GLRO) about the first election of the Mayor and Assembly for London. There were a number of innovations at the election designed to make voting more convenient and to speed up the counting process. These included electronic counting, early voting, opening polling stations an hour earlier than usual and sending a leaflet to every elector containing an election address from each candidate contesting the Mayoral election.

Two issues have emerged in relation to the count: the speed of the count and the number of votes classified as "rejected".

Although the count took a few hours longer than originally expected, the GLRO has stressed that Ministers can be satisfied that the first use of electronic counting in an election of this size and complexity went well. There were some technical problems with some scanning machines on the night, but a manual count would have taken many more days to complete. In all other respects the electronic counting system worked very well and fully in line with expectations.

A number of other factors also contributed to the slower than expected count. For example, there were a larger than expected number of ballot papers out-sorted by the scanning machines for manual checking, before they were entered into the system. It is also the case that as this was the first time that staff had used an electronic counting system in an election, they quite rightly took time to make sure that the new procedures were followed properly. These factors inevitably slow things up.

The other issue was the larger than expected number of electors who chose not to cast a vote in one or more of the elections. Each elector had four opportunities to vote—first choice for Mayor, second choice for Mayor, constituency assembly member and London Assembly Member—and each is recorded separately. If an elector chooses not to vote in any of the four ballots—as they have every right to do—this is recorded as a "rejected" vote even though the ballot paper was left blank. For example, if a voter selects a first choice for Mayor but not a second choice, and does not vote at all in the two Assembly elections, the system would record one valid vote and three "rejected" votes.

Over 6.5 million votes were cast by about 1.75 million electors. Around 0.5 million votes were recorded as "rejected". These were made up of multiple votes (where the voter had voted more than once in a column), papers where marks identified the voter, blanks where no vote had been cast and uncertain votes, where even after manual checking the voter's intention was still not clear.

The majority of votes classified as "rejected" simply record the fact that many electors chose not to use all the four votes at their disposal. Almost 300,000 people did not use their second preference vote for the Mayor, although they did give a first preference. About 130,000 did not cast vote for a constituency assembly member and about 70,000 did not cast a vote for a London assembly member. About 1 per cent. of ballot papers were "rejected" because they were either marked with multiple votes or had marks that identified the voter. This proportion is in line with other elections.

Over 3 per cent. of voters took advantage of early voting. Almost all of them welcomed the opportunity to vote early and said they would use it again if it is available. Just under half of those who used the facility said that they would not have voted on polling day.

About 3 per cent. of voters also took advantage of the extended polling hours on polling day and voted between 7am and 8am on polling day. In some polling stations 11 per cent. of voters voted in the first hour. Most were on their way to work and 20 per cent. said that they would not have been able to vote at another time on the day. More people preferred the polls to open an extra hour in the morning rather than later in the evening.

A leaflet containing election addresses for all 11 mayoral candidates was produced and delivered to every elector in London, as required by law.

Disability Access

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he is taking in respect of the recommendation of the Disability Rights Task Force in "From Exclusion to Inclusion" that his Department should establish a statutory group on improving access to the built environment for disabled people. [128695]

Mr. Raynsford: I accept the thinking behind the Task Force's recommendation. I have therefore asked the Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee (DPTAC) to establish a working group to advise Government on improving access to the built environment for disabled people. DPTAC has agreed to do so. This new role for the Committee will be in addition to its statutory functions in respect of the transport needs of disabled people. There will be no immediate amendment to those statutory functions.

Easy access to buildings—and facilities within buildings—are basic civil rights which are sometimes denied to people with disabilities. I will be looking to the new group to tell me how Government and industry can make improvements in this area.

Outdoor Advertisement Control

Mr. White: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how he intends to proceed in the light of the response to the "Outdoor Advertisement Control" consultation paper published in July 1999. [128759]

Ms Beverley Hughes: I am pleased by the positive reaction to the proposals in this consultation paper. The proposals received widespread support and there were also a number of helpful suggestions for improving individual proposals which are reflected in our final conclusions. I am grateful to all those who took the trouble to comment. Their views have been given careful consideration in deciding how to proceed.

I am putting in the Library of the House a list of our proposals, showing the changes made following consultation. The Department is now preparing the necessary statutory instruments and guidance to implement the changes.

Crop Contamination

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will place in the Library the information he provided to the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment concerning the GM contamination of Advanta Seeds UK's Hyola Spring Oilseed when he requested their advice. [124324]

Mr. Meacher: I have today placed in the House Library a copy of the information about the Advanta seeds issue sent to the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment by my Department in order to seek their advice on this potential risk to human health and the environment.

The original document contained, for members' information only, a brief summary of DETR's legal opinion at that time. This has been omitted in light of possible legal proceedings.

Fairground Inspectors

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what geographical area each fully-qualified and dedicated fairground inspector employed by the Health and Safety Executive is expected to cover; and how many fairs each inspector is responsible for. [127559]

Mr. Meacher: HSE inspectors work from 20 main offices of HSE and a number of outstationed offices throughout Great Britain. They are not solely concerned with fairground work. They will cover other industries such as food, drink and leisure activities. It is not possible to calculate how many fairs are covered by each inspector because there are wide regional variations of the number of fairs held.

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many dedicated and fully qualified fairground inspectors are employed by the Health and Safety Executive. [127565]

Mr. Meacher: Inspectors belonging to HSE's Consumer Services Groups are based in over 20 locations in Great Britain. They visit fairground dutyholders as well as dutyholders in other industries such as food, drink and leisure activities.

Inspectors undertaking health and safety inspections of fairgrounds are fully qualified HSE inspectors who receive specific guidance and training on fairground inspection.

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many inspections of fairgrounds were carried out by fully-qualified staff employed by the Health and Safety Executive in 1999; and how many of those inspections were (a) proactive and (b) reactive. [127566]

Mr. Meacher: Between 1 April 1999 and 31 March 2000, HSE inspectors made 2,200 contacts with fairground and amusement parks dutyholders. Of these contacts 1,503 were planned proactive contacts and 697 were specifically concerned with reactive contacts or visits.

Motorway Hard Shoulders

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what criteria his Department uses when allowing motorway hard shoulders to be used as traffic lanes. [127397]

Mr. Hill: Trunk road investment proposals are appraised against the criteria—environmental impact, safety, economy, accessibility and integration—as required by the New Approach To Appraisal.

To date, only a few short sections of hard shoulder have been converted to provide additional capacity at junctions. This technique is used when queueing traffic on the slip road extends back towards the main carriageway, compromises safety and/or disrupts throughput on the main carriageway.

Fuel Poverty

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the ways in which other EU member states tackle problems of fuel poverty. [127574]

Mr. Meacher: Work by National Energy Action and others indicate that fuel poverty is not widely recognised in other member states of the European Union, with the exception of Ireland.

Fuel poverty is caused mainly by a combination of low income and poor energy efficiency in homes. The links between temperature and winter mortality is strong and typically 30,000 more people die in winter in the UK than would be expected given the average death rate for the year. Although this excess mortality is caused by both exposure to outdoor conditions as well as cold homes, it is much higher in the UK than in other areas, such as Scandinavia, where winter outdoor conditions are more severe but homes are more energy efficient.

The Government believe it is unacceptable for households, particularly those most vulnerable to cold-related ill health—the old, disabled and children—not to be able to afford the heat they need to keep warm. The Inter-ministerial Group on fuel poverty is currently developing a fuel poverty strategy for publication in the autumn, that sets out objectives and the policies and targets to achieve them. It is likely that the strategy will cover both measures to tackle low incomes as well as improvements in energy efficiency of homes.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make energy efficiency the priority in his policy on the environmental performance of refrigeration and air-conditioning technology; and if he will make a statement. [127699]

Mr. Meacher: We are consulting on proposals to amend the energy efficiency requirements of the Building Regulations. The proposed changes would introduce energy performance requirements for air conditioning equipment and include guidance to encourage the use of energy efficient components in well-designed systems. The consultation period ends on 29 September.

We are also concerned that HFC emissions from refrigeration and air-conditioning equipment are forecast to grow strongly in the near future. This trend is unsustainable and action needs to be taken to limit the projected growth. That is why we have given a clear signal to industry and users to look closely at alternative refrigerants and to select those that are more environmentally acceptable where they do exist. Safety, technical feasibility and cost effectiveness should be taken into account before investment decisions are taken. Where HFCs are used we intend to discuss with industry and users what measures could be taken to minimise emissions.

M27

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when a decision will be made on the resurfacing of the M27 with a quieter surface; and if he will make a statement. [127646]

Mr. Hill: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Peter Nutt, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Nutt to Sandra Gidley, dated 29 June 2000:

The Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions has asked me to reply to your recent question about when a decision will be made on resurfacing the M27 with a quieter surface.

I am pleased to tell you that, within your constituency, resurfacing of both carriageways of the M27 between Junctions 2 and 4 will begin in spring 2001. The work will take approximately six months as there is a need for major reconstruction work, drainage repairs, safety fencing work and minor works to structures. I can confirm that the concrete surface will be replaced with a quieter thin surfacing which will reduce the road noise at nearby properties. In addition, Junctions 4 - 5 were resurfaced at the beginning of this year and also received a low noise surfacing treatment.

I will ensure that you are provided with more detailed information nearer the start date for the Junction 2 - 4 work.

Council Tax

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent representations he has received from mobile home owners and their organisations about the banding of properties for council tax purposes. [127648]

Ms Beverley Hughes: We have received three representations in the last three months, none of which were from organisations representing mobile home owners.

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to change (a) the number of council tax bands and (b) the ratio of payment rates between different bands of property regarding council tax liability. [127647]

Ms Beverley Hughes: As we made clear in our 1998 White Paper, "Modern Local Government: In Touch with the People", we do not propose to make any major changes to the council tax during the course of this Parliament.

CFC Gases

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps the Government are taking to ensure that discarded domestic refrigeration appliances producing CFC gases are collected in Cumbria. [127806]

Mr. Mullin: Waste collection authorities have a duty under section 45 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, to collect household waste, including items such as refrigerators if requested. They also have a duty to collect waste which is fly-tipped, under section 59 of the Act. Similarly, waste disposal authorities have a duty to provide civic amenity sites, under section 51(1)(b) at which residents may deposit, for example, discarded refrigerators and that such sites are situated:

> within the area of the authority or so as to be reasonably accessible to persons resident in its area

(section 51(2)(a)). Furthermore, local authorities have a "duty of care" (section 34(1)(b)) covering the receipt and holding of such waste, including CFCs contained within, whereby they must ensure that:

> all measures are taken as are reasonable in the circumstances to prevent the escape of the waste from their control.

EU Funding

Miss Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the wards in Morecambe and Lunesdale eligible for (a) Single Regeneration Budget funding, (b) Objective 2 European funding and (c) regional selective assistance. [127636]

Ms Beverley Hughes: The information is as follows:

(a) Single Regeneration Budget Eligibility

Local regeneration partnerships may include any of the wards in Morecambe and Lunesdale in a bid for Single Regeneration Budget funding.

(b) Objective 2 funding eligibility

New Objective 2 Area, 2000–06

Wards:

- Alexandra
- Heysham North
- Heysham Central
- Heysham South
- Overton

Transitional Areas (former Objective 5b areas)

Wards:

- Arkholme
- Halton-with-Aughton
- Kellet

(c) Regional Selective Assistance (Tier 2)—proposed eligibility

Wards:

- Alexandra
- Harbour
- Heysham North
- Heysham Central
- Heysham South
- Overton
- Poulton
- Skerton Central
- Skerton East
- Skerton West
- Torrisholme
- Victoria.

Air Services (South-West)

Mr. Bradshaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions for what reason the Air Link Strategy for the South-West has not been published; and when it will be. [127879]

Mr. Mullin: The South-West Regional Air Service Study has reported as one of six regional studies which form the first part of a two-stage process leading to the publication of a series of Regional Consultation documents. The original Regional Air Services Studies are currently being co-ordinated and audited for consistency as part of the Regional Air Services Co-ordination (RASCO) Study.

Once that work has been completed, six Regional Consultation documents, which will include a summary of the study findings for their respective region, will be published as part of a major public consultation exercise informing the preparation of the Air Transport White Paper.

Northfield Relief Road

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received in respect of the Birmingham Northfield regeneration/relief road plan. [127961]

Mr. Hill: Birmingham City Council submitted an Outline Business Case for a PFI scheme for the regeneration of Northfield, including a new relief road, in September 1999. The City Council also submitted the Relief Road as a major scheme bid in their Provisional Local Transport Plan in July 1999. We deferred consideration of the Relief Road bid because of the absence of a qualified assessment of the costs and benefits of the scheme. At a meeting with the City Council on 5 April 2000, officials made clear to the Council that the relief road would need to be justified on its transport merits, and submitted as part of the West Midlands Full Local Transport Plan in July 2000.

Road Accidents (Cyclists and Pedestrians)

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many people have received hospital treatment in each of the last five years following collisions between cyclists and pedestrians. [127963]

Mr. Hill: No information is available on the number of people who receive medical treatment following collisions between cyclists and pedestrians. However, the table shows the number of casualties in this type of accident by injury severity.

Casualties in accidents between pedal cycles and pedestrians: GB 1994–98

	Severity of casualty
	Fatal[1]		Serious[2]		Slight[3]		Total
	Pedestrian	Cyclist	Pedestrian	Cyclist	Pedestrian	Cyclist	Pedestrian	Cyclist
1994	3	0	95	14	242	68	340	82
1995	4	1	89	19	266	78	359	98
1996	2	1	88	15	230	68	320	84
1997	3	3	88	14	253	76	344	93
1998	2	0	71	14	201	53	274	67

[1] Fatal injury: Human casualties who sustained injuries which caused death less than 30 days after the accident (excluding confirmed suicides)
[2] Serious injury: An injury for which a person is detained in hospital as an 'in-patient', or any of the following injuries whether or not they are detained in hospital: fractures, concussion, internal injuries, crushing, severe cuts and lacerations, severe general shock requiring medical treatment and injuries causing death 30 or more days after the accident. An injured casualty is recorded as seriously or slightly injured by the police on the basis of information available within a short time of the accident. This generally will not reflect the results of a medical examination, but may be influenced according to whether the casualty is hospitalised or not. Hospitalisation procedures will vary regionally.
[3] Slight injury: An injury of a minor character such as a sprain, bruise or cut which are not judged to be severe, or slight shock requiring roadside attention. This definition includes injuries not requiring medical treatment.
Note:
The statistics shown in the table are for single vehicle accidents involving one or more pedestrians.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many of the written parliamentary questions tabled to his Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April have not received substantive answers, citing as the reason that the information is (a) not held centrally, (b) not held in the form requested and (c) not available. [128013]

Ms Beverley Hughes: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 23 June 2000, Official Report, columns 311–12W. Of the 36 occasions my Department cited disproportionate cost as the reason for not providing substantive answers, we did so because (a) in 14 cases the information was not held centrally, (b) in 16 cases the information was not held in the form requested and (c) in six cases the information was not available.

GM Crops

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what consultation there was with local authorities before selection of the locations for field trials of genetically modified crops; and if he will make a statement. [128045]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 28 June 2000]: Although there is no specific request for such consultation in the legislation, we did hold a series of 12 meetings focused on local authority areas around groups of sites, in order to explain the purpose of the field study experiments to answer local concerns.

Railways (Investment)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to increase the level of investment in the railways; and if he will make a statement. [128133]

Mr. Hill: Our plans for future investment in the railways are subject to the outcome of the Spending Review 2000, and will be detailed in our forthcoming Ten Year Plan for Transport. We will set out in our Ten Year Plan for Transport a programme of measures for delivering at least a 75 per cent. increase in rail freight movements and a 50 per cent. increase in rail passenger journeys.

Heathrow

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with BAA concerning the effect of a fifth terminal at Heathrow on his carbon dioxide emission reduction target. [127897]

Mr. Mullin [holding answer 28 June 2000]: None. It would not be appropriate to hold such discussions because the planning application for a fifth terminal was the subject of a Public Inquiry and the Secretary of State awaits the Inspector's report. Carbon dioxide issues were considered during the Inquiry and he will take these into account as part of the decision making process.

Global Warming

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the effects of global warming in the next 50 years on the (a) area of agricultural land that may be lost and (b) number of people displaced by loss of land in the United Kingdom. [127655]

Mr. Morley: I have been asked to reply.

The land below high tide level is already vulnerable to flooding and depends on flood and coastal defences. These low lying areas form around 5 per cent. of the land area of England, including a similar proportion of the developed urban land, and over 50 per cent. of the highest grade agricultural land.

This land could be at increased risk through climate change. We need to respond to the challenge primarily by ensuring that, where necessary and appropriate, existing defences are replaced and upgraded. Since 1989, MAFF has issued flood and coastal defence operating authorities with allowances for sea level rise for them to take into account when designing new or upgraded schemes; these allowances reflect both climate change and long term geological land movement.

However, the response to climate change cannot be automatically to surround Britain in concrete by building ever higher sea defences. Sustainability is a key criterion and we cannot commit future generations to unsustainable defence options. In assessing defence options the operating authorities need to consider alternative approaches including "managed realignment" of defences to reduce such pressure on the inter-tidal area, compensate for habitat losses and provide more sustainable long term lines of coastal defence. Decisions on such matters will need to be made by the operating authorities over the coming years.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Staff Secondments

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Harrogate and Knaresborough (Mr. Willis), of 8 February 2000, Official Report, column 132W, on secondments, if he will give the names, grades and job titles of the staff seconded into his Department from each organisation mentioned, stating in each case the name of the section they were seconded to and a summary of the work that they were involved with. [128251]

Mr. Lock: Secondments and attachments are part of the Interchange Initiative, which promotes the exchange of people and good practice between the Civil Service and other organisations. Before an Interchange can occur, all parties must be satisfied that no conflict of interest arises.

The secondment to the Law Commission was of a solicitor to work on a company law reform project; and the secondee from ICL provided an external perspective on information systems/information technology strategy work in the LCD and on the development of the Department's Year 2000 programme.

WALES

Post Offices

Mrs. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the Government's policy towards post offices and its impact on Wales. [128580]

Mr. Paul Murphy: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry yesterday announced the publication of the Performance and Innovation Unit's report commissioned by the Prime Minister, "Counter Revolution: Modernising the Post Office Network", and the Government's response to this (Vol. 352, columns 907–11). The Government fully accept the PIU's 24 recommendations and will work in partnership with the Post Office and the devolved Administrations to build a bright future for a modernised network, including more than 1,500 post offices in Wales.

My right hon. Friend outlined today how the Government will act to protect a nationwide network of post offices:

We are requiring the Post Office to maintain the rural network and to prevent any avoidable closures of post offices;

We have made the budgetary provision to back up this commitment where necessary, on the basis of powers taken in the Postal Services Bill to give subsidies;

We will provide funding to improve post offices in deprived urban areas and sustain post offices and retail facilities in deprived urban areas. The National Assembly for Wales will receive a share of new funding available in England and will be responsible for deciding whether it wishes to implement similar proposals in the urban post offices in Wales;

We will work with the Post Office and the devolved Administrations on pilot schemes to use post offices as sites for information on Government services and internet access learning points;

We want the Post Office to set up a Universal bank to help address the problems of financial exclusion. This will be the vehicle for delivering our pledge that people will still be able to get their benefits in cash at the Post Office after the switch to Automated Credit Transfer;

£480 million has already been invested in HORIZON, a project to automate the entire Post Office network by next spring.

The Government want the Post Office to work creatively to seize new lines of business suggested in the PIU report, such as the Universal bank, one-stop shops for Government information and transactions and the opportunities offered by e-commerce, so the network is not dependent on subsidy. However, Government funding will be available to support our proposals as necessary and we have identified funding in the current spending review. Precise figures will be announced in July as part of the Spending Review.

Most of these proposals are for the UK Government to take forward with the Post Office, although some will be for the Assembly to decide on. In areas which fall within the Assembly's policy remit, Wales will receive a share of any new funding and it will be for the Assembly to decide how it uses that money. I am in close contact with the First Secretary on this matter and the Assembly will no doubt wish to make its own announcement in due course.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Farmers Markets

6. Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to encourage farmers markets. [127036]

13. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to promote and encourage the development of farmers markets. [127042]

Ms Quin: My right hon. Friend the Minister attended the launch of the National Association of Farmers Markets as well as a number of individual farmers markets. He also wrote to the leaders of all local authorities drawing their attention to the new association and the benefits which farmers markets can bring. The National Association of Farmers Markets was offered a grant under the first round of the agricultural development scheme. For the future, we are considering bids under the 2nd round of the ADS and farmers markets will be potentially eligible for financial support under the provisions of the England rural development plan.

23. Mr. Plaskitt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met with the National Association of Farmers Markets to discuss the farmers market movement. [127054]

Ms Quin: My right hon. Friend the Minister met the National Association of Farmers Markets at their launch on 25 May.

26. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the number of farmers markets in the UK. [127057]

Ms Quin: The National Association of Farmers Markets has recently estimated that there are now over 200 farmers markets in regular operation across the country.

Countryside Stewardship Scheme

14. Charlotte Atkins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the Staffordshire Moorlands and Staffordshire Peak District area has benefited from the Countryside Stewardship Scheme. [127043]

Mr. Morley: In my hon. Friend's constituency the majority of agri-environment expenditure is channelled through the Environmentally Sensitive Area Scheme rather than the Countryside Stewardship Scheme. There are over 700 ESA agreements in the South West Peak covering 23,700 hectares. In Staffordshire as a whole there are 230 agreements under the Countryside Stewardship and Arable Stewardship, and a further 81 applications this year which are awaiting processing.

Livestock Farmers

15. Mr. Gray: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assistance the Government have given to Britain's livestock farmers in the last year. [127045]

Ms Quin: Since August 1999, the Government have announced two significant packages of assistance for the livestock sector delivering in total £419 million. Livestock farmers receive some £750 million in payment under the CAP, to which this £419 million is an addition.

Farm Incomes

16. Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on trends in farm incomes. [127046]

Ms Quin: In real terms Total Income From Farming doubled between 1990 and 1995 before falling back by over 60 per cent. between 1995 and 1999 to an average of £10,330 per full time farmer.

Looking further ahead, future trends in farm incomes will be shaped by:

future market developments;

the trend in the exchange rate;

the impact CAP reform has in shifting Agriculture toward a freer market;

the pace and extent of industry re-structuring.

Common Fisheries Policy

17. Mr. Quinn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what his priorities are for the 2002 review of the common fisheries policy. [127047]

Mr. Morley: The Government wish to maintain key features of the present arrangements such as national quotas based on relative stability and access restrictions within 6/12 mile limits. At the same time, we want to secure improvements to make CFP a more effective instrument for conserving fish stocks, including enhancing the regional dimension and integrating environmental considerations more fully.

Agricultural Wages Boards

18. Mr. Watts: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evaluation he has made of the effect of the Agricultural Wages Board arrangements on low-paid employees in rural areas. [127048]

Ms Quin: As part of the quinquennial review of the Agricultural Wages Board, announced in December 1999, independent research has been undertaken to evaluate the impact of the provisions in the Agricultural Wages Order.

21. Mr. Pond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evaluation he has made of the effect of the Agricultural Wages Board arrangements on low-paid employees in rural areas. [127051]

Ms Quin: While we have made no special assessment of the effect of the Agricultural Wages Board on rural rates of pay in general, we are aware that over the years some rural employers have based the pay for non-agricultural workers on the rates set by the Agricultural Wages Board.

Horticulture

19. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what meetings he has held with horiculturalists' representatives to discuss horticulture in the last month. [127049]

Ms Quin: During the past month I have met representatives of the potato and ornamental horticulture sectors and visited a wide cross section of growers in the Vale of Evesham. I have also invited leading horticulture members of the National Farmers Union to a meeting to discuss the climate change levy.

Genetic Modification

20. Dr. Gibson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will operate the precautionary principle in relation to new products involving genetic modification. [127050]

Mr. Nick Brown: The current legislation prohibits the placing on the market of a new product involving genetic modification until it has been approved through the European Union. Consents are only granted once Member States are satisfied that all appropriate measures have been taken to avoid adverse effects on human health and the environment.

Abattoirs

22. Mr. Sawford: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to maintain the continued viability of small and medium-sized abattoirs; and if he will make a statement. [127053]

Ms Quin: I am well aware of the position of small and medium sized abattoirs. Meat inspection charges are a matter for the Food Standards Agency.

Environmentally Sustainable Agriculture

24. Mr. Dobbin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to promote environmentally sustainable forms of agricultural production. [127055]

25. Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to promote environmentally sustainable forms of agricultural production. [127056]

Mr. Morley: The Government have a range of policies to promote environmentally sustainable forms of agricultural production. These include advice and encouragement, incentives to help farmers in their dual role of food producers and stewards of the countryside, regulation to protect against threats to environmental resources and research and development.

Organic Farming

27. Ms Drown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what his Department's expenditure is on research and development into organic farming methods. [127058]

Mr. Morley: The budget for MAFF's dedicated programme of research into organic farming methods is £2.1 million in this financial year.

Under-10-metre Fleet

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what changes are proposed in the licensing and quota management arrangements for the under 10 metre fleet; and if he will make a statement. [128756]

Mr. Morley: The under-10-metre fleet is an important part of the UK fishing industry and I am concerned to promote and ensure a stable future for our inshore fishermen.

Last year the Ministry and the other Fisheries Departments invited comments on measures to improve the management of the under-10-metre fleet. More than 250 replies have been received from fishermen's organisations and individual fishermen. The majority of those commenting were opposed to further constraints being placed on this part of the industry such as a prohibition on weekend fishing, regional licensing or species specific licences.

Although we have been successful in limiting the closure of fisheries, we do need to safeguard against the consequences of further increases in fishing effort. In recent years there has been a sharp increase in the construction of vessels between 9 and 10 metres. This trend prompted the Fisheries Departments to introduce monthly catch limits for North Sea nephrops last Autumn and to extend these arrangements to Area VII and West of Scotland nephrops for the year 2000.

In our view it would be prudent to adopt further measures to constrain future growth in fishing effort within the under-10-metre fleet. Consequently, from 1 January 2001 it will not be possible to aggregate licences from vessels under eight metres onto vessels between eight and 10 metres and a limit of 70 vessel capacity units (VCUs) will apply to the aggregation of licences onto vessels below eight metres. Additionally, the Licensing Review Working Group, comprising representatives from industry and Fisheries Departments, has been asked to consider whether any changes should be made in the capacity penalties applying to the transfer or aggregation of licences within the under 10 metre fleet.

The Fisheries Departments will continue to manage quota allocations for the under-10-metre fleet with the objective of providing fishing opportunities throughout the year. Steps have already been taken to underpin the main stocks of interest to under-10-metre vessels and special arrangements have been made for low impact fisheries such as handlining for mackerel. In future any surplus that arises on underpinned allocations will be utilised to acquire additional quota for this part of the fleet. Greater use will also be made of EU provisions on end year flexibility enabling quota to be borrowed from the following year and for certain stocks for any surplus to be banked. Consideration will also be given to whether suitable arrangements might be possible that would enable Producer Organisations to manage quota in respect of under-10-metre vessels within their membership.

CAP

Judy Mallaber: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to reduce the cost of the Common Agricultural Policy to (a) taxpayers and (b) consumers. [127044]

Ms Quin: One of my Department's objectives, set out in its business plan, is to reduce the cost of the CAP to consumers and taxpayers. Agenda 2000 began this process, and the Government continue to press for further reform.

Fishing Fleet

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the current fisheries agreements with non-EU countries indicating the cost of each to the Community's budget; how many vessels are involved in each case; and how many are (a) UK flagged and (b) UK owned. [127186]

Mr. Morley: The table lists current fisheries agreements between the EU and third countries and their estimated annual cost to the Community budget.

The manner in which the fishing opportunities obtained in third country waters is expressed varies from agreement to agreement. Total vessel capacity, number of licences, reference tonnages and numerical quotas are used singly or in combination to describe the fishing opportunities available to community vessels. It is not, therefore, possible to determine the number of vessels involved in every case. However, the table indicates which member states benefit from the opportunities made available under each agreement.

Country	Estimated annual cost £ eu[1]	Beneficiaries

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on planned changes in the size of the UK fishing fleet; what corresponding changes are planned for other EU fleets, indicating (a) how many vessels will be affected and (b) what proportion of that country's fleet this represents; and what measures he is taking to use these changes to reduce the number of flagged vessels. [127187]

Mr. Morley: In document 7426/00, the European Commission recently published its mid-term review of the fourth Multi-annual Guidance Programme (MAGP IV). At the Council of Fisheries Ministers on 16 June, the UK and a number of other member states expressed reservations about the Commission's recommendations for future policy on fleet restructuring. The Commission will be consulting extensively on the report's findings before making formal proposals for new legislation and the Government will be playing an active part in those discussions.

Member states continue to be bound by the obligations for fleet reductions set out in MAGP IV and in the coming weeks the Commission will be publishing its report on Member states' progress (at 31 December 1999) in meeting those objectives. In implementing MAGP IV we are obliged to consider all vessels on the UK register.

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to replace the long-distance transport of live farm animals from Britain to southern Europe by a trade in meat and carcases; and if he will make a statement. [127300]

Mr. Morley: It is not legally open to the Government to end the trade in live farm animals to other member states if the arrangements for transporting them comply with the relevant EU animal welfare rules. We do devote considerable effort to ensuring these rules are met while the animals are on our territory, as well as to urging other member states, bilaterally and through discussions in Brussels, to follow our example. We shall also press strongly for improvements to the rules in the forthcoming review. Our preference is for a carcase trade.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to propose changes to EU law to the effect that live animals are not considered goods or products; and if he will make a statement. [127298]

Mr. Morley: The Government have already obtained, at the intergovernmental Conference in Amsterdam, a Protocol to the Treaty which characterises animals as sentient beings and requires the Community and the member states, in formulating and implementing the Community's agriculture, transport, internal market and research policies, to pay full regard to the welfare requirements of animals.

Agriculture Council

Mr. Casale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what the outcome was of the Agriculture Council held in Luxembourg on 19 and 20 June; and if he will make a statement. [127555]

Mr. Nick Brown: I represented the United Kingdom at the Agriculture Council meeting in Luxembourg on 19 June 2000, accompanied by Brid Rodgers MLA, Minister for Agriculture and Rural Development in the Northern Ireland Executive.

The main topic for discussion was a proposal for EU-wide rules governing the use of Specified Risk Materials to prevent the spread of transmissible spongiform encephalopathies. There was no qualified majority for the proposal in the Council (Austria, Finland, Spain and Greece opposing, Germany abstaining) but the absence of a simple majority of member states opposing means the Commission are free to adopt it under the relevant procedures. I welcomed this important consumer safety measure which will apply appropriate controls on SRMs in all EU countries, and for which the UK has long been pressing.

The Council deferred a decision on the 2000–01 CAP price proposals until its July meeting. In order to avoid a legal vacuum when the sugar and pigmeat marketing years begin on 1 July however, the Council agreed to extend current price supports as from that date. I, Sweden and the Netherlands voted against the decision on sugar for which we consider a support price cut is required. The decision on pigmeat was agreed unanimously.

A first Council discussion of the Commission's proposal to establish income stabilisation funds in the pigmeat sector revealed a divergence of views. Many member states, including the UK, expressed fears that the proposal would exacerbate market price volatility and distort competition. Others felt provision of Community finance and greater compulsion on producers to participate in stabilisation funds was the key. The Council will return to this issue in due course.

Under Other Business I urged the Commission to review its approach to the allocation of export refunds for processed agricultural products in the context of budget and WTO constraints. I expressed particular concern at the Commission's decision to suspend the issue of refund certificates, which has caught out many companies through no fault of their own. I also requested Commissioner Fischler to ensure that cutbacks in refunds for future years avoid placing a disproportionate burden on particular sectors, notably cereals-based spirit drinks.

Also under Other Business I strongly supported the Swedish Minister's call for better enforcement by all member states of the EU rules on the welfare of animals in transit, as well as further, more rigorous legislation. I particularly welcomed the new Commission's Working Group, which Commissioner Byrne has established, at the United Kingdom's suggestion, to address these issues.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Charter of Fundamental Rights

32. Mr. Swayne: To ask the Solicitor-General what discussions he has had with the Foreign Secretary regarding the status of the proposed EU Charter of Fundamental Rights. [127063]

The Solicitor-General: The Attorney-General and I regularly meet with the Foreign Secretary and other ministerial colleagues to discuss matters of mutual interest. However, by long standing convention, adhered to by successive Governments, neither the fact that the Law Officers have been consulted on an issue, nor the substance of the advice they have been given, is disclosed outside Government and other than in exceptional circumstances. I therefore am not prepared to say whether the Foreign Secretary has consulted the Law Officers about the proposed Charter.

Crown Prosecution Service

33. Mr. Paterson: To ask the Solicitor-General if he will make a statement on the measures he has taken to improve the efficiency of the Crown Prosecution Service. [127064]

The Solicitor-General: In my answer to the hon. Member's question on 25 May 2000, Official Report, column 1107, I outlined the initiatives in place to improve efficiency in the Crown Prosecution Service. These include a major programme of IT modernisation, the development of joint/police/CPS Criminal Justice Units and Trial Units and the implementation of the provisions of the Crime and Disorder Act 1988. Good progress continues to be made on all these initiatives.

I am pleased to say that the first Criminal Justice Unit and the first Trials Unit were opened in Bristol on Monday 26 June 2000. police administrators and CPS lawyers and caseworkers are working together in the Criminal Justice Unit at New Bridewell Police Station, serving all the magistrates courts in Avon. Similar joint working is proceeding in the CPS premises, Froomsgate House, which is preparing cases for hearing at Bristol Crown Court.

These joint working arrangements will reduce duplication and delay, release additional resources for the police and for the CPS to focus on serious casework in the Crown Court.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Solicitor-General what the estimated legal costs are to the defence of the Employment Tribunal cases brought against the CPS by Mrs. Bamieh; and if he will make a statement [128119]

The Solicitor-General: The estimated legal costs incurred by the CPS are £155,630.91 The legal costs covered six separate cases brought against the CPS by Mrs. Bamieh which contained a large number of allegations. Two separate Tribunal Hearings were involved and a remedies hearing. All outstanding cases between the CPS and Mrs. Bamieh were resolved when a settlement, the terms of which are confidential to the parties, was reached on 8 February 2000. Mrs. Bamieh continues to work for the CPS.

Espionage

34. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Solicitor-General what discussions he has had on the handling of decisions on whether to prosecute in espionage cases following the Intelligence and Security Committee's report dealing with the case of Mrs. Melita Norwood. [127065]

The Solicitor-General: As the report of the Intelligence and Security Committee indicates, procedures for reviewing cases for possible prosecution have been strengthened. While criteria exist for prosecutions, the Security Service has agreed to send all material relevant to prosecutions to the Legal Secretariat to the Law Officers on a trial basis for 12 months. This will allow the Law Officers to assess when a prosecution is possible for all cases and validate these criteria for future use.

Lenient Sentences

35. Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Solicitor-General what criteria the Law Officers apply when determining whether to refer an unduly lenient sentence to the Court of Appeal. [127066]

The Solicitor-General: The Attorney-General and I have the power to refer sentences to the Court of Appeal if we consider them to be unduly lenient.

An unduly lenient sentence is not one which is merely lenient but one which falls outside the range of sentences that a judge, applying his or her mind to all the relevant circumstances of the case, could reasonably consider appropriate. The appropriate range must be determined by consideration of the principles of sentencing and other guidance laid down by the Court of Appeal.

Court Cases (Duration)

36. Dr. George Turner: To ask the Solicitor-General what progress is being made in speeding up the completion of court cases, with particular reference to cases involving persistent young offenders; and what role the Crown Prosecution Service is playing in this. [127067]

The Solicitor-General: The Crown Prosecution Service is fully committed to playing its part in delivering the Government's pledge to reduce delays in the youth justice system, particularly with regard to persistent young offenders.

The figures (announced today) for the average time from arrest to sentence for persistent young offenders in England and Wales in the first quarter of this year showed a fall from 108 days in 1999 to 96 in 2000. This compares with 125 days in 1998 and 141 days in 1997. This downward trend in the figures has been a continuing feature since the Government's Pledge.

At a national level, the Crown Prosecution Service has been, and continues to work closely with other Criminal Justice System partners; the Narey reforms and the new local good practice already introduced into the Youth Court will help to make further progress.

Vandalism

Mr. Baker: To ask the Solicitor-General if he will make a statement on the criteria applied by the Crown Prosecution Service in decisions on whether to prosecute for alleged crimes of vandalism. [127068]

The Solicitor-General: As with any other offence, the Crown Prosecution Service is guided by the Code for Crown Prosecutors when deciding on whether a prosecution should be brought in relation to offences involving vandalism.

If the evidential test in the Code for Crown Prosecutors is satisfied on the facts of a particular case, consideration of the public interest factors set out in the Code will follow in the usual way.

If these tests are satisfied then offences resulting from vandalism are prosecuted primarily under the Criminal Damage Act 1971.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Millennium Dome

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his answer of 6 June, Official Report, column 217W, on the Millennium Dome, what factors underlay the length of time taken by his Department to establish that it was impossible to provide any meaningful statistical breakdown of visitors by region. [125528]

Janet Anderson: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) examined various ways of distilling the information requested in a format that would be meaningful. NMEC discovered, however, that given the wide range of ways in which visitors to the Dome are able to purchase admission tickets, it was not possible to provide any meaningful statistical breakdown of visitors by region.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what software systems are being used in selling or booking tickets to the Millennium Dome; [125530]

(2) what proportion of ticket sales to the Millennium Dome has been purchased at (a) central sales points, (b) the Millennium Dome call centre and (c) other locations. [125531]

Janet Anderson: The following software systems are used to sell Dome admissions:

Door sales—Enta;

Dome ticket line and Dome trade line—Enta;

National Lottery retailers—G-Tech (Camelot system with software changes to enable sale of Dome admission);

National Express—NE reservations system via interface to Enta;

Train Operating Companies—Tribute, Facets, Apris;

Overflow Call Centres—BOCS, WTS, classic TicketMaster;

City Cruises—Enta, Haven;

Web sales—bespoke web sales engine developed by Compaq.

In addition each of 100 or so key accounts use their own reservations systems to sell Dome admissions which are confirmed and billed using Enta via the Dome trade line. Sales reports are received electronically from all of the above systems and are consolidated into a bespoke channels database from which consolidated sales reports are generated.

Ticket sales through central sales points to 19 June:

Door sales—424,048 (15 per cent.);

Dome ticket line, Dome trade line 1,552,884 (53 per cent.);

Other locations (travel trade, Camelot etc.)—966,110 (32 per cent.).

Stonehenge

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement about visitor activity at Stonehenge on 20 and 21 June. [127709]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Approximately 10,000 people peacefully celebrated the summer solstice at Stonehenge on 20 June this year. English Heritage, in close a positive liaison with Druid and pagan groups and the Wiltshire Constabulary, successfully implemented a policy of managed open access. The site was stewarded by over 70 English Heritage personnel, ably assisted by volunteer stewards from Druid and pagan groups, who were encouraged to self-steward. I am grateful to the police for their skilful and imaginative support, and I am pleased to report that there were no arrests or significant incidents. There was no camping at the site and the visitors willingly left by the agreed time of 07.30 the next morning, most taking their litter with them. Stonehenge reopened to the public at 09.00 on Wednesday 21 June.

Conference Facilities (London)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the desirability of additional conference facilities in central London. [127712]

Janet Anderson: The Government appreciate the value to London which would be associated with the development of a new international convention centre in the capital, particularly in terms of the additional business tourism which it would attract. In particular, Ministers have welcomed the work done by London's business organisations to explore the feasibility of the proposal and have taken an active interest in the campaign to find commercial developers.

Royal Palaces

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport which royal palaces and other buildings occupied by members of the royal family are owned by the State. [127711]

Mr. Alan Howarth: None. The Occupied Royal Palaces are owned by The Sovereign on behalf of the nation. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport is statutorily responsible for the maintenance of the English Palaces under the Crown Lands Act 1851. Property services for these palaces are funded by grant in aid to the Royal Household from the Department for Culture, Media and Sport.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Interactive Voice Response Systems

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many of his Department's telephone lines used by the general public are responded to by interactive voice response systems. [127118]

Mr. Foulkes: The Department for International Development has no interactive voice response systems that deal with telephone inquiries from the general public operational either within the Department or in use in any agencies thereof.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many of the written parliamentary questions tabled to her Department between 19 October 1999 and 20 April have not received substantive answers, excluding those not answered (a) citing disproportionate cost, (b) stating that the information is not available, not held centrally, or not held in the form requested and (c) citing commercial or other confidentiality. [128019]

Mr. Foulkes: No parliamentary questions tabled to my Department, between 19 October 1999 and 20 April 2000, remain outstanding.

China Western Poverty Reduction Project

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the report of the Independent Inspection Panel commissioned by the World Bank on the China Western Poverty Reduction Project. [127578]

Mr. Foulkes: Britain supported this project in the Bank Board meeting in June 1999 because it would bring significant benefits to 1.7 million of the poorest people in China. We also supported the Board's conclusion that no funds would be disbursed on the Qinghai component of the project until an independent Inspection Panel had conducted an investigation, and pending further environmental and social assessments.

The report by the Independent Inspection Panel, and the Bank Management's response to it, will be discussed at a World Bank Board meeting in early July 2000. We will be looking very carefully at the conclusions of the Inspection Panel Report, and the Bank Management's response to it, in advance of the Bank Board meeting.

SCOTLAND

Correspondence

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will reply to the letter of 17 May from the Reverend David Pitkeathly of the Parish Church of St. Andrew, Peterhead. [128029]

Mr. Wilson: I replied to the Reverend David Pitkeathly's letter of 17 May on Friday 23 June.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Appointments Commission

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Council if she will ensure that the proposed advertisements from the Appointments Commission soliciting applications for membership of the House of Lords are (a) placed in the Big Issue, (b) shown on TV and in cinemas and (c) broadcast on radio and the Commission's website. [128335]

Mrs. Beckett: This is a matter for the Commission.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Council when she last met the Chair and the other members of the Appointments Commission. [128311]

Mrs. Beckett: I have never met them in their present capacity, nor would I expect to do so. I understand that my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House of Lords met the Chairman, Lord Stevenson, on 29 June as the last in his series of meetings with the party leaders in the other place.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Council when the Appointments Commission will launch its website. [128336]

Mrs. Beckett: That is a matter for the Commission. However, I understand they expect to launch it later in the summer.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 352

SESSION 1999–2000

19th June—29th June 2000

Printed indexes to Hansard

The volume index is one of three printed indexes to Commons Hansard produced from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Indexing Service (POLIS). It contains references to material in the bound volumes of Hansard. The other indexes produced are:

- The fortnightly index to Hansard. This covers the same date range as the volume index but references are to the column numbering in the daily parts and weekly edition of Hansard.
- The sessional index to Hansard. This contains references to material in the bound volumes for a whole session.

Indexes on the Parliamentary website

Fortnightly, volume and sessional indexes covering material from the beginning of the 1999/2000 session will also appear on the Parliamentary website at http://www.parliament.uk with links to the full text of Hansard.

SCOPE

The indexes include entries covering:

- The content of all material recorded in Hansard, including debates, procedural motions and questions.
- The names of all Members contributing to the Parliamentary business recorded in Hansard.
- The names of some types of Parliamentary business whenever they occur in Hansard. These are 'Ministerial statements', 'Business statements', 'Opposition days' and 'Estimates days'.

ARRANGEMENT

- All headings are in one word-by-word alphabetical sequence, with Members' contribution entries distinguished from other entries by italics.
- Where a Member contributes to Parliamentary business and is the subject of Parliamentary business there are separate contribution and subject entries, the subject entry coming first.
- Entries beginning 'Mac' and 'Mc' are sorted in one sequence as 'Mac'.
- 'St', when abbreviated for Saint, is filed as 'Saint'.
- Numbers are filed as if spelt out, e.g. '10 Downing Street' as if 'Ten Downing Street'.

HEADINGS

Choice of headings

- Specificity—Entries summarise the overall content of a debate or question as specifically as the various POLIS thesauruses allow. For example, Education, Higher education, Universities or the name of a particular university is used depending on the breadth of the item.
- Name headings—Specific entries are included for the names of people, places, institutions, organisations, committees, programmes, initiatives, publications and legislation when these constitute the overall subject of an item.
- Organisations and subjects—Organisation entries are preferred for material about the general performance, administration and staffing of an organisation (for example, United Kingdom Passports Agency, Standards). Subject entries are preferred for what organisations do as part of their duties (for example, Passports, Fees and charges).

Geographical coverage

- Subject headings—Subject headings are assumed to refer to the whole of England, Great Britain or the United Kingdom unless otherwise stated.
- Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales—Material relating to the whole of Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales is indexed under these headings.
- Places within the UK—Material about specific towns, areas and institutions is entered under the name of the specific town, area or institution.
- Foreign countries—Most material relating to foreign countries is collected under the name of that country. Some additional material may be found under the names of—groups of countries, areas within countries, geographical features, place names associated with particular issues, politicians and heads of state, international bodies, and institutions and companies operating in those countries.
- EC/EU material—General material about the European Communities and European institutions as bodies is entered under 'European Communities' and 'EC institutions'. Organisational material about specific communities and institutions is entered under the name of the body, for example 'European Coal and Steel Community' or 'European Parliament'. Material about what the Communities and institutions are doing or propose to do is entered under various subject headings beginning 'EC' such as 'EC environmental policy'.

Parliamentary material and business

- Material about Parliament—This is indexed under 'Parliament', the names of the two Houses, the 'Palace of Westminster' and parts of the Parliamentary estate (such as 'Portcullis House').
- Committees—Material about committees is indexed under 'Committees', types of committee (such as 'Select committees') and the names of individual committees (such as 'Home Affairs Select Committee').
- Parliamentary proceedings/procedures—Material discussing these is indexed under the specific type of proceeding (such as 'Parliamentary questions' or 'Oral questions'), procedure (such as 'Calling of Members') or issue (such as 'Unparliamentary expressions').
- Legislation—Entries for Parliamentary proceedings on bills and statutory instruments are entered under their titles. Where the lead word of the bill or statutory instrument does not provide a full or clear indication of the subject there are additional subject entries when the bill or instrument is debated. For example, debates on the 'Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill' have entries under 'Pensions' and 'Social security benefits' as well as under the title of the Bill.
- Members' names—These are given in the form by which the Member prefers to be known.
- Speaker and Chair—Contributions by the Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker and deputies'. Contributions from the chair during Committees of the Whole House are brought together under 'Chairman of Committee of the Whole House'. Significant rulings and statements (as opposed to routine comments) are indicated by the sub-heading 'Rulings and statements' in both cases.

Guidance on headings

- Cross references—'See' references indicate all the material has been entered under another heading. 'See also' references indicate that additional information may be found under another heading.
- Concept thesaurus—A copy of the subject thesaurus to POLIS, listing the concept entries used in the index, is available on the Parliamentary website. A hard copy is available from the Head of the POLIS Unit, House of Commons Library, 1 Derby Gate, London, SW1A 2DG (020 7219 6456).

REFERENCES

- References in the indexes are to columns rather than pages.
- References to debates, but not questions, are accompanied by the date of the item.
- There are separate sequences in Hansard for the material taken on the floor of the House, Westminster Hall sittings and written questions:
  - References consisting of a number by itself indicate material taken on the floor of the House.
  - References ending in 'wh' indicate Westminster Hall sittings.
  - References ending in 'w' indicate written questions.
- References under all headings except the names of Members contributing to Parliamentary business and the titles of legislation are listed in one numerical sequence irrespective of whether the material is taken on the floor of the House, is discussed at a Westminster Hall sitting or is a written question.
- References under the names of Members contributing to Parliamentary business and the titles of legislation are listed in numerical sequence under the following headings:
  - Debates etc. (which includes interventions and points of order as well as significant contributions to debates);
  - Sittings in Westminster Hall (covering all debates held as part of the Westminster Hall sittings); and
  - Questions (which includes written, oral and private notice questions).

ABBREVIATIONS

The following abbreviations are used in connection with the progress of bills:

- 1R=First reading
- 2R=Second reading
- Com=Committee stage
- Rep=Report stage
- 3R=Third reading
- res=resolution
- amendt(s)=amendment(s)
- *=matter taken formally without debate or division.
